As the afternoon advanced, the road became rougher; and our guide, whose condition had not improved, thinking to save time, led us over an unused and precipitous road, where only a drunken man would have thought of going. Here one of our party fell right over the horse's head, but fortunately was not much hurt. The horses were accustomed to the road, and very sure-footed, and when any such accident occurred (this was not the first nor the last) stood still.

At last we reached the made road. This was a narrow ledge cut along the side of the mountain, winding round projecting spurs, or creeping beneath overhanging rocks. Late in the afternoon we rode through a tunnel 184 metres long.

The scenery here I cannot describe—the awful heights, the darksome depths, the wrinkled strata so distinctly marked, the beauty and variety of tree and shrub, of flower and fern, exceed all I have ever seen, even in our own bonnie Scotland or elsewhere. The river—larger now—fed by many tributary streams, roared and tumbled beneath us. We moved along very diligently, fearing the approach of night, each occupied with his own thoughts, some of us with our own fears.

A heavy mist came down on us, which soon turned into rain. It grew heavier and heavier, and presently we were

IN THE BLACKEST DARKNESS.

In this dilemma a fellow-passenger fell from his mule. He shouted long and strongly for help, but the guide with several others had gone on ahead, and there was no answer. We managed to ride past him and came upon the others, who had decided to wait for us. The guide went back to help the man in distress, and we four (Dr. and Miss Wood, Mr. Milne and I) stood still, not daring to advance one step without him. "Let us sing a hymn," suggested Dr. Wood, "while we wait; I'll tell the line":

God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform.

We sang the hymn through. Our guide returned, sober now, and we moved on, stronger of heart for our song, I am sure. We reached our destination without further accident at eight o'clock. No shelter was ever more grateful or party of travellers more thankful than we. One of our party was found to be amissing; someone was sent back with a light, and he arrived safely before we had finished dinner. Fearing to advance in such darkness, he had made up his mind to wait for the morning in the shelter of a rock.

Huacapistance, our resting-place, is merely a hotel or post-house in the mountains. It is in the bottom of a deep ravine, the mountains rising precipitously on every side, covered with vegetation right to the top, and the Chanchamayo river rushing close behind the building.

Next morning was perfect—the sky a lovely blue, and the sun shining on the surrounding peaks. The road is in good condition for a long way, and the scenery gorgeous. Often we stood still to look, grudging that each succeeding panorama must in a measure obliterate the other. We went through several tunnels, all short enough to see light at the further end, and crossed the river several times on hanging bridges. Frequently we met large troops of cargo mules, laden mostly with

RUM AND COFFEE.

This constituted our greatest danger. Generally the drivers would draw them up in line close against the rock, and stand still until we had passed. The drivers were Indians, and several accompanied each troop. They were invariably polite and obliging, notwithstanding the fact that our guide often spoke to them with harshness and severity.

About noon we reached a small place called San Ramon, where we rested and had breakfast. Then we proceeded through the now more open valley to La Merced.

This is the chief town in the valley, and has some 600 or 800 inhabitants. Its situation and appearance in the distance are singularly beautiful, standing in the open valley with the mountains on either side and beyond it. Closer examination gives a very different impression, and it took all our courage to retire to rest, even with candles burning all night.

About a day's journey beyond this is the English Corporation at Perené, and as Dr. Wood knew some of the landholders we pushed on for there through banana thickets, large fields of sugar-cane or coffee, and past distilleries. Late in the afternoon we reached the settlement. The manager was absent, but we were most kindly entertained by the accountant, who provided us with dinner and beds. Dr. Wood proposed to return on Sunday, and hold a service. Mr. Milne promised to advertise it as widely as the very short time made possible. Sunday is pay-day, and many of them will be here anyway.

The Corporation is in a most romantic spot. The land is on the Perené river. The Perené is formed by the junction of the Chanchamayo and Pancartambo rivers. This again uniting with the Ené forms the Tambo, which falls into the Negali—one of the large tributaries of the Amazon. This will doubtless become a very important

COFFEE-PRODUCING REGION.

The coffee is said to be of very fine quality.

A few hours' ride next morning brought us to the hacienda or estate of Mr. W. Just, as we were nearing it, my husband called my attention to some wild Indians who were crossing the river on rafts, and when we reached Mr. W's house eighteen of them were already there. They had come a long journey to bring a sick man who wished to return to his own family in the Chanchamayo valley. This man—an Italian—had learnt their language, and had been acting as interpreter to some Franciscan friars who have established a mission among them. They belong to the Chunca tribe—are not ferocious at all, or fierce-looking. They wear one garment; it has a hole for the head, hangs down almost to the ground when loose, but is generally secured and lifted up by a string round the waist. The hair is long, and cut across the forehead; round the head they wear a narrow band of fibre by which are secured three long straight painted feathers at the back. Some of them had a hole in the nose, with a short stick projecting a little beyond the nostrils. Some also had a hole in the under lip. Some paint over the nose and cheeks, with elaborate necklaces of coloured seeds, or monkeys' teeth, with wings of parrots or other gay plumage suspended from them, completing their costume. One of them could speak a little Spanish, and formerly had done some work for Mr. W. They hung round until the sick man was rested and had some refreshment, and each had had a glass of rum.

The hacienda of Mr. D., which we wished to reach before night, was still a number of miles further on. This proved to be the worst road we had traversed. At last we reached our destination, and found the goal worthy of all the labour. Mr. D. has chosen a delightful spot, which seemed to us the top of all creation. Before dark we were able to walk round part of the estate, and see the nurseries where the tender coffee plants were being reared—fields where they were planted out, one or two or three years old, as well as the wild monte, where a number of these same Chunca Indians were working, women as well as men felling trees. The view from here was extensive and grand in the extreme. We seemed to be looking down on

There is only one estate on the corporation-land beyond Mr. D's. His family are the first white ladies that have gone over that road.

Next morning we retraced our steps, resting at Mr. W.'s, and reached the Perené settlement, in time for the service. The meeting was held in the carpenter's shop. This is probably the first English service held east of the Cordillera in Peru, although there is said to be some fifty of our countrymen settled there. There were twenty-seven present, besides some children, and a few Cholo Indians.

Dr. Wood preached from Rom. viii. 5, "They that are after the flesh," etc., repeating the line of the hymn for singing, as we had no hymn books. The occasion seemed to us a solemn one, as indeed it always is when life and death are squarely presented for man's acceptance or rejection. The Indians who passed or hung round the door touched their hats, while some (two or three only) of England's sons could scarce conceal their contempt for the occasion. Yet they were our own countrymen. How glad we were to meet with them, and how kindly they entertained us, but, alas, many of them seemed to have left all thought of God, his Word, and his day, on the other side of the sea. Could not some men of strong religious principles put their money into this concern, and seek, by God's grace, to help in evangelising this estate? The climate is delightful, and Perené has every prospect of becoming a very important coffee-producing region.

The following day we resumed our homeward journey; Miss Wood and I coming alone from Droya. Dr. Wood and Mr. Milne visited some other important towns. Their reception and experiences I will write about in another letter.

MISSIONARIES IN DANGER.

Dear Sir,—You may have by this time received information of the fact that two of the Harley students who were in Lima working for the Lord, left that centre and went a journey of 1100 miles to the heart of Peru, to Cuzco, the ancient capital of the Inca nation. I am one, and my friend Mr. J. L. Jarrett the other. I write now, as we are in the midst of a revolution of thought and feeling against us, strong and fearful, that puts us in great peril.

We left Lima on June 19, and arrived in Cuzco on July 4. It is through the generosity of Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, that we were enabled to come here for work among the Indians, with a centre in Cuzco. We find on arriving that it is one of the darkest places in the world, both intellectually and morally. From Puno, on Lake Titicaca, to Cuzco (250 miles) the way lies through a dense population of Indians, who speak only the old language of the Incas, called Quechua. Although the Spaniards have been here over 300 years, not 5 per cent. of these Indians are able to speak Spanish, and not 5 per cent. of them can even read in their own language. It would not be much use to them if they could, for about the only book extant in Quechua is a Roman Catholic catechism, the sole thing that these priests have deigned to give them in 300 years.

* The first part of this description of missionary travel in Peru appeared in our issue of September 26.

When, however, two young Englishmen come here to learn the language of the Indians and give them the light of the Bible and Gospel, the whole body of priests howl and cry against them as though the devil himself had intruded into the fold. As yet we have scarcely done anything, and yet the whole of the city is moved at our entrance. Daily the commotion is getting worse, so that at any time our house may be stormed and ourselves killed.

The priests and friars are at the bottom of it all. I firmly believe from my observations that the common people would do nothing but love us; but, stirred and incensed by the priests, they may be capable of anything. In the streets the people look at us with darkened eyebrows, muttering in sotto voce, "The heretics, the heretics." One morning we received news that "the Indians were soon going to mob the house and kill the heretics." At another time they were coming to throw turpentine over the house, in order to set fire to it, and so get rid of us. The priests have set up special missions in the churches here, and call us all the fine names in the Spanish tongue they can find—false prophets, wolves in sheep's clothing, etc., etc. Very comfortable all this, but it has a serious outlook for us.

Yesterday the Prefect of the city sent for us, and advised us to leave the city at once, as at any time the people might rise up and kill us. We told him that we could not and would not go out, unless driven by main force, and that as we were determined to do nothing against the Constitution, he had to protect us just as much as other foreigners. To-day there has been a great meeting of bishop, priests, and friars, at the house of the Prefect, bidding him to drive us out, a thing which he cannot do. Then they sent a cablegram to the Supreme Government asking for authority to throw us out of the city. Thus we are in suspense. To-night at six o'clock a guard of soldiers arrived in front of our house, sent by the chief of police, a somewhat liberal man, to protect the house through the night, as the noise and threats of the people are terrible.

I want the friends in England to know the critical state we are in, that they may pray mightily for us. We do not want to leave this city, for if we do, the triumph on the part of the priests will be such that the Gospel work will be retarded and thwarted for years. We must win the battle here, and if so, it will be much easier in the smaller towns. God grant us grace and wisdom to do what is right in this trying time. This is the first trial of the Gospel in this unmolested heart of Romanism of Peru, and by the grace of God it must not fail.—Yours faithfully in Christ,

Cuzco, Peru, August 16. Fred J. Peters.

Dear Sir,—Since writing the last note, the following telegram has been received from Messrs. Peters and Jarrett: "Expelled from Cuzco; leaving now." Immediately after receiving the telegram I went, and through some influence, got an interview with the Government. I got them to telegraph to the Prefect to find Messrs. Peters and Jarrett, and direct them to Puno, but up to the present no reply has been received. A young Peruvian Christian who was going to assist them had just arrived, and we expect that he also has been expelled.

Let not this crisis discourage our friends. Cuzco and this long-neglected Inca race have yet to hear the Gospel, and will yet rejoice in its liberty. Let us renew our strength and draw fresh courage from God, knowing that the pillar of God is not moving towards Peru, but in it and through it, and all the persecution of Rome will never uproot the living, penetrating, and incorruptible Word of God.—Yours, for the Gospel in Peru,

A. Robert Stark.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

AUTUMN ASSEMBLY AT BRIGHTON.

Following closely on the great Missionary Centenary celebrations in London, these gatherings seem to have caught much of the fervid spirit that characterised the Founders' Week. Many of the delegates went straight from London to Brighton. This partly accounts for the extraordinary numbers who attended the Autumnals this year; but the excellent programme provided, and the attractions of the south coast itself, had something to do with this result. The alliance between great religious conventions with holiday ideas is now an established thing, for which Keswick is partly responsible. This custom has its dangers, but it is better than the old-fashioned notion that religion is a thing to be left behind on a holiday. The Chairman of the Union, Rev. Urijah Rees Thomas, of Bristol, satirised the tendency to this by a telling story of a little child (he is always full of child stories, and is a prime favourite with the little ones in his own church), in which she said, as she started for her summer holiday to the seaside, "Good-bye, Jesus!" There is surely no reason why we should say good-bye to any high and holy influence when the words recreation or rest are whispered; nor why spiritual fervour should be in inverse proportion to the amount of fresh air one breathes between whiles. It is quite certain that the Brighton meetings suffered neither in attendance nor enthusiasm from the sunny skies and pleasant surroundings; for never did Congregational delegates throng all their meetings more consistently, or display a more responsive spirit to the movements of Divine influence. From the early morning prayer meetings to the last benediction at night, there was the same quick and sympathetic attitude, and almost all the gatherings were thronged.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE

on Wednesday morning was a memorable one. Rev. Thos. Stephens, of Wellingborough, read a delightful paper on "The Minister at the Cross," in which many helpful and inspiring words were spoken; and Rev. Arnold Thomas, of Bristol, followed with a searching address on "Some Wholesome Fears." The great fear, he told us, was lest the salt of Christian life should lose its savour, and the terrible penalty which that implied be visited on us. It was easy for us to lose the savour of public worship till it became a poor and tasteless thing; easy to lose the savour of prayer, of personal consecration, of holy service. We must live in the Spirit; we must be close friends with God; we must depend on the cross, on the words of Christ, on his presence in us and with us, that we may retain the freshness and zest of our Christian experience. Later in the same meeting Dr. Guinness Rogers spoke tender and earnest words in the same direction. He told a good story of the late Prof. Jowett. He was asked one day by a young lady who greatly admired him, "Master, what do you think about God?" The great but simple-hearted man replied, after an impressive pause, "My dear young lady, it matters very little to anyone what I think about God, but it matters very much what He thinks about me." In the Gospel we learn what God thinks about us, and therein is the central motive of the higher life.

CATHOLICITY.

The Chairman's address on this subject was thoroughly acceptable to the Assembly; and is the only kind of reunion concordat that has any chance of acceptance among sensible men. We are not likely as denominations to merge our ecclesiastical differences and come to an agreement of opinion theologically. But we may come to a healthy community of feeling and attitude as Christians believing in and serving the same Lord. That is brotherly love, and that is, catholicity. A practical illustration of this was given on Wednesday night at the Free Church Demonstration in the Dome, which was filled with 3000 people, when addresses were given by representatives of three other churches—the Baptist, Wesleyan, and Presbyterian. Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Leicester, spoke wise and witty words for the Baptists. In discussing Free Church principles, he created a hearty laugh by saying that he did not care to be called a Dissenter, and agreed with the old lady who when charged with being one rejoined, "None of your Dissenters for me! I am a Baptist!" Rev. F. W. Macdonald, Secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, threw out a valuable hint that it was time all the denominations turned their attention to the reforming of their domestic life, and the development of their inward resources; and that if this were done for ten years without a word said about reunion, the result would be that we should scarcely know each other! This was a most inspiriting gathering, and should greatly strengthen the brotherly relations of the various churches in Brighton.

There are many other impressions one would like to record, but I must be satisfied with saying that since the Southport meetings four years ago, we have had no "autumnals" so full of all the elements that go to inspire ministers and delegates in their work. The happiest temper prevailed, in spite of serious divisions of opinion, especially on the question of sustentation, which, though disposed of for the time, is sure to rise again; and the splendid audiences that thronged the meetings, the remarkable hospitality that was shown to us both by the public authorities and by individual Christians of all denominations, the stirring and eloquent speeches, the renewal of many old friendships, and the felt presence of God at work in our midst, combine to make a happy memory, which will be treasured up and gratefully indulged in during many a day of hard work and night of weariness through the coming winter months. J. G. E.

FEATHERED ORNAMENTS.

Dear Sir,—As the time is again on us when your lady readers will be selecting their autumn and winter headgear, will you allow me to ask them to have some consideration for the feathered creation when they make their purchases? In spite of all that has been said and written by the Society for the Protection of Birds and kindred societies, wings and aigrettes have been largely worn during the summer, and threaten to be so still. When one thinks of the agony inflicted on the parent birds by the plume-hunters, who in their haste often tear off the wings and fling away the mutilated bodies to rot in heaps, while the fledglings are left to starve slowly in the nests, one wonders how ornaments procured at such a cost can give pleasure to the wearers. Especially is it painful to see ladies who are leaders in religious work decked out in this way, and yet such a sight is not uncommon.

Would it be too much to ask your readers, when purchasing a bonnet or hat, to ask themselves this question?—What amount of suffering, or how many lives of God's creatures does this one article represent? If this suggestion were acted upon, the readers of The Christian alone would make a considerable reduction in this nineteenth-century abomination.

If any information or cards of membership to the S.P.B. are desired, either, or both, can be obtained from Mr. E. Phillips, Vaughan House, Croydon.—Yours faithfully, L. L. A.

CONNEMARA ORPHANS' NURSERY.—The forty-fifth annual report tells of devoted work in the interest of the young. The income last year amounted to £1059, which just exceeded the expenditure. Since the account was balanced, however, the sum of £300 has been borrowed to carry on the institution. Miss Butcher, the matron at Glenowen, writes:—"More outfits have also been required for the boys and girls, also emigration passages for the latter. If our kind friends will help as they did last year, we shall again have enough to supply the needs of the children." Address: Glenowen, Clifden, co. Galway.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 13.

In a Cleft of the Rock.—Ex. xxxiii. 22.

That rock was Christ. In the Divine thought the position of Moses, first on the rock, and afterwards in its cleft, was a moving emblem of the position in which alone we can dare to look out on the sublime progress of God's glory.

God is always passing by.—In the great movements of history which evolve his plans, and are leading to Christ's advent; in the passage of the ages, which are his swift chariots; in storm and catastrophe, which break up old forces and forms of evil; in the goodness of his daily mercy; in the revelation of his character, which is perpetually in progress for loving and obedient souls—we are always living in the very midst of God's presence and power, though oftentimes our eyes are holden.

In our condition of weakness and sinfulness we need a position of stability and shelter from which to look on God.—No man can see that face of awful holiness and love and live. Sir John Herschel tells that when, sweeping the heavens with his telescope the brilliant Sirius suddenly burst on his view he nearly fainted. Who then could behold God! We change so, we are so weak, we are so sinful. But in Jesus, we are stable, established in Him, accepted in the Beloved; and in Him we are covered. The full blaze of the Divine glory is tempered to our gaze; it comes to us through the medium of the pierced hand. We stand on the rock, we are hidden under the covering hand.

Our rock was cleft. How scarred are the great Alps! Their sides have been split by the action of tempest, avalanche, earthquake, frost, and glacier. Hence their clefts. But who shall enumerate all that has been borne by our dear Lord for us! What storms have pelted on Him that we might have a safe hiding. On Calvary, a niche was hollowed in which a world of sinners may take shelter!

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 14.

"Moses wist not."—Ex. xxxiv. 29.

Unconsciousness of goodness is always a main element in the highest forms of goodness: in the same way that unconsciousness is characteristic of the worst forms of depravity; for instance, we are told that Samson wist not that the Lord had departed from him.

Directly people become conscious of their superiority to others and boast of it, it is certain that they have never really seen the beauty of God's holiness, and have no clear knowledge of the condition of their own hearts. They see that they have been cleansed from their old sins, but they do not perceive that the spirit of selfishness has retreated into the springs of motive and intention.

We are all tempted to this terrible self-consciousness. We are proud of being humble, complacent for being lowly, self-congratulatory because we take back-seats. In all this we betray the vanity of our pretensions. This sort of goodness is a thin veneer of mahogany on very common deal.

The real goodness is more conscious of the remaining evil than of the acquired good; of the lingering darkness than of the hill-tops smitten with the dawn; of that which has not been attained. This enabled Paul to speak of himself as least of all saints.

But we can only attain this blessed condition by intimate and prolonged fellowship with God, in solitudes where human voices and interests cease to distract. The brightness of which Moses was unconscious was caught from the Presence-chamber of the Divine Loveliness. Oh to live there!

In the secret of his presence how my soul delights to hide!
Oh, how precious are the lessons which I learn at Jesus' side!
Earthly cares can never vex me, neither trials lay me low;
For when Satan comes to tempt me, to the secret place I go.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15.

"To work all manner of workmanship."—Ex. xxxv. 35.

There was an infinite variety in the contributions made to the Tabernacle, from the precious jewels of the rulers to the acacia wood of the poor, and the goats' hair of the women. The completed structure was a monument of the united gifts, handicrafts, and gems of the entire people. But in all there was the unity of spirit, and plan, and devotion. "Diversities of operation, but the same Lord."

In the Church and the world there is a work for each of us to do.—The Apostle distinctly says that God has prepared good works for us to walk in them. It may be a very humble part in the great factory, like minding the lift, or stoking the furnace, or fetching materials for the more skilled operatives, but there is a berth for each willing worker, if only the will and way of God are diligently sought and followed.

This work is suited to our special powers.—He who prepares the work for the worker, prepares the worker for the work. Whenever God gives us a task to fulfil, it is because He sees in us faculties for its successful and happy accomplishment, in co-operation with Himself. It is a mistake then to turn back daunted by difficulty and opposition. As Caleb and Joshua said of the possessors of Canaan, "We be well able to overcome them."

We must bring our resources and powers to God.—Willing hearts were summoned to bring their offerings to the Lord: as the barley-loaves and fish were laid in the hand of Christ. The maker of a musical instrument knows best how to develop its waiting music, and He who created and endowed us can make the most of us. Let us not work for Him, but yield ourselves to his hand, and our members as instruments of righteousness for his service. We may be quite unique, differing from all others in the special character of our work, but it matters not, so long as God effects through us his purpose in our creation.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 16.

"Much more than enough."—Ex. xxxvi. 5.

This is always God's way. No words could better express the Imperial measure and standard of his dealings with his people. When He calls us out, as He did Moses, Bezaleel, and Aholiab, and entrusts us with his plan; and when we are careful to work out his specifications, He always makes more than enough provision for all our need.

The Redemption in Christ Jesus.—Where sin abounded grace did much more abound. The topmost hills were covered by the waters of the deluge, and the Alpine heights of human rebellion were more than atoned for when Jesus died. Grace overtops sin. It is not only enough to cope with its virus and results in the worst case brought under its power, but much more than enough.

God's ability to answer prayer.—He does exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. We ask great things, and secretly think that if God were to give only a fraction, we would be thankful. How we straiten Him! He cannot do much because of our unbelief! He yearns to do not only enough, but much more than enough for us. See his prodigality in nature: its enamelled shells, its profusion of flowers, its swarming life. Thy Father is rich enough to make all grace abound towards thee.

In daily provision for spirit, soul, and body.—Give and it shall be given you, good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over. God is not niggard. If He withholds, it is that we may cling to the Giver rather than the gift. But for the most part, He gives all things richly to enjoy. He opens his hand, and satisfies. Whatever thy need, God has much more than enough to meet it. He has riches of grace and of glory. Trust Him, obey Him, appropriate thy share in thy Father's rich provision. Weak and needy as thou art, there is much more than enough strength in God to perfect what concerns thee.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17.

"A mercy-seat of pure gold."—Ex. xxxvii. 6.

This was the Propitiatory. Beneath it lay the tables of the law, which even Moses had broken, almost as soon as they came into his hands, but which had been renewed. Concealing and covering them lay this golden lid, encrusted with the blood which successive generations of priests sprinkled there on the Great Day of Atonement.

There can be no doubt that this golden slab sets forth the obedience unto death of our Saviour, whom God set forth to be a Propitiation, and who was a Propitiation for the whole world.

Our Lord's obedience is priceless in the Divine estcem.—What pure gold is among metals, that is his advent to do God's will, in comparison with all other endeavours to do it. It takes the first place, and is of peerless beauty and excellence.

His obedience was to blood.—His wounds tell the story. He held nothing back: but yielded all to blood-shedding. And now He is the precious meeting-place between the Divine purity and sinful men. On this priceless mercy-seat the shekinah shines benignantly from between the cherubim.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18.

"The Laver...of the Mirrors of the Serving Women."—Ex. xxxviii. 8.

This was a good use to put these mirrors to. The women were so deeply interested in the work which was afoot that they counted no sacrifice too great. But the main suggestion for ourselves is the wisdom of renouncing self-inspection.

The mirror speaks of self-scrutiny.—We are constantly holding up the mirror to our inner life, studying its mechanism and operations. Our fingers often on our pulse; the attention of the soul turned back on itself; the study of symptoms carried to the grievous extent of inducing the diseases which we dread. Of course, where there is evident mischief at work, we do well to take heed; but we must guard against a morbid self-anatomy, a perpetual analysis of motive and intention, an inwardness which diverts our attention from Christ and duty.

The evils of self-scrutiny.—If we look down into the depths of our own nature, we miss the face of Jesus. To consider self is to become involved in a maze of perplexities and disappointments. The disease cannot be cured by ceaselessly pondering its symptoms. The soul cannot lift the soul. Self can never expel the spirit of self.

Its cure.—These women became so interested in the service of the Tabernacle that they were weaned from their mirrors. The better expelled the worse, the higher cast out the lower. Go out of yourself, find some work to do for God and man; seek in the laver the removal of the stains of human sin; find your centre in God and his plans: and you will abandon the habit of morbid self-scrutiny. For every look at self, take ten at Christ.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19.

"Holy to the Lord."—Ex. xxxix. 30.

Zechariah tells us that these words were to be written on the bells of the horses. The sacred inscription, which stood on the brow of Aaron, designating his separation to his sublime office, was to become incorporated with the business of the farm and city, where burdens were borne and heavy weights drawn with difficulty. The inscription befits all bells that ring in the home, the shop, the factory. We are to be God's priests everywhere, and in everything.

The priest was separated from all impurity.—We must be in the world, but separate from its sin. Even in Sardis, it is possible to walk with the Master, in undefiled garments. When evil threatens us from a distance, we must be sensitive to its approach, and quick to put the covering presence of Christ between.

The priest was separated to holy service.—He was keenly sensitive to the honour of Jehovah, and to the demands of his service. Rather be cut down at his altar, like Zechariah, the son of Berachiah, than prove a delinquent. We cannot all do the inner service of offering incense and of blessing men, but we can render every act as a sacred service to God; always treading the holy floor, and within sight of the holy Presence, and within earshot of the Divine voice; eating, drinking, doing everything for the glory of God. Throughout this chapter we are reminded that all was made as the Lord commanded Moses; this should be the law of our life.

The priest bore holiness written where all could read it; so should we.—It should not be necessary for us to be labelled. For men to need telling that we are Christians, is a sign that we are far from what we should be. But so to live that the first and slightest glance at us should betray our heavenly calling, is to adorn the Gospel and please our Master.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

OCTOBER 20.

RUTH'S CHOICE.—Ruth i. 14-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 16.

THE time when this very interesting story occurred is uncertain. The only clue we have is the statement in i. 1, "in the days when the judges ruled." The famine which led to Elimelech's removal to Moab was probably in the time of Gideon. It may have been partly the result of the oppression of the Midianites.

The early home of this family was Bethlehem, an insignificant town (Mic. v. 2). Yet, as the place where Rachel was buried, where Ruth lived, where David was brought up, and especially as the birthplace of Jesus, it was one of the most memorable.

There seems to be special importance attaching to the names of the persons this story introduces to us. Elimelech, "My God is King"; Naomi, "Pleasant," or "Lovable"; Mahlon and Chilion, "The Sickly One" and "The Pining One." The names of the two sons were probably suggested by their weakly condition from the time of their birth.

The journey of Elimelech and his family led them across Jordan, along the eastern shores of the Dead Sea, and down into the prosperous country of Moab. It seemed like a prudent course. Their crops had failed. Ruin and even death seemed to be before them. Why not go down to the land where there was plenty? There were some misgivings, no doubt. Moab was an idolatrous place, where the god Chemosh was worshipped with debasing rites. There was peril in introducing their two sons into such a moral atmosphere. But these misgivings were probably silenced by such arguments as—"It is not far away; we are not going to stay; the preservation of life demands it." With such specious considerations every downward course is begun. Better with God in famine than with Moab in plenty. Their experience in Moab was not what they expected. It was well that they should not be prosperous there. No disaster could have been so great as that of getting comfortably settled in that idolatrous country. By various painful experiences God was saying "Arise ye, and depart, for this is not your rest." First, Elimelech dies; next, the two sons marry Moabitish women; then the sons follow their father into the grave (3-5), and Naomi is left a widow, and alone in a strange land. Is it not an evil thing and bitter to depart in any measure from the living God?

The verses that form our lesson are occupied with the return to Bethlehem, and include two things:—

1. The journey (14-18).—Both Orpah and Ruth commenced the journey with Naomi. Both appear to have been influenced by her life and teaching, and both were warmly attached to her. At the start they seem to excite equal confidence. Here are two converts as the result of Naomi's testimony. Often has the Church thought the same of companions who seem to begin the Christian life together. Remember Pliable in "Pilgrim's Progress"; the rich young ruler; and Demas. Like Orpah, they were all interested in a measure, and consented to go a certain way; but all stopped short of an actual surrender of everything for God. Do not repeat Orpah's choice. To depart into idolatry and into the sinful associations of Moab was none the less evil though she loved Naomi enough to kiss her.

Ruth, though urged by the same entreaties, strengthened now by the example of her sister (14-15), made a different choice (16-17). Her words have become the fitting expression of whole-hearted devotion for thousands. She proved herself a true child of Abraham by her complete separation from her country, and kindred, and father's house, and her former god, and by her entire acceptance of the God of the Hebrews. Did she lose by joining herself to the people of God? On the contrary, she came into the line through which David was born, and has a place in the genealogy of Jesus. Imitate her decision.

The arrival (19-22).—It was the time of barley-harvest (22), about the middle of April. They had commenced their journey upon a report (6); now their faith is rewarded by the sight of plenty. They were received with astonishment (19). In a small place like Bethlehem news would spread rapidly. It was the women (R.V.) that said, "Is this Naomi?" They are quick to note the contrast between her going out ten years before, and her return as a widow and childless now. Naomi's reply is a beautiful expression of submission (20-21). All her sorrow is recognised as from the Lord; and yet by means of the sorrow the Lord has brought her "home" (21). Moab never was, and never could be, home to her. How appropriate are her words for a returning backslider: "I went out full," it was my own doing; "the Lord hath brought me home again empty," that was God's doing. "He restoreth my soul."

LITTLE CHARLIE.

[A true story of one of the little cripples who has lately been staying at one of the R.S.U. Homes for Cripple Children.]

MERRY children, full of gladness,
Loving darlings, sweet and fair,
Strange to want, and woe, and sadness,
Heirs of love and tender care.

You whose eyes so brightly glisten
With the light of health and joy,
I would tell you—will you listen?—
Of a little cripple boy.

Charlie came from London City;
Oh, if you the darling knew,
You would say it was a pity
That he could not walk like you.

All his life had been so dreary
With so little that was glad,
He was helpless, frail, and weary,
With a wee face, pale and sad.

But with other little cripples,
In a happy Christian home,
Where the merry wavelets ripple,
Or dash high with crested foam.

Charlie's heart with love was lightened,
And he sung for very glee,
How his face with gladness brightened,
Building castles by the sea.

Better still he learnt the story,
Loved the Jesus we so love,
He who left his home in glory,
That we all might live above.

O my darlings, blithe and merry,
You who with the blue waves play,
Or in gathering bloom and berry,
Spend the happy livelong day.

Many a fair sweet child is lying
Weak and weary, worn and sad,
Through the golden moments flying,
Say, will you not make them glad?

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

THE "LION SERMON."*

BY ALEXANDER MACLEOD, D.D.

"Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee" (1 Tim. iv. 16).

"Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour: whom resist steadfast in the faith" (1 Peter v. 8 and 9).

THERE is a curious service held in an old church in the City of London. On October 16 every year is preached in St. Katherine Cree, Leadenhall-street, what is called the "Lion Sermon." It has been preached every year in that same church for the last two hundred and fifty years.

If you want to be present, and would go a little earlier than the hour, you would hear the most lovely chime of bells—a chime beginning in the ordinary way, only more softly pealing, and then breaking into hymn tunes, "Sun of My Soul," "Abide with Me," "The Happy Land," and the like. Then there is the service, made very short; then the event of the evening—the sermon, the "Lion Sermon."

There was once in the City a very pious man called Sir John Gayer (or Gair). At one time he was Lord Mayor of London. Sir John happened to be in Asia at one period of his life. And when he, with his caravan, was travelling through a desert place, he found himself face to face and alone with a lion. Everybody of his company who could have helped him had gone forward. Sir John knew that only God could deliver him. He thought of Daniel in the den of lions. He perhaps thought of Paul, who at one time was expecting to meet an Emperor who was as cruel as a lion. And he fell on his knees there before the beast and shut his eyes and cried to God to shut the mouth of the lion. And when he had finished his prayer and opened his eyes, the lion was nowhere to be seen. So when he came back to London he set aside a sum of money to be given away in gifts to poor people every October 16, and to secure that a sermon should be preached to tell the generations to come how God heard his prayer and delivered him from the mouth of the lion.

Lions? There was an actual lion.

Lions? There are stone monuments of them! In abbeys and cathedrals you may see knights with their feet resting on the lion.

Well, the lion the knights sought to trample was the evil spirit, which goeth about like a roaring lion.

Perhaps you may never have to face an actual lion. But there are other lions you will have to face.

There is the lion of sloth.
There is the lion of passionate anger.
There is the lion of untruthfulness.
There is the lion that rends the soul (Ps. vii.).
There is the lion that waits secretly for his prey.
Who is to help you to subdue them? Only God.

SAVAGES AND THEIR CHILDREN.

A FRIEND resident in Western Australia writes to us:—"In your issue of May 23 last, you say, upon the subject of cruelty to children:—

Another point of interest was one raised by Mr. Rider Haggard, who said there was no instance of ill-treatment of a child by savages. We should like to hear other testimony on this point, for the cruelty of the heathen to their children in such lands as China is notorious.

"I will therefore give you some information upon this subject so far as it concerns Australian savages. My experience of the aborigines of Western Australia extends over a period of sixty-five years. Being much with the aborigines, who were in the early days of the settlement of this colony very numerous, and moving from place to place in different parts of the colony as a member of a squatter's family, and becoming acquainted with fresh tribes, I became very familiar with their domestic habits, and the conduct of individual families, and their conduct one towards another in congregations of 300 or more in their summer gatherings.

"Through all my long experiences and very intimate acquaintances with these savages of Australia, I never knew one instance of ill-treatment to children. The fault, if it is a fault, runs in the opposite direction of too much indulgence—spoilt children as we would consider them.

"I have heard it said that mothers have been known to destroy their infants, but I have known only one instance. A young widow was delivered of a half-caste child, which so much troubled the grandmother's feelings, that she secretly made away with it. I have known men to spear to death young children under pressure of tribal custom of life for life, when a child has died perhaps from natural causes. But in their domestic life their conduct towards the children is invariably as I have stated. And I may here observe that although the Australian sea-coast savage is considered to be more decidedly a savage according to the correct meaning of the word, I have seen no difference, and nothing to note against them, in their domestic habits, and their treatment towards their children."

STRANGERS' REST, ST. GEORGE'S-STREET, E.—At the monthly workers' meeting, an address was delivered by Rev. J. R. Wood, of Holloway, on the "Secret of Increasing Peace." Mr. Isaac, after stating some facts in relation to the work at the Rest, said that as Miss Beatrice Hurditch, who had been working at the Rest in Zanzibar, was shortly to be married to the judge of the island, two friends had been accepted, and in a short time would proceed to Zanzibar, to take charge of the Rest there.

Missionary Rome:

HER TACTICS IN THE MISSION FIELD.—II.

SYRIA.

One of the most striking instances of Roman Catholic imitativeness may be seen in their missions in the East. When the American missionaries proved very successful among the Armenians, the Greeks, and the Maronites, the Roman Catholic missionaries at once adopted their methods, and followed them step by step in evangelistic and educational work. Dr. Post, of Beyrout, gave an amusing account at the Centenary Conference, of the way in which, as the Protestants established a seminary, and then a college, and then a medical department, the Romanists after a short time did the same. Next, the Protestants opened a large school for girls, and the Romanists followed suit with schools for girls all over Syria. Finally, the Protestants having started a printing press, translated books, and disseminated the Scriptures, the Jesuits had a translation of their own made of the Bible, and sold it at an exceedingly low price, in order to occupy the field. "The Word of God is not bound."

UGANDA.

The efforts of Romish priests to stir up strife in Uganda, are recent and notorious; their hope was to obtain the chief power, and either drive Protestants away, or make them subject to their will. It was a shameful instance of attempting to rob another church of the fruits of her labours and sacrifices; common decency ought to have forbidden any other society from approaching a land which had been entered at the cost of life, and where converts were being multiplied. Although the attempt failed in its immediate object it brought a great deal of odium upon mission work, and divided the natives into two camps. The Roman settlement, confined to one part of the country, has now an English bishop and priests, and is clamouring for the right of toleration in the whole country. The French bishop is now freed, and deputed to the regions of the Nile, and will probably be heard of in connection with a French occupation.

INDIA.

In India the methods of the Roman Catholic missionaries are different from those of Protestant in two important respects—they never preach to the non-Christians, and they allow of the retention of caste distinctions among their converts. For preaching they substitute the teaching of children whom they get hold of at an early age. This is indeed

THE KEY OF THEIR POSITION EVERYWHERE.

Teach the children, and you win the men and women Power of an absolute kind is gained in some cases by the use of loans of money to men who are in pecuniary straits, or by settling them on lands purchased by the Mission, and giving them a working capital in the way of carts, and bullocks, and seed In return the priests take from them a document promising that they will in all things abide by the priests' decision, that they will exchange their former gods and religious customs for the objects of worship and religious customs of the Roman Catholic Church, and that they will take the priest for their guide instead of the guru. Failing this, they may be summoned at any moment to repay the full value of what they have received. These financial arrangements are generally made with those who have families—for a reason which will soon appear. In this way converts, if such they can be called, suffer little or no annoyance from their fellow-countrymen, because caste is not interfered with. There is also little or no danger of relapse, because of the document which the priest holds, to which he also adds a superstitious fear of his priestly power. At first, the converts are delighted with their supposed deliverance from debt, but soon they find that they have only exchanged one bondage for another. Their children, too, are under the priests' control, for debtors get no rest until they send their children to the orphanages, which form an important part of the Roman Catholic Mission. This is why debtors with families are preferred. The method is simply one of

BUYING CONVERTS.

In one district whole families of low castes, who have been taught by Protestants, have gone over to the Roman Catholic Church, yet protesting to their first friends that they did not want to go. The Romanists would advance them money, the Protestants would not. Yet the poor do not find themselves cared for when once they have been securely penned in the fold; donations from the mission drop off, however great their distress. Moreover, general funds are utilised for Roman Catholic work, and the poor of that church outnumber all other applicants for help from the Friend in Need Societies.

Sisters of Mercy are provided as nurses in the Government hospitals, and they win great influence for their church, though the full benefit of their work is only gained in Roman Catholic mission hospitals, where they gain the patient's confidence by kindness, and then persuade him to be baptized. The dying are induced to hand over their children to the care of the mission.

EDUCATION

is provided in large establishments for the natives, but few converts seem to be gathered from them. Still, they help to spread Romanist influence. Somehow, the Roman Catholic priests have managed to persuade Government officers and the public that they are really poorer and more self-denying, and disinterested than Protestant missionaries, and hence their claims for grants of money are generally listened to. They have some high-class schools for English ladies, which are taught by sisters who are French ladies of culture, and to which many Protestant parents send their daughters, with the inevitable result.

Roman Catholicism carries on no active propaganda against Protestantism in certain parts of India, but enough has been said to show that it is always busy against it, though in an indirect manner. In some parts it has, on occasion, resorted to violence and the most unworthy means to drive Protestantism out of the field.

CHINA.

In China, it is estimated, there are about half a million Roman Catholics, who represent the results of at least three centuries of labour, of suffering, and of sacrifice. One wonders why so little has been achieved, and some explanation seems to lie in the name they bear and the reputation they have won.

China is large, and the priests keep aloof altogether from Protestants, and do not interfere with their work. The only point of contact with Protestant missionaries seems to be in time of famine, when they come for such money aid as Europeans may have to give, and with which they have always been well supplied. With little courtesies on their part they are always ready. They do not go out to preach to the heathen, but rely on their great cathedrals in large centres of population and on their small chapels in various places as points of attraction. They admit that the principal means on which they depend for growth are their orphanages, foundling institutions, schools, and colleges. Of course they do not fail to imbue their converts with ideas which are prejudicial to Protestant influence, and to insist that they shall not have any connections with Protestants, or read any of their books.

From these brief notes it will be seen that in every place the main idea of the Roman Catholic is to lay hold upon the children, and train them in his views and ways. Other methods are accidental or subsidiary; this is essential. J. P. G.

SLAVERY IN MOROCCO.

In a communication on this subject, a member of the North Africa Mission says:—

"Few people know the true state of affairs in Morocco; only those who live in daily touch with the common life of the people really get to understand the pernicious and soul-destroying system of human flesh-traffic, as carried on in most of the public markets of the interior. Having resided and travelled extensively in Morocco for some seven years, I feel constrained to bear witness against the whole gang of Arab slave-raiders and buyers of poor little innocent boys and girls.

"When I first settled in Morocco I met those who denied the existence of slave-markets, but since that time I have seen children, some of whom were of tender years, as well as very pretty young women, openly sold in the city of Morocco, and in the towns along the Atlantic seaboard. It is also of very frequent occurrence to see slaves sold in Fez, the capital of Northern Morocco.

"The first slave girls that I actually saw being sold were of various ages. They had just arrived from the Sûdan, a distance by camel perhaps of forty days' journey. Two swarthy-looking men were in charge of them. The timid little creatures, mute as touching Arabic, for they had not yet learned to speak in that tongue, were pushed out by their captors from a horribly dark and noisome dungeon into which they had been thrust the night before. Then separately or two by two they were paraded up and down before the public gaze, being stopped now and again by some one of the spectators and examined, exactly as the horse dealer would examine the points of a horse before buying the animal at any of our public horse-marts in England. The sight was sickening. Some of the girls were terrified, others were silent and sad. Every movement was watched by the captives, anxious to know their present fate. My own face flushed with anger as I stood helplessly by and saw those sweet, dark-skinned, woolly-headed Soudanese sold into slavery.

"Our hearts have ached as we have heard from time to time, from the lips of slaves, of the indescribable horrors of the journey across desert plains, cramped with pain, parched with thirst, and suffocated in panniers; their food a handful of maize. Again, we have sickened at the sight of murdered corpses, left by the wayside to the vulture and the burning rays of the African sun, and we have prayed, perhaps as never before, to the God of justice to stop these cruel practices.

"In the name of our common humanity we say that this ought to cease. The cry of these murdered ones goes up for redress along the desert track, across the Atlas heights, to the very gates of cities and towns within hail of Europe. The cause of the weak against the strong has ever been ours. A united 'No slavery in Morocco' from the Powers would effectually check this system within three months: for what Sultan would dare to resist the mandate of Europe? It is the duty of the free, the noble, and the brave to snap the chains of Africa's millions throughout her borders. Let us rise up from our lethargy, and wipe off this blot and reproach, which has too long stained the fair names of the great nations of the earth."

AMONG BRAHMAN STUDENTS.—God is blessing the work in Poona. Last Monday, a young Brahman was baptized. We are having about sixty Brahman students at our daily bible-class in the city. Pray for this work. Much opposition has arisen since the baptism. Our prayer is Acts iv. 29-30.

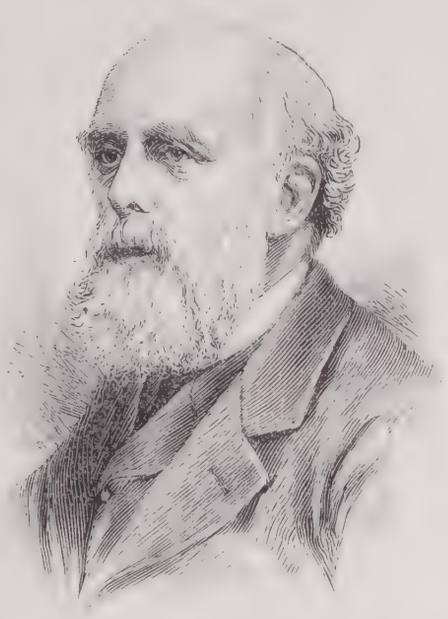
SWISS DRINKING HABITS.—A correspondent of The Scotsman writes: "I have just returned from a two years' residence in Switzerland, during which I have lived among the Swiss and observed their domestic life, both in cities and in country places. They drink from morning till night, and the only thing that screens them from superficial observers is the fact that they, as a rule, drink wine and beer only. Occasionally, however, they indulge in brandy and absinthe, and then there are scenes that equal, if they do not surpass, anything I have seen in Scotland."

THE LATE

Mr. William James Armitage.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. William James Armitage, whose lamented death it was our mournful duty to announce a few weeks ago, was born at Brighton, in 1819. He was the third son of Mr. James Armitage, who (with his brothers) was founder of the well-known Farnley Iron Works at Leeds. William James was educated at home, but subsequently took his degree at Paris University, his father intending him for the medical profession. Towards this, however, he did not draw, inclining rather to an artist's career. He studied painting with much interest; had he made that his profession he might have been scarcely less distinguished in art than his elder brother, the well-known Academician. But the claims of business called him in another direction, and in 1854 he was pressed to come and assist in the Farnley Iron Works, where he remained, acting for most of the time as manager, for some twenty years.

In 1863 the firm erected, at the cost of £2000, the large iron church, which is still used for the benefit of the work-people, and the expenses with which, even in times of great depression in the trade, when the returns from the works were almost nil, have ever since been borne by the company. Day-schools were also erected for the use of the children, and these continued to be supported by the firm until they were taken over by the Leeds School Board. From the commencement of his connection with the works, Mr. Armitage always showed the deepest concern for the spiritual interests of his employés; but it was in his later years, when the light in his own soul had grown clearer and fuller, that he himself, with the wife who shared so fully all his higher aims and interests, took a personal part in the spiritual work of the place, during the frequent visits that he paid to it.



It was in 1860 that he married Miss Emily Nicholson, whose father was proprietor of Roundhay Park, which has since become the public park of the town of Leeds. No married couple could be more fully one in the object and purpose of their lives than these two have ever been. That object has been the glory of God, and that purpose to do whatever good they could, both by personal influence and by the judicious use of their considerable means.

In 1875 a very remarkable spiritual revival occurred in the town of Leeds in connection with the first general Church mission held there. Mr. Armitage himself was much helped and greatly stirred by the mission held at St. James's Church, and, as a result, determined to try and do something to assist the cause of temperance reform in the town. This led to the erection of St. James's Hall at a very large outlay both of money and of painstaking endeavour to render it a centre of all kinds of useful influences. In the large hall, special evangelising efforts have been made from time to time to reach the depraved and the ungodly, while cheap and good provisions have been furnished for the market people and others, and clean lodgings have been provided at very reasonable rates for steady young men coming to seek employment in the town. In these and other ways too manifold to enumerate, this most useful building has contributed to the advance of morality and religion during the last twenty years.

This, however, was only one of many ways in which Mr. Armitage endeavoured to make a good use of his stewardship, but this employment of his means has been so completely devoid of ostentation that much that he has done for the promotion of God's work has been known only to a few of his most intimate friends, and much has not been known even to them. For example, some of these are aware of his having spent nearly £6000 in recent years in the promotion of evangelising work in connection with one particular agency, of which no whisper has hitherto reached the public ear.

Like his brother, Dr. Armitage, he was a generous friend of the blind, and helped largely in the work amongst them. He had also a very warm place in his heart for the orphans, and indeed for children of all sorts and kinds. He seemed to have a special affinity for the young, and they always drew to him greatly. A very interesting letter appeared in The Leeds Mercury, just after his death, which may well be quoted both as illustrating his interest in children, and also of that playful humour, which was so characteristic of him:—

In your obituary notice (says the writer), no mentionwas made of Mr. Armitage's connection with the Headingley Orphan Homes. He has always been a warm friend and supporter of these homes, and for the last twenty-three years, his name appears as one of the managers. Many years ago a little girl of about four years of age, in repeating a text, made the mistake of saying "Blessed are the shoemakers" instead of "peacemakers." Mr. Armitage, on hearing this, resolved to share the blessing of the shoemakers, sent his own shoemaker to measure the children for a pair of boots each; for many years the annual boot bill was paid by him, until, as the number of children increased, it amounted to £30.

He was from its origin a warm supporter of the Church Parochial Mission Society, and was for many years a very useful member of its committee. Not content with helping forward the mission work of others, when he built himself a large house at Chelsea he was careful also to erect at the end of his garden a mission room, where for many years a valuable mission work was conducted, to the spiritual assistance of many both rich and poor. In these meetings, with his usual modesty, he seldom took a leading part, but when he did speak, without making any attempt at rhetoric, he would almost always say some few strong sensible words that linger in the memory when great speeches and eloquent sermons have passed from it.

After all, much good as he did in his own quiet way, the loveliest product of his life was that beautiful guileless Christian character, which, by the grace of God, he was enabled to form. Some who have had a pretty wide experience of men and manners think that they have never seen anything more morally beautiful than his manly unaffected piety, his childlike faith, and his unfeigned love of the brethren. He died as he lived, interested in all around him, with as perfect a composure as if he were only passing from one room into another; and perhaps that is a very good description of what death is to such an one. "In my Father's house are many mansions."

STUDENTS AND MISSIONS.

The series of splendid meetings held in connection with the London Missionary Society Centenary has aroused no small interest in foreign mission work, and many people are asking, How can we help God's cause in heathen lands? A brief account of our College Missionary anniversary will show what we are trying to do and possibly also suggest to other theological colleges to help forward missionary work in this way—if they have not already adopted some such plan.

Richmond College was founded in 1843, and since 1848 the missionary anniversary has been a conspicuous feature in its history. During the year we are kept in touch with old students who are abroad by the governor reading at the weekly missionary prayer-meeting on Friday evenings letters received from such men. Another feature of this College is what we call "the rolling off" service. When a man gets his appointment to foreign work, he comes back to Alma Mater to say "Good-bye." The men line the grand staircase in the order of years, a special hymn is sung, and the missionary designate shakes hands with each, and is sent off to his ship with the heartiest of cheers. In addition to these we have a vigorous branch of the Students' Volunteer Union here.

But these are only auxiliaries—the great event of the year is the Missionary Anniversary, usually held in October. This is an unbounded source of enthusiasm. About Eastertide a platform to represent the College is elected. This consists of ten men, three preachers, four speakers for the Monday meeting, with a chairman and two secretaries. These undertake the management of the anniversary. Subjects are chosen; invitation cards, with a programme and appeal, are printed; collecting cards are secured. During the long vacation each man sets himself the task of collecting as much as possible from his friends and relatives. When we reassemble at the beginning of September, hundreds of letters are sent out, and as a rule, are generously responded to. Then boxes are placed upon the tables in the dining-room and when a man makes a pun or a spill he is fined a penny; and in addition each man gives a donation towards the anniversary, always representing a real sacrifice.

All this having been done, I cannot describe our gratitude when the eventful anniversary, the subject of so much prayer and work, passes off with complete success. Of late years a steady advance has been made, and last year the magnificent total of £400 was raised for missionary work. We want to maintain this high level, but this year we are battling against many difficulties. May I ask for the prayers and help of your readers? We hold our great meeting in the College chapel on Monday, October 14. There is tea at four o'clock, after which there is music in the lecture-hall, and then the meeting commences at six p.m.

Richmond is easily reached, and we give a hearty welcome to all who can come. Some, perhaps, cannot come to our meetings, but would like to help forward this missionary effort.

CHRISTIAN CYCLISTS.—Many villages in Essex have been visited during the past summer by the Norman Evangelistic Cycling Club, in some cases many times. Among others were the following:—Blackmore, Theydon Bois, Rainham, Upminster, Cranham, Writtle, Nine Ashes, High Ongar, Buckhurst Hill, Loughton, etc. The workers believe that some have accepted Christ as their Saviour, and that others have been convinced of sin.

THE L.M.S. AND ITS WORK.

THE Centenary Report of the London Missionary Society summarises correspondence with workers in many lands. It opens with a retrospect, in which the universal need is emphasised and the greatness of the undertaking fairly faced. "It becomes increasingly clear that the work of evangelising the world is enormously greater than was probably at first imagined. This is true, not only in regard to the extent of the work, but also the nature of the obstacles in its way, and the variety of the means to be employed in seeking the desired result. The Society's history has made it clear that the point at which the native church may wisely be left alone to carry on its work of home evangelisation, without European help or direction, is not so easily determined as was once supposed." We make some extracts from the report:—

CHINA.

The reports from China show a spirit of inquiry on many hands, and educational progress on western lines. The phenomenal rainfall in the Peking district caused widespread distress. "The suffering on every hand is most pitiable. Many respectable families have only one meal a day, and that of the very poorest food. A considerable number of the members of this church are in dire poverty, just able to live, and no more. This grinding poverty retards the spiritual growth of the individual and of the church. It engrosses both time and thought. There is no leisure for the culture of the spiritual life. A poor woman, in her prayer yesterday, said: 'Lord, I have not forgotten Thee; forgive me if I seem to forget; for I am in such straits.' The larger number of those who join us are poor people, and they seem to get poorer after becoming Christians. Finding their small business cannot be carried on without much lying and trickery, they throw it up, and try something else, but seldom succeed. Heathen employers never like to have a Christian in their service, and always discharge them on the smallest pretence. The keeping of the Sabbath, too, entails many difficulties and heavy losses on people who live from hand to mouth."

INDIA.

In many centres the work is advancing with encouragement; but there are sad disappointments, and many share the trials of Miss Christlieb, who writes from Bellary: "Although the people are glad to see us, listening interestedly and assenting to the truth of our words, no sense of need or guilt seems to respond to our proclamation of a Saviour, or our earnest endeavour to make them understand how sorely they need one. I was speaking once in a small village on the banks of the Thungabadra; it was a beautiful evening scene, the quiet sunset and the shining water of the flowing stream perhaps suggested my topic—that peace of heart and conscience known by those whose sins are forgiven through Jesus. As I uttered the word 'peace,' a man in the crowd gave a loud, rude laugh: 'Peace? Enough of your words! What do we want with peace? Give us some rice—that is what we care about'; and, indeed, this is only too true of the majority of Hindus. I fear some of our friends at home indulge, to a much larger extent than is justified by facts, the happy conviction that the heathen are stretching out their hands unto God, and that an underlying sense of spiritual need and hunger characterises very many of the hearts to whom the missionary brings the message of Christ. This, alas! is but rarely the case: the need has to be created."

MADAGASCAR.

The Christians in Madagascar are in the furnace of affliction, and there is no certainty as to the future of mission work in the island. From Ankadibevava it is reported:—"In the country churches near the capital there has certainly been much improvement during the last few years. There has been growth of intelligence, order in public worship, and, I hope, of purity in church membership. Among some, at least, there is manifestly a great desire to purge the church of unworthy persons. In the neighbourhood of Amoronkay, about a day's journey from Antananarivo, the churches are yet very backward, and many can only be rightly described as semi-heathen. The sacred and wood-covered hill of Andrarakasina, where an ancient altar exists, and sacrifices and prayers are offered to the spirits of deceased ancestors, still has an attraction for hundreds even of nominal Christians. Further east are the too long neglected and greatly oppressed tribes of Bezanozano and Betsimisaraka, among whom Christian work is beginning to bear fruit. In this part of the country we now have about fifty churches and schools; but as many of the young men have been drafted into the army and sent off to take part in the struggle against the French, I fear this may tell unfavourably against our work for some time to come."

RAROTONGA.

There are interesting reports from Polynesia. Who does not weep for the missionary who has to report as follows:—"Up to the year 1894, Rarotonga knew nothing of religious divisions or sectarianism. For seventy-three years the converts on that island knew no name but that of Jesus, and no Head of the Church but Christ; but in September of that year, the mission schooner Pitcairn, belonging to the Seventh Day Adventists of America, revisited the island, and landed Dr. Caldwell and family and house; and also Mr. Owens and family. A month later a French schooner brought two priests from Tahiti, who have gathered the Portuguese around them and also a few natives of the group. No Rarotongans, however, have yet joined them. How long they will remain steadfast remains to be seen. Free education, including music, French, and English, are promised to those who will place themselves under instruction. Added to this disturbing element is the increased sale of intoxicants. Drunkenness is more rife than it was. Death greatly thinned the ranks of church members during the year, and, sad to say, there were many lapses from membership, mostly on the part of young men who had given way to strong drink."

are suggested by the experiences of the year—experiences such as all societies have to battle with. The report well says: "While there are some points in review of the year and of the century which are calculated to awaken anxiety, and some things which are disappointing and depressing, it would be unwise and unworthy to be unduly influenced by these. God's goodness has been marvellously and constantly displayed in all the history of the Society. Praise for the past, faith for the present, and renewed consecration and courage for the future should be the attitude of all who appreciate aright the meaning of the Society's history."

AMONG LEPERS IN INDIA.

THE sore need that there is for further extension of the work on behalf of lepers is strikingly shown by the following extracts from a letter to hand from Mrs. Osborne, of the London Missionary Society. Writing from Trevandrum, Travancore, South India, she says:—

"The Master led me nearly two years ago to visit the saddest of all earth's sad places—the leper hospital—in which are between 150 and 200 hopeless lepers. Leprosy is everywhere rife here; indeed, it is a daily sight to see those sickening specimens of humanity begging in our streets and markets, and I am sorry to say it is of a most malignant kind, causing their flesh to rot and drop off in pieces. Almost every one is minus fingers, toes, feet, or some part of the body. This renders them so repulsive that even their own families cast them off, and the rest of their fellows treat them with the utmost loathing and neglect. For eighteen months I have visited this living tomb once a week, but no words can tell the depths of human misery I constantly witness there. The appalling agony pursues me home, and there drives me to my room to plead with Him who careth even for these, vile though they are in man's sight.

"This being a Government hospital, and that, too, of a heathen State, the poor souls are entirely destitute of any Christian teaching. When I first went, not one of them had ever heard of a Saviour who loves them. But with what eagerness did they listen to the old, old story, and beg me to tell it over again. Indeed, their interest in the Bible never flags, and week by week they ever beg for more. The work has grown far too much for my strength and time, and sorely do I need two Bible-women. But that means money, and I cannot afford to pay salaries. If it is possible for the Mission to Lepers to help on this work, do not let me plead in vain for these sorely-stricken ones. If only the Christians in our homeland could see them in all their sad and helpless misery, no words of mine would be needed. Think of the living death, year after year, to be suffering from a disease so loathsome as to make it impossible for them to feel the comforting touch of a human hand. One Bible-woman will not go alone to the hospital, as the natives have the greatest horror of leprosy, and only very devoted Christians will go at all. £12 a year will support these two native helpers, whose ministry would be so welcome to these poor sufferers."

Mr. John Jackson, 186, Aldersgate-street, is hon. sec. for the London auxiliary of the Mission to Lepers.

A sadly interesting narrative of work among lepers in Kashmir, appears in the October issue of the Church of Scotland Mission Record. The writer, Rev. W. Walker, says:—

"In the mission district of Chamba State and part of Kashmir State of which I had charge, I think I am well within the mark if I put down the number of lepers as being not less than twelve hundred; considering the population, this is a very large percentage. Leprosy is undoubtedly a disease which affects the masses more than the wealthy, the lower castes more than the higher castes, and this makes it the more dreadful, because the former are precisely those who are least able to obtain any relief that can be procured for gold.

"The resources of the Chamba State Hospital are placed freely at the disposal of the lepers, who in this way are well attended to. The head of the Medical Department in Chamba State, Doctor Burkhurdár Khân—himself a Christian—frequently visits the asylum, and takes a deep interest in the well-being of the inmates. He cares for their bodies, and in doing so he has often most disagreeable and repulsive duties to perform, such as removing diseased bones, and generally trying to counteract the ravages wrought by the fell disease. He also does his utmost for the spiritual welfare of the lepers, and is like a father to them all. He is a very earnest and very true Christian gentleman, and never loses an opportunity of trying to win them for Christ."

MISSIONARY FAREWELLS.

THE C.M.S. DISMISSALS.

The autumnal dismissals of labourers for various parts of the mission field are usually full of interest. Amongst those to whom farewell is said some are veterans, returning to a work whose difficulties they know well; others are fresh volunteers full of ardour and faith in Him who has thrust them forth. The autumn being the convenient season for starting, it has become customary with many of the societies to hold such "farewells." The L.M.S. Missionary Convention, reported in our last issue, closed with a valedictory service in connection with the departure of twenty missionaries.

The C.M.S. Farewells were held last week on Tuesday and Wednesday, in connection with the departure of 147 missionaries, seventy of whom are new labourers. Owing to the large number two valedictory meetings were held—on Tuesday for those going to China and Japan, Egypt and Palestine, Ceylon, and North-west America; and on Wednesday for those going to Africa and India. At both meetings Exeter Hall was densely crowded.

Sir John H. Kennaway, M.P., who presided, said in his opening address that we come to say "God be with you, fare ye well" to our brothers and sisters leaving us for the foreign mission field: to strengthen and encourage them by our presence for the work before them, and to fan the flame of missionary enthusiasm already kindled in those gathered here. As was to be expected he did not conclude without some reference to the news from China. Mourners, we are, he said, for those taken from us, but thankful for the testimony which has reached us concerning them, and thankful for the safety of the remainder of our missionaries in China, thankful also for the action of our Government—not asked for by us—by which it has been proclaimed to the people of China that missionaries must not be murdered any more, and that protection is to be given to missionaries and traders alike. He expressed his conviction that the recent riots were anti-foreign, not anti-mission, and that the common people outside the official classes were most favourably disposed towards the missionaries. We cannot doubt that God can overrule this terrible disaster for good to the missionary cause in which we are engaged.

Rev. H. E. Fox, who was warmly welcomed in his new character as secretary of the C.M.S., gave some details as to the outgoing missionaries, who included three bishops, thirty ordained clergymen, sixteen single ladies, and twenty-three wives of returning missionaries; while of the seventy new missionaries twenty-one were ordained ministers, one was a doctor, ten were laymen, and among the twenty-eight single ladies one was a fully-qualified doctor of medicine. One by one the missionaries, called by name by Mr. Fox, rose in their places on the platform answering to their names, amongst these being his own daughter, Miss E. S. Fox, who is going to Japan.

Brief addresses followed by Bishop Moule, Revs. W. W. Cassels, A. Elwin, Ll. Lloyd, and W. P. Buscombe, Dr. Johnson, who is going to Moab, and others. In conclusion, Rev. R. C. Joynt, of Gipsy Hill, addressed the missionaries on Jesus Christ, as the treasure of which we as trustees are bound to administer to perishing men.

On Wednesday evening, Colonel Robert Williams, M.P., presided, and opened with a sympathetic address. Rev. H. E. Fox then introduced the missionaries going to various parts of India, and to Africa, both East and West Coast. Some of these spoke briefly, viz., Rev. T. Harding, going to Yoruba, and Rev. Douglas Hooper, of the East Coast Mission.

India came next, Rev. T. Kimber representing Tinnevelly. If anyone felt the monotony of one missionary after another coming forward and asking for prayer, let him remember the case of Peter in prison, who was delivered only after "unceasing prayer" had been made. Dr. H. C. Weitbrecht, an honoured name in the Punjaub, followed with a telling exposition of the incident of the disciples mending their nets before going forth, as applied to missionary work. Rev. W. A. Roberts, returning to Western India, pointed out how much the missionaries needed the grace of patience and confidence. Rev. A. L. Birkett (N.W. Provinces) put in a plea for prayer for the students under his care.

Rev. T. Russell, who with his wife is leaving an English vicarage for the North-West Provinces, appropriately came next. He spoke of his recent visit to India, and the interest it had excited in him, and he emphasised the duty imposed upon Christians in the evangelisation of the world. Rev. H. F. Rowlands, who is going from Oxford to the Punjab, spoke of the present as the golden age for missionary work. Mr. Claxton (representing business men trained at Islington) gave a short account of his conversion and subsequent career, and Rev. E. H. Fincher brought the speeches to a close by pressing the question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Rev. S. A. Selwyn, of Boscombe, concluded the proceedings with an address on "Always," under the headings: Always led in triumph by Christ; Always of good courage; Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus; and Always rejoicing in the promises of God.

A ZENANA FAREWELL.

A deeply-interesting dismissal in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission was held on Thursday in St. Martin's Hall, when farewell was said to nineteen lady missionaries, of whom eleven are new labourers. Most of these set sail by the ss. Caledonia on the following day. Lord Kinnaird presided, and introduced the proceedings.

Rev. A. R. Cavalier, secretary, explained that this society has been able to greatly increase the number of missionaries at work during the last five years. It has stations or Bible-women at thirty-three centres, and employs 116 European missionaries and assistants, and 256 native teachers, Bible-women, and nurses. Hospitals for women are maintained at Lucknow, Benares, and Patna, and a number of schools are carried on, one of the objects of the society being to promote education, especially among the higher classes, based on Scripture. The secretary introduced the missionaries—a party of nineteen, of whom eight are returning after furlough, and eleven new missionaries—one of these, Miss Paterson, although new to the society, being an experienced missionary. One after another the ladies spoke. Miss Fallon, of medical work in Allahabad; Miss Marston, of hospital work at Lucknow; Miss Paterson, of native Christian women and their spiritual difficulties; Miss Abraham, of Patna; and Miss Luce, of Sultanpur.

Then came the new missionaries. First, Miss Ferguson, L.R.C.P. and S. Edin., a fully-qualified doctor, but a singularly quiet and spiritual young lady; then Miss Edge and Miss (Dr.) Haskew. The other ladies were Misses Barrett, Boys, M. J. Ferguson, Leetch, Marshall, Reid, Sharp, and Sheldon.

Rev. H. E. Fox, the new C.M.S. secretary, gave a thoughtful valedictory address on the Lord Jesus Christ as the Sent One of the Father, and we as sent by Him exactly as He was sent into this world. Various points as to the practical result of this truth in the life of the worker were brought out with force and aptitude. Finally the missionaries were fervently commended to God in prayer by Revs. H. G. Thwaites and H. E. Fox.

DUBLIN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

The twenty-second of these annual gatherings was held last week. Crowds gathered to the meetings, the evening sessions especially being attended by eager and attentive thousands, many having to go away through want of room.

A welcome to the speakers and people was cordially presented at a conversazione on Tuesday evening, when hearty words were spoken by the chairman, Mr. J. R. Fowler, Revs. Dr. Clarke (Episcopalian), Dr. McMullen (Wesleyan), and Mr. Prenter (Presbyterian).

On Tuesday morning, Archdeacon Sinclair read a thoughtful and suggestive paper on "The Work and Office of the Holy Spirit." It was because we do not expect the Spirit's victories, he said, that there are such discords amongst us. The first step towards union of churches is to get our different communities filled with the Holy Ghost. The speaker referred to the Spirit's influence in the home life, and said that as regards individuals we should throw our whole nature open to receive his incoming and indwelling.

Rev. Andrew Murray spoke on Eph. v. 18, "Be filled with the Spirit." This does not mean either mere excitement or special gifts, neither is it a luxury for apostles and preachers alone, but a necessary of all true spiritual life, and is meant for every child of God. The only way to be kept from grieving the Spirit of God is to be filled with Him. The Holy Spirit is the spirit of the body of Christ. Why such divisions in the Church? Because the Spirit of God does not live in power among his people. When that spirit of the body of Christ is admitted He will bind us in love one to another. The fulness of the spirit is but a partial thing till we seek it with our brethren. The speaker thought there was a danger in praying for only the members by those connected with prayer unions. We should pray for all saints.

On the same afternoon the chair was taken by the Archbishop of Dublin, who has been for years the steady and tried friend of Christian union in Ireland, and whose timely and brotherly remarks were warmly appreciated.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites spoke on "The Church's Cry for the Return of the Lord." Rev. A. Murray's address upon the text, "Son, thou art ever with me," dealt with (1) the high privilege, and (2) the generally low experience of the child of God, (3) the reason for this discrepancy, and (4) the way of deliverance.

Rev. F. B. Meyer was once more a welcome speaker in Dublin. His addresses on "The Anointing of the Spirit" and "Deliverance from the Self-Life" will not soon be forgotten.

At the evening meeting on Wednesday, resolutions of sympathy with the friends of the massacred missionaries in China and the persecuted Armenians were passed. The subject of "Foreign Missions" was introduced by Rev. Prof. Lindsay, of Glasgow, who said that this work spoke most of all Christian work of the brotherhood of mankind. He had seen a high-caste Brahmin sitting at the Lord's Table between two low-caste Hindoos, taking the cup of unfermented wine with them, and yet perceptibly shrinking from the act. No one knew how much that action cost. There had never been a time when Christians were more drawn together in prayer for missions than at present. The proportion of nominal Christians to heathens one hundred years ago was one in five, now it is one in three. While that may be true, you cannot put spiritual results to the test of figures.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites followed with a deeply interesting account of a missionary tour undertaken by him in India. The same speaker next morning "struck out from the shoulder" in very plain language on the subject of "Walking with God," denouncing in earnest terms the worldliness of the Church of to-day. Two additional addresses from Rev. Andrew Murray, one from Rev. Prof. Lindsay, and two from Rev. J. Surman Cooke, of Leicester, brought the Convention to a close.

THE COLMAR CONFERENCE.

Sir,—I see a notice in your valued paper of the Conference we lately held in Colmar on behalf of the abolition of vice regulations throughout the world. There are two slight errors in that account which I think it worth while to correct, if you will allow me to do so.

The writer speaks of our work as beginning in 1886. This is probably a printer's error. Our abolitionist work began in England in 1869, twenty-six years ago. Our continental and colonial abolitionist work began in 1873-4, and was publicly inaugurated in Geneva at a great International Congress in 1877, eighteen years ago.

The writer of the notice says that at Colmar, last month, "the ladies held a devotional meeting every morning early." These meetings were attended by both men and women. Professor Stuart and Mr. Wilson, M.P.'s, attended regularly, as well as other Englishmen, and citizens of Colmar, and of other towns of Switzerland and Germany. These morning meetings were felt to be a great power during our days of Conference. We felt the presence of the Spirit of God among us. Difficulties disappeared, arising from the differences of view among the representatives of many different nationalities. A spirit of goodwill and brotherhood prevailed, together with a firm and uncompromising upholding of our standard of principles. We had previously had many fears concerning this, our first annual conference in Germany, but our God to whom we made our appeal, and into whose hands we commended this Conference and our sacred cause throughout the world, proved to us once more his faithfulness, his loving kindness, and his skill (if I may use the expression) as "the Wonderful, the Counsellor," in bringing about results far beyond our best hopes.

The subjects briefly dwelt upon at our morning meetings for prayer were, first day: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord," showing how vain it is to trust, for the overthrow of such an iniquity as that against which we contend, to Governments, and police, or even to good laws; how God has been teaching us all these years to go back from force, and to work by his Spirit, his Spirit which alone can give life and power to laws, or organisations of any kind.

Second day: The lx. chapter of Isaiah was taken as full of the sound of great international gatherings, and the international spirit of goodwill, when persons of all tongues and peoples and kindreds and nations work together for righteousness.

Third day: The words of Jesus, "The works that I do shall ye do also, and greater works than these shall ye do." Greater, because when the work of redemption was completed, the perfect union was completed (for those who believe) between the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, and the humblest of human beings who will enter into this union. For this crusade of ours (it was said) we need to strengthen our inner phalanx of those who realise this union, and who, through this union, shall remove mountains and conquer the world.

Fourth day: "The great cloud of witnesses" was taken as our subject—those who are gone before, and those who are working still on earth. "Death will sever the earthly tie between all those present, in a few years; but death is not the end of our work for the kingdom of God." Some of us felt, on that last day, the presence among us of beloved souls departed, and whom we believed were even at that hour in deepest sympathy with our labours and sorrows and hopes.—Yours faithfully,

Josephine E. Butler.

HAM YARD SOUP KITCHEN AND HOSPICE.—During the year ending September 30, the relief given here was 265,743 meals of soup and bread, 5272 nights' lodgings, and 308 tons of coal in half-hundredweights. Of the meals 78,171 were penny (self-supporting) dinners to board-men; the rest were given free to resident families by a system of recommendation and registration. In February last 5000 coal tickets were issued in the month, and the number of families on the register reached 760. The secretary of the work is Mr. W. Stevens, Ham Yard, W.

SOLDIERS' HOME, DUBLIN.

The new Soldiers' Home in South Great George's-street, Dublin, was recently opened. It is to be called the "Wolseley Soldiers' Home," because Lady Wolseley was its founder, and raised a large sum of money for it. Her interest in it continues unabated. The Wolseley Home is the tenth Soldiers' Home under the management of Miss Sandes. Nine of them are in Ireland, and one is at Rawal Pindi, India. Would that there were many more! Do any of us realise what the support of these ten Homes must mean to Miss Sandes and her co-workers, or the amount of loving, voluntary personal service entailed in carrying them on? Ten Homes mean, practically, £2500 to be collected annually. Only those who know Miss Sandes's work from the inside are at all aware of the value of it.

Lord Wolseley never hesitates to show his warm approval and support of Miss Sandes and her methods of working on every possible occasion. This was fully shown at Friday's opening ceremony. In his very interesting speech, Lord Wolseley remarked that nowadays, when they had a younger army than they used to have, these Homes were even more desirable and necessary than in past times. They received into their great school, the army, annually between 30,000 and 40,000 young men as scholars, and they hoped that they turned them out at the end of seven or eight years well-drilled citizens, imbued with all those great qualities which they believed discipline invariably brought with it. He would carry away from his native country many very pleasant recollections of the time he had recently spent in it. Among other recollections none would be more agreeable than the association he had had with Miss Sandes in connection with the Homes similar to that which they had opened that day. And he closed with these words:—"I have very little more to add, except that I am glad to have this public opportunity of thanking Miss Sandes most thoroughly for what she has done in establishing these Homes. I believe that the great success of the Homes has been, as I have already said, due to her indomitable energy and perseverance, and to the able assistance she has received from the many ladies who have acted with her. I am quite certain that from what we have seen here to-day in this Home it will bear a good harvest, and that harvest will be the contentment and happiness of the soldiers who make use of this Home, which she has by her energy and perseverance brought to a successful conclusion to-day. I thank her most heartily and all who worked with her, all the ladies who have assisted her and are devoting their lives to the British soldier. I thank her not only in my own name, but in the name of every soldier in Ireland for the last five years during which I have been in command; and am very pleased to have the opportunity of testifying how grateful soldiers feel to her for her great kindness."

In a kind farewell letter which Miss Sandes received from Lord Wolseley on the following day, he wrote:—"I do sincerely wish that God may prosper this new venture of yours, and make it a source of blessing to all who use it."

Miss Sandes receives constant entreaties to open new Homes both in Ireland and India, but where is the money for this to come from? Will not fathers, mothers, who have bright boys of their own, come forward and help to save other boys (many of whom have scarcely had a chance in life) from dangers worse than death? Very earnest were the cries to God at the opening prayer-meeting in the Wolseley Home that many soldiers might there be won for Christ, whose power alone can save them from the temptations of a great city.

THE RED, WHITE, AND BLUE CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE FOR LADS is situate in Cumming-street and Collier-street, Pentonville, N. "Our many different Bible-classes seem all satisfactorily arranged for. The study at the top of the house we have turned into a library, where those boys who want to spend a quiet evening can do so, and we shall be very grateful for papers and books." The hon. secs. are Misses Eleanor W. Dresser and Mary A. Jay.

DR. BARNARDO'S JUBILEE.

The work associated with the name of Dr Barnardo has long been recognised by all who are interested in social and philanthropic agencies. For twenty-nine years Dr. Barnardo's Homes have kept open doors for waif, orphan, and destitute children, without distinction of age, sex, creed, birthplace, or physical condition. The results attained have contributed to the diminution of crime, to a larger recognition of the claims of childhood, and to that broader spirit of sympathy in dealing with the young which happily now prevails.

Over 26,000 children have been rescued by the Homes from undoubted misery and degradation, and trained for useful and honourable lives; while 7500 selected emigrants, whose subsequent careers have been highly successful, have been sent out to the colonies. Nearly 5000 boys and girls are now under training in the institutions. This year Dr. Barnardo reaches his jubilee birthday, and it is felt that the occasion should not be allowed to pass without some recognition of the services which he has rendered to the cause of humanity, and more especially to waif and destitute children. With this object in view, a movement has been set on foot to promote a Jubilee Testimonial to Dr. Barnardo.

Cheques may be made payable to "The Barnardo Testimonial Fund," and forwarded to the bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co., 1, Pall Mall East, S.W., with whom an account has been opened by the committee, whose names are as follow:—

Lord Brassey. The Archdeacon of London.
Lord Kinnaird. Colonel Howard Vincent, M.P.
Lord Polwarth. Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard.
Mr. Howard Williams.

ORPHANS IN ITALY.

Dear Sir,—From time to time some of your readers have been kind enough to interest themselves in the Lord's work which is carried on in Florence by Dr. Comandi. At present about 120 ads are in the Asilo, where they receive a good education, and are taught different trades. The one aim is to bring them to a saving knowledge of the truth.

Some of the lads have succeeded very well indeed. One, for instance, passed his examination as a schoolmaster, and after serving his time as a soldier, returned to the Asilo, where he is now one of the best teachers, and has influence for good among the lads.

The Lord has opened the way for the agricultural school to be moved to Trebiola, a little hamlet two hours distant from here. It is a beautiful and suitable place, and has the great advantage of having a spring of fresh water on the premises, which is by no means a general thing in Italy. In a few weeks about twenty-five to thirty lads are going to take up their abode at "Ebenezer," and we trust this branch of the work will prove to be of great use.

The difficulties Dr. Comandi has to contend with are many; the work depends entirely on the free-will offerings of the Lord's servants, and is a work of faith. Times have been very difficult of late. The earthquake of last spring did a great deal of damage to the Asilo, and while the Romish institutions received some support from the Government in order to pay the necessary repairs, Dr. Comandi received no help whatever. A thunderstorm last Saturday spoilt the greater part of the vines at Ebenezer, but amid all this one realises that the Master's hand is in it all. The Romanists do all they can to oppose the work, because they feel that here is a power which they lack. Pray for us; the days are dark here, and the Church of Rome is a great power. But, thanks to God, we see those who by the power of the Gospel are turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to the freedom of the Son of God. A.

Florence,

ST. GEORGE'S CROSS, GLASGOW.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

This Conference, recently held, was a time of great refreshment from the presence of the Lord. Hundreds of Christian workers were there from many quarters; South America, Africa, Arabia, and China were all represented on the platform.

The praise and testimony meeting, held on the Tuesday following the Conference, was a most striking witness to the wonderful blessing experienced at the Tabernacle during the past year, and especially during the past month. It was blessed to hear the simple words of so many young converts, telling out of a full heart the story of their decision for Christ; their happy faces confirming the fact of the reality of their new-found peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

At the opening meeting of the Conference, Mr. John Geo. Govan gave an address on Phil. ii. 12 and 13, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." He emphasised the absolute necessity of the indwelling and inworking of God, that the outward life may be pleasing to Him.

Mr. Richard Weaver gave a stirring and very necessary word on the necessity and the duty of Christian people to "watch and pray." Miss Williams, C.I.M., spoke of two ways of working: (1) work in the energy of the flesh; (2) work in the power of the Holy Ghost. Mr. John Colville, M.P., addressed a rousing and emphatic appeal for every Christian and every church to arise, and by God's help to sweep away the great social evils of intemperance and immorality. Mr. Archibald Orr-Ewing, C.I.M., told some intensely interesting cases of real practical consecration to God amongst the native Christians in China. Rev. W. W. Cassels spoke powerfully on Ps. cxxvii., "Except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain."

Brief addresses were given by Rev. J. W. Stevenson, C.I.M.; Mr. Hugh Paton, Morocco; Pastor Fanstone, Brazil; Dr. W. D. Miller, Aden; and Mr. Robert Grierson, China. Mr. Richard Weaver sang in grand voice, "I have a sweet hope of glory in my soul!" and Mr. Walter B. Sloan gave a searching and solemnising word on "Take heed how ye hear." The closing address of Saturday's Conference, given by Rev. John McNeill, on "Go then, and preach the kingdom of God," was remarkable for its thrilling pathos and power.

The services on Sunday were full of blessing and power. After the Sunday evening service a large company met in the body of the tabernacle, and partook (about thirty of them for the first time) of the Lord's Supper. Rev. D. M. McIntyre gave a helpful communion meditation, and there were some helpful words also from Mr. D. J. Findlay, the pastor.

As one definite result of the meetings, a strong missionary tone and enthusiasm have been stirred up, and many have been led to consecrate themselves afresh to the Lord's service as He may direct.

MISSION AT SHOREDITCH TABERNACLE, E.

Pastor Wm. Cuff writes:—Dr. Harry Guinness is here holding a nine days' mission. We are having large gatherings, and great blessings every night. The after-meetings have been wonderful, and many are being saved.

Dr. Guinness preaches the Gospel with great clearness and force, and the crowds have increased each night as the mission has gone on. He has sent down between thirty and forty of his students into the district, and every house and street has been visited, and no end of good has been done. The lowest and worst have come to the services.

We had a meeting for men only on Saturday night, for which we had distributed 30,000 tickets. Ours is a very large place to fill, and it needs an earthquake to move the people.

Our people are all very poor, the work being situated in a locality needy in spiritual and material things alike. Some of your readers may be inclined to aid us in the fight.

OUR VILLAGES.

In connection with the Bucks Evangelistic Mission, another new hall has been opened in a most needy district as the outcome of a visit of the Gospel carriage some time since, when great interest was awakened, and large numbers gathered round to hear the Gospel sung and preached. The opening meetings were of the deepest interest, and the hall, though a good size for the village, was not half large enough to hold the many who gathered from the neighbourhood. Messrs. William Luff, J. Clark, A. Austin, J. E. Taylor, and others gave addresses. The children had a free tea and a meeting all to themselves in the open air, which was followed by a public tea and meetings afterwards, when much interest was shown by all. Students from Dr. Guinness and a brother from the Congo will be helping in the work, and we look for great things this winter.

The new hall will be used as a reading-room, &c. There is no place in the neighbourhood but the public-houses for the many young men. Many hundreds of men at work on the new railway are not far off, and we long to be able to reach them with the Gospel. Drunkenness goes on to a great extent. Would that persons of some means would take up some of these needy and dark places where there are so many open doors.

Will any of your readers help us towards more seats, tables, and a small organ for the new hall, or for the work at large? We ask prayer for the work which has been going on for over thirty years in Bucks and adjoining counties with great blessing. One worker alone takes about thirty villages and hamlets with Bibles and books, &c., preaching daily to all, often the only witness for God the people see or hear.

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.

It is with pleasure we record our thirteenth safe return from the hop-yards of Worcester and Hereford. On account of the large crop we reached about 17,000 pickers. It is an unique experience to go as we did to a village miles away from Gospel preaching. As we visited from house to house several received the Word gladly. On leaving there we explored among the hills, and found another hamlet without the Gospel. One friend found three very marked cases of blessing, and we were all cheered by the receptive spirit.

Thus nearly five days' journey was spent when we reached a hop-yard, by visiting which we got our books into nearly every cottage in the neigbourhood. The sixth was full of hop-yard incidents by rail and road, over 1000 being reached. One Lord's day we were two parties working from centres twenty miles apart. Sad sights through drink are common, especially on the Lord's day, when many visitors came to the farm.

Our five days' drive home brought us through Worcester and roads some miles north of our way down. One morning in a small village I asked at one house if the occupant was saved. A very definite but feeling "No," was the reply. Then came a veritable break-down, and coming, I fully believe, right away to the Lord Jesus. One day, about noon, we entered a town with a main street a mile long. One of us walked up each side with handfuls of Scripture texts to distribute by the hundred, while another slowly drove up giving Gospel texts—verbally, occasionally stopping where people were numerous. In that way many hundreds must have heard. Some smiled, some frowned, and others hurried away.

RESCUE AND EVANGELISATION MISSION, SHEFFIELD.—Mr. Wm. Corbridge, superintendent, writes: "God has prospered our work during the past twelve months. Doncaster and Sunderland have been taken over as mission stations, and Rotherham reopened, after having been closed during the coal war. In the course of three years and a-half 250 girls and twenty-seven children have received help, and 85 per cent. of the cases have turned out well." The headquarters of the Mission is 250, Duke-street, Sheffield.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

Dear Sir,—John Macgregor and Gawin Kirkham, the noble men of God to whom in succession was committed for many years the chief guidance of the Open-Air Mission, have both passed away to their rest and reward.

But the great work of open-air preaching to which they gave their lives remains, and demands more than ever the sympathy and help of all who love Christ.

There remains also the huge annual increase of our urban population, visible in the great multitudes who throng the city streets and parks, and who are found at country gatherings, but who neither crowd church nor chapel, nor, in the great majority of cases, visit them at all. Too many of them are estranged from God and from the means of grace.

It is an unspeakable privilege to take to these the simple message of the love of God in Christ Jesus. And this is the task which for forty-two years the Open-Air Mission has undertaken, with what glorious results may be seen from the annual report just issued.

It is a chief object of the Mission to reach the people at races, fairs, fêtes, galas, encampments, and in hop gardens. A number of its agents are regularly employed thus throughout the year, and last year visited 743 races, fairs, etc., travelling 32,329 miles, conducting 2088 special services, and distributing 650,965 tracts.

No less than 484 towns and villages were reached in the year, and an amount of good done which cannot easily be estimated or particularised.

The committee earnestly plead for immediate and liberal help for the continued work of the Mission.—I am, faithfully yours,

William Sinclair, D.D.

THE FALL OF THE LEAF.

The wind is up, the groaning trees
Bewail their emerald crown;
The sunny eye of day grows dim,
Dark clouds are settling down.

The Summer blood that fed the flowers
Congeals in Autumn's veins—
Beauty and song must pass away
While killing Winter reigns.

Thy scenes, O dark October days,
Bring solemn thoughts to mind—
How swiftly life is gliding past,
And leaving youth behind!

A cry is heard for manhood's prime,
When heart and hand were strong;
Before life's storms had rent the soul
And hushed the voice of song.

To see earth's tender blossoms fall
Wakes many a withering grief,
For dearest friends we laid in earth,
At falling of the leaf.

Foreshadowed by approaching snows,
Forebodingly we see
The shroud that soon—yes, very soon—
Shall cover you and me.

But flowers shall in the spring rebloom,
And souls in Christ who sleep,
Arise anew in Paradise,
Where none shall die or weep.

THE "CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW."—The Fo'c's'le presented an animated scene at last week's muster of this Gospel crew. Members from Sweden, Denmark, Russia, Asia Minor, as well as Britishers, took part. Miss Child gave out the text for the month, "The unsearchable riches of Christ" (Eph. 3-8), and dwelt upon the late disasters on board the ss. Iona and Celtic King, both ships being closely identified with the work at the Welcome Home. The Celtic King had two men from the Home who were killed through coal gas explosion. Miss Child had also the pleasure of announcing the opening of a new hall in connection with the Strood branch. Stimulating addresses bearing upon the text were given by Miss Tuck, Mrs. Constantine, of Smyrna, Mrs. Morison, Messrs. W. Luff, J. Toner, and Brown.

WORK IN BUENOS AYRES.

In the year 1871-2, a party of emigrants left England for Paraguay, South America, for the purpose of forming themselves into agricultural colonies in that far-away land. Various causes combined to make the enterprise a failure. Among those who thus left England was Mr. Morris, a young Christian man with a family of three children, from the little town of Soham, in Cambridgeshire. Through fifteen years of indifference and sin in South America the conviction would often arise in the mind of the older boy of this family that some day he would become a missionary, and strong longings after God were often his experience. In 1887 in the city of Buenos Ayres he found the Saviour. From the very commencement of his Christian life he had the desire to bring others to Christ, and the conviction that he ought first to seek out the worst pressed heavily upon him. Shortly after his conversion he was employed in a large steamship company's offices situated in Buenos Ayres. When, after about three years, he left this employment to enter as partner in a firm in the city, his new business required that he should frequently visit this same Boca district, the lowest and most criminal and superstitious part of the city. The vice and godlessness weighed heavily upon his heart. The lowest dens of crime were here. The desperate character of the people was so well known that into many parts of the district the police authorities dared not go. It was well called by the natives themselves "the hell of the Argentine Republic."

Among the twelve to fifteen thousand inhabitants no evangelising agency was at work, and after much prayer Mr. Morris resolved to attempt something for this people. A building was rented for a mission hall, although no resources were in hand for expenses, and the young man had only a small salary; but God was in the work. Amid fierce Romish opposition, and after varying difficult experiences, all went well. A few friends assisted, for some time, at first, in defraying the current expenses of the work; but for years the chief worker had to assume the far greater part of the financial responsibility. As the work grew, and expenses increased, it became necessary for him to take on late night employment in order to earn additional income for the work. This he did for years, in addition to attending to business, to the great detriment of his health. Later on, regular help was received from the South American Mission of the M.E. Church.

After having given all available spare time for nearly four years to this work, while in a business which had promise of great success, the conviction asserted itself that the schools and congregations which had been so marvellously raised up in so short a time, claimed all his time and energy. After much prayer for guidance, he withdrew from business, and devoted himself wholly to this work. In March, 1895, he was ordained and became a member of the South American annual conference of the M.E. Church. Thus it came to pass that one of the outcomes of the disastrous Paraguayan colonisation scheme was the founding, by Mr. W. C. Morris, of the Boca Mission, through which about 500 children have been gathered into day and Sunday schools. Of these many are living intelligent Christian lives. More than 200 older persons have come to a personal knowledge of the Saviour. More than two-thirds of these, both children and adults, are natives.

The Boca Mission property has a debt of £1500, which must be paid off at once. The work has extended beyond the accommodation of the present buildings; these will be devoted wholly to evangelistic work. Additional help is needed for the purchase of land on which to erect buildings for the two large missionary day schools (one of over three hundred native boys, the other of boys and girls of various nationalities). A building is also needed for a native girls' day school, into which could be admitted immediately two hundred girls. The native children are all of the very poorest class, gathered in from the streets. To meet all these requirements, and in other ways to develop the work, from eight to ten thousand pounds are needed. From the schools and congregations many young people will go forth as missionaries to their fellows and to the surrounding countries. Out of their poverty the native people give liberally.

Mr. Morris will be glad to send further information about the work. He will also be pleased to address drawing-room meetings or public gatherings in the metropolis, or in provincial towns, as may be desired. He may be addressed 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

CHAMBERI MISSION, MADRID.

Mr. A. R. Fenn, recalling the recent acquisition of land near the mission premises, writes:—"To free us from such annoyances and great inconveniences as those to which we have been subjected, it is of the utmost importance that the plot and buildings at present rented should also be secured by purchase, as they are absolutely necessary for our Gospel work, and for the continuance of the Girls' School which has existed there for seven years. The price asked is 6000 dollars (£1200). For this, we, seeing its importance for future work in Madrid, are now praying, and we lay it before the Lord's people for faith, prayer, and effort.

"We praise God that in view of this development and our retirement from loved service in Madrid, He has at length cleared the way for Mr. and Mrs. Faithfull to take up the responsibilities and direction of this work for which they are so well fitted, from October next, and we earnestly ask prayer for them that God would work mightily by his Spirit in and through them and their fellow-labourers in the mission. As to ourselves, for the sake of friends who do not already know, we would say that our only reason for leaving Madrid is the low and suffering state of my health and that of Mrs. Fenn, which has long demanded rest, with some appropriate means of restoration, in England."

Mr. Arthur Boake, Southwood Lawn, Highgate, N., is treasurer of the purchase fund.

LOVEDALE, SOUTH AFRICA.

On the last Sunday of the session it is the custom to administer the communion to the church members at Lovedale, to receive new members, and to baptize any who may be considered fit. I have just witnessed this interesting ceremony. The large hall in the institution, holding nearly 700, was comfortably filled, many races being represented. The girls being arranged on the left hand of the preacher, and the boys on the right hand, while the members were in the body of the hall; those who were to be received into membership, and those to be baptized, were seated in the front benches. The organ was presided over by a native, and the singing, which was in Kaffir, was of a hearty character. A very appropriate sermon was delivered by Rev. J. Lennox, from the text, "Christ receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." This was interpreted into Kaffir by a theological student, who had just finished his three years' course of training.

At the close of the first service Dr. Stewart rose to address those who were seeking baptism, and impressed on them that it was not baptism or the communion that had saving power. Rev. T. Durant Philip spoke to those about to be received into membership, from the words "Let no man take thy crown." Afterwards the Lord's Supper was observed, unfermented wine being used. The occasion provoked many reflections. Various peoples were uniting and owning one Lord and Saviour. What possibilities of influence lay in the power of each, should they acquit themselves well in the great fight of faith! The service seemed a faint prelude to that great and glorious day when not only will every tribe from Africa be represented, but every tribe from every continent will join in the grand chorus, "Worthy is the Lamb."

Sunday week was a memorable day in the Lovedale native church; sixty-two natives were baptized by Dr. Stewart, many of the candidates coming from the out-stations, and not a few were from raw heathenism. During his address, Dr. Stewart referred to the fact that seventy years ago there was not a Christian to be found in the valley.

ROMAN CATHOLIC LOTTERIES.—Mr. A. H. Guinness, of the Protestant Alliance, has called the attention of the Postmaster-General to the fact that books of tickets in respect of a lottery in aid of a Roman Catholic institution in Dublin, have been circulated by the post. The Postmaster-General has declared, in reply, that no change has been made in the regulations laid down by his predecessor, that such circulars should be stopped when found in the post in open covers.

ATROCITIES IN TRANS-CAUCASIA.

We have received the following communications from a reliable source:—

Recently most cruel atrocities have been perpetrated against inoffensive members of the "Dukhobortzi" (a sect resembling the Friends), which atrocities have caused great sensation and called forth much comment here in Caucasia. About twenty men of the army, belonging to the Dukhobortzi, in the provinces of Elisabethpol and Karsk, went to the authorities and asked to be delivered from the military service, returning the weapons (rifles), and declaring that Christ's command to love all men forbade them to use weapons of murder. They were brought before the court of justice and sentenced to the "disciplinary battalion," where they often are maltreated to death.

After this incident several thousand Dukhobortzi of the army took their arms and burnt them. This was considered as revolt, and Cossacks were sent against them. These made several attacks on the defenceless crowd, and the horses of the Cossacks trampled four men and one woman to death, and, besides, several scores of the crowd were maimed. Thereupon the whole crowd was driven by the Cossacks to the Governor of Tiflis, the capital of Caucasia, who began asking the men of the militia if they were willing to fulfil their military duties. Having received negative replies from three of them, these were ordered to be flogged. The others, seeing the cruel treatment of their comrades, came forward, seventy in number, and threw their "military passports"* at the feet of the Governor. They were flogged day after day, for several days. As this did not help, the Dukhobortzi were banished to different Georgian villages in three different districts, from two to three families to each village, where they were transported in large carts or wagons. They received no land or shelter, but must live under the open sky by their carts. Their homes, harvests, and belongings have been lost.

In this way about 5000 Dukhobortzi have been scattered in different provinces of Trans-Caucasia. In the province of Elisabethpol 115 Dukhobortzi were thrown into prison, where they are sitting almost naked, their own clothes having been taken from them, and they refusing to wear prisoners' clothes. Articles and notices about all this, which have appeared in some Russian papers, have been conformed to the Censure.

NOTES FROM KENTUCKY.

A correspondent at Louisville, Ky., writes:—

The "Grand Army of the Republic," composed of the surviving soldiers of the Civil War, had its annual encampment (the twenty-ninth) here this year, beginning September 10. The leading cities of the United States vie with one another in efforts to secure the presence of this organisation. The ranks of the Grand Army are being thinned rapidly by death. About 10,000 died last year, I am informed. The interest which the survivors feel in these annual reunions is shown by the fact that they come together from all the States, even the most remote. Louisville made great preparations for their entertainment.

The liquor question here has undergone no change. There are between 800 and 900 drinking saloons in Louisville, and hitherto but little effect has been made by the attacks of the temperance and total abstinence people. The large coloured population imitate the whites in drinking as well as in other things. Gambling, too, is very common, and they often risk and lose their small earnings in the gambling-house. The coloured people have been provided by the State with as good schools as the whites have, and there are many coloured Churches.

The detachment of the Salvation Army here holds its ground. Not long ago a Presbyterian minister presented them with a United States flag.

CHELSEA PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE HOMES.—In the ninth annual report, particulars are given of sad cases of waywardness and it consequences. This kind of work has peculiar anxieties and not so many friends as its urgency demands. The secretary is Miss M. S. Burch, 3, Norman-street, Chelsea, S.W.

Letter to the Editor.

DEFECTIVE PREACHING.

DEAR SIR,—It has been pointed out that there must be some serious defect in the preaching of these days, inasmuch as it does not appear to interest the masses, but is regarded rather with indifference and apathy. The tone of it was well expressed in a recent issue in one sentence, "We have told men even unto satiety that if they will only come to God happiness will be their portion," and this is a fitting description of the aim of the majority of evangelistic addresses, but men will not come to God; they do not care; they rather show that they are sick of the whole thing.

It is said that the keynote of much of our preaching has been pitched too low, and that the claims of God have been greatly overlooked. Recognising the existence of the chief reasons for the neglect of the Gospel, such as the innate evil and enmity of the human heart, the attractive power of the world, and the snares of Satan, it is thought that, in addition to these, our way of presenting the Gospel is defective, in that the majesty of God and his rightful sovereignty are not adequately set forth. Probably there are few thoughtful Christians who will not agree with this view.

But is it not also true that we have neglected to appeal to a most powerful motive in our pleading with sinful men, the motive of fear? The goodness and mercy of God have been urged, as has been said, "to satiety;" have we equally warned men of the wrath of God? It is scriptural to do so. The Epistles are addressed to believers, and we cannot expect to find many references in these to the consequences of incurring the anger of the Almighty; but wherever we find in the New Testament an address to the unconverted we see that they are moved to fear. The Acts of the Apostles afford many instances of this, as in chapter ii., 43; iii. 13-15; vii. 51-53; x. 42; xiii. 40, 41; xvii. 31, etc. Reading the appeals in these passages, one wonders how our addresses would be received if they were given after these models; they would at least be listened to.

Having heard the Gospel preached for sixty years, and comparing the manner in which the truth is presented in these days with the sermons of that distant time, I gladly recognise many and great improvements in our present modes; but I cannot help being impressed with this also, that that which the Apostle Paul employed as his chief argument, and which was a powerful motive in the preaching of our fathers, is an argument rarely used now, "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." Modern preachers seem to be afraid to make mention of hell in the pulpit; yet we find it alluded to in Scripture nowhere so often as from the lips of our blessed Lord Himself.

If we are to move men to consider their state and their prospects, we must bring to bear every motive available, and therefore it is reasonable, as well as Scriptural, that we should seek to bring them to godly fear. When we realise the peril of the impenitent sinner, is it not strange that we have been so mealy-mouthed in regard to his danger? Let us adopt the example of our Lord, and not shun to speak of the fearful punishment awaiting the guilty; let us use the same motive as the Apostle Paul, and persuade men as those who know the terror of the Lord, and then assuredly we will be listened to.—Yours truly, G.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me a little space to call attention to a lack in the preaching of to-day? The voice of man has been heard long enough in ten-minute sermons: let God speak. Shall we, to whom is entrusted the Word of God, hold back when it is our duty to warn men, and in the name of their Creator and Sovereign to command them to repent?' Shall we wait until the sword of the Lord is fallen? or, shall the watchman cry as did the prophet to Nineveh?

Surely the storm of his anger is gathering over our land. How like are we to Israel in that we have multiplied abominations, and our sin is as theirs. "The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great, and the land is full of perverseness: for they say, 'The Lord hath forsaken the earth, and the Lord seeth not.' And as for me also, mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity, but I will recompense their way upon their head." (Ezek. ix. 9, 10.)

We have become accustomed to think of Christ as the Healer, rather than as the Son of Man that hath power upon earth to forgive sin. We forget that God has been outraged by us; that we have failed to glorify Him, and must sue for pardon. God has rights as well as we have. Let us gratefully acknowledge them.

"Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest He be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him." "Flee from the wrath to come."—Yours in Him,

HOWARD T. N. USSHER.

THE BASIS OF CHRISTIAN UNITY.

DEAR SIR,—The letter in THE CHRISTIAN of September 26, on "Church Government and Christian Unity," if well and prayerfully considered by all true Christians, must do good. It will lead us to seek for the place where unity is to be found, and not to try to build it upon a wrong foundation. Our Saviour's words about unity and love among Christians ought to make us long earnestly for them, for it is to be by means of a united and loving Christian church "that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me," and "that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me" (John xvii. 20-23, also John xiii. 34, 35).

But on what foundation are we to be united? and where should the dividing line come? "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. iii. 2). "He that hath the Son hath life: and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (1 John v. 12). "He that believeth on Him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God" (John iii. 18).

The dividing line ought therefore to run clear and plain between those who believe in Christ, and those who do not. This is God's division. How long are we, as Christ's body on earth, going to allow this line to be hidden from the world, and make or keep to, other lines which are not God's making, but our own? God's dividing line is hidden where believers appear to the world to be more at one with the unbelievers connected with their own denomination, than with the believers connected with other denominations.

What ought we to do? Paul throws light on this when he writes to the Ephesians, "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all" (Eph. iv. 3-6). Shall not we, as Christ's followers, earnestly try for this oneness? "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit" (Eph. vi. 18). "Striving according to his working, which worketh in [us] mightily" (Col. i. 29). Thus our Saviour's prayer for us and for the world may be answered now, "That they all may be one, as Thou Father art in Me, that they also may be one in Us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me" (John xvii. 20, 21).

In heaven we must and shall be one, on earth we ought to be. It is only on earth that oneness with our fellow Christians can glorify God by leading the world to see and believe in Christ as the Son of God. I pray that this subject may be laid on the hearts of all earnest Christians, even as it was on the heart of our Lord and Master, when He offered his last earthly prayer for his followers. Let us not tremble and shrink at the difficulties in the way of this unity; what are difficulties where our God is concerned? Let us compare them with Him, and say, "With God all things are possible."—Yours truly, (MRS.) A. M. C. WILSON.

CONVALESCENT HOMES.

SIR,—Some time since an application was made to a convalescent home on the south coast to admit a lad of fourteen years of age; it was refused because none were admitted under sixteen. The chaplain said it was a sad fact, but, as far as he knew, there was scarcely a home in the United Kingdom where lads of from thirteen to sixteen are admitted.

There are a number of "children's" homes which admit up to twelve, and adult homes admitting men over sixteen, but between these ages no lad, however much he requires the benefits of such a place, is able to obtain admission. No one will deny that lads require such institutions quite as much as those of tenderer or more mature years. There are, perhaps, difficulties in the way which would not arise in dealing with either younger or older persons, but surely these can be overcome.

There are, I am sure, many who will do their best to remedy this defect.—I remain, Sir, REVIVAL IN GLASGOW.

A BLESSED work of grace has been experienced at Partick, near Glasgow. The Hillhead Baptist Church (Rev. F. H. Robarts, pastor) recently erected large mission halls at Partick, where they have been working for many years, and the opening was inaugurated by a special four weeks' mission. Mr. William Thomson, evangelist, was asked to conduct the mission, and the results have truly been beyond all we asked or thought.

Mr. Thomson preaches the Gospel with the aid of limelight, taking such subjects as "The Pilgrim's Progress," "The Day of Atonement," "The Passover," "Paul's Shipwreck," etc., and the power of God was manifestly with him from the beginning. There were Bible-readings at 3 o'clock for Christians, schoolboys' and schoolgirls' meetings at 5.30, and meetings for adults at 8. Your space would not permit a detailed account of the work; suffice it to say that hundreds were dealt with personally.

The mission closed by a meeting of the converts over a cup of tea, and a blessed time it was. Mr. Thomson presided, and gave a most helpful address to the young converts, as did also the pastor, Mr. Robarts, Mr. Rae, the superintendent of the mission, and others. We are arranging for a meeting of the children on an early day. All who have had the privilege of assisting Mr. Thomson have been greatly blessed, and the prayers of many follow him to Ireland, where he is conducting a mission at Blackrock, near Dublin. J. H. MCCLURE.

MR. C. INGLIS AT THE POLYTECHNIC.

THROUGHOUT August and September, Mr. C. Inglis has been preaching at this well-known centre of activity. Although these months are considered about the most difficult for getting people into buildings, overflowing congregations have been drawn together, on the Sunday nights especially, to hear the Gospel. One of the cheering sights in these audiences was to see the hundreds of young men and women following the preacher attentively in his searching appeals. We have several times had Mr. Inglis with us before, but perhaps on no former visit has he been so much blessed as during this present one. His addresses have been marked with great power, and those on "Sin," "Christ Outside," and "The Doom of Nineveh," will long be remembered. Eternity alone will reveal the extent of the blessing received.

The Lord's people have taken a great interest in the Bible lectures on "Old Testament Characters," and the hall has been filled to the Thursday meetings, while to some the Bible has become a new book.

Miss Inglis and others have sung new American solos, and the truth in song has been blessed to not a few. Mr. Inglis is spending the winter on this side of the Atlantic, and would be glad of the prayers of the Lord's people for the evangelistic work he has before him during the next few months. A. V.

NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS.—This congress opened on Monday night at Preston. At a conversazione General Sir Robert Phayre welcomed representatives from England, Ireland, Scotland, and France. The subject for the opening meeting, over which General Phayre presided, was "The Holy Catholic Church." Mr. D. M. Drysdale, of Liverpool, spoke on the foundation, Dr. Kane, of Belfast, on the unity, and Mr. W. R. Lane, of London, on the indestructibility, of the Church of Christ.

EVENING RECREATIVE LECTURES.—In addition to the usual work of Bible-classes, social evenings, educational classes, etc., the London Y.W.C.A. are arranging for lectures with lime-light illustrations, to be given at a number of centres. The design of these lectures is to bring fresh interest to bear upon literature, art, and history, our museums, and our picture galleries. The titles are given in the new prospectus, of twenty-four lectures of an informal and unconventional kind, to be delivered by Miss Graham and other ladies. The prospectus, which contains much other useful information, can be obtained from the Secretary, Y.W.C.A., 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

OBITUARY.

REV. DR. STUART RUSSELL.

THE death is announced of Rev. J. Stuart Russell, D.D., a well-known Congregational minister. He began pastoral work over fifty years ago, and held charges at Edmonton, Yarmouth, and Notting Hill. He was the author of a book maintaining the belief that Christ's Second Advent took place at the destruction of Jerusalem.

REV. A. MCKENNA.

It is with much regret we record the death of that veteran and much-esteemed missionary of the Baptist Missionary Society, Rev. A. McKenna, of Soory, Beerbhoom, Bengal, which took place in Calcutta, on August 7, after forty years' devoted labour in India. His medical attendant, Dr. Crombie, being of opinion that the only hope of recovery was a speedy departure to sea and a temperate climate, Mr. McKenna was arranging to leave India by the City of Vienna, but it soon became evident that this could not be. Mrs. McKenna, for whom much sympathy is felt, was with her husband in Calcutta.

BISHOP MAPLES AND REV. G. W. ATLAY.

We regret to hear of the death of Bishop Maples, who was consecrated Bishop of Likoma as recently as June last. A telegram had been received from Cape Town saying that he and a companion were drowned on September 12, in Lake Nyassa, but no particulars have yet been received. The late Bishop joined the Universities' Mission to Central Africa as missionary at Masasi in 1876. He remained there until 1883, when he went for three years to Newala. In 1886 he became missionary at Likoma Island, Lake Nyassa, and Archdeacon of Nyassa in the same year. According to the latest news from the deceased Bishop he had arrived at Chindé on August 10, on his way to the lake, which he should have reached about September 10. He was accompanied by Mr. Joseph Williams, of the Universities' Mission staff, who is believed to have been the companion referred to in Reuter's telegram as having also lost his life. It is supposed that in crossing the lake to Likoma the Bishop's boat was caught in one of those sudden squalls so frequent on the lake.

The Universities' Mission has also sustained a further loss. It is reported that Rev. G. W. Atlay, a member of the Mission staff, has been murdered on Portuguese territory. The body was recovered. Mr. Atlay was the son of the late Bishop of Hereford. He was in charge of the Mission headquarters on the island of Likoma during Bishop Marples' absence. It is surmised that he crossed over into Portuguese territory, where fighting was announced a few days ago, or else that he went to Unangu, the station recently established in Portuguese territory, about fifty miles from the lake shore, to visit Dr. Hinde, who is in charge there, and was attacked by natives either at the station or on the way thither.

REV. J. S. MORRIS.

It is with sorrow that we announce the death of Rev. J. S. Morris, for thirteen years tutor and principal of Harley College, Bow, E. Mr. Morris expired on Tuesday last, after seventeen weeks' illness, at the age of fifty-five. He was converted at the age of sixteen, began open-air preaching soon afterwards, and was trained for the ministry in the Pastors' College. He was much loved by the Harley House students, and in all parts of the world there are workers that will mourn his loss.

The funeral took place on Saturday last at Walthamstow Cemetery, being preceded by a service in Leyton Baptist Chapel, where for fifteen years Mr. Morris was the honoured pastor. Among the company filling the building were representatives from Romney-street Baptist Chapel, Westminster, where for twelve years Mr. Morris laboured before going to Leyton; members of the East London Baptist Ministers' Fraternal Union; students and deaconesses of Harley and Cliff Colleges, together with the teaching and official staff; and many members of Berger Hall, Bromley, which is a branch of the East London Institute, and of which Mr. Morris had the pastoral oversight.

The service at the chapel was conducted by Dr. Harry Guinness, and an address was delivered by Pastor Archibald G. Brown, who said that for thirty years no cloud ever hung between his heart and that of Mr. Morris. Mr. Brown said: "Mr. Morris was a constant and devout student of the Book; his Bible was his companion, guide, and final appeal. His glorious freedom from doubt was not the result of a mental fibre too coarse and dull to perceive a difficulty or feel the force of a criticism, but the result of a knowledge gained in the schoolhouse of spiritual instruction. With earthly tuition he possessed the Holy Ghost intuition. Thoroughly conversant with the trend of infidel thought, he only became the more rooted in his affection for the revelation of God."

Mr. Brown spoke of Mr. Morris as a theologian, a comrade, and a man of prayer. Among others who took part in the proceedings in the chapel and at the grave were Revs. J. Fletcher, W. Hayward, G. T. Bailey, D. Russell, F. M. Smith, and G. T. Edgley.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. W. G. Carr, of Rochester, N.Y., has returned to England, and is now holding meetings in Liverpool.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck have been paying a short visit to Rev. Sholto C. Douglas at his Scottish residence, Douglas Support.

Rev. F. B. Meyer is now entering on his fourth year of work at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road; all the agencies are in a prosperous condition.

Miss Louisa Procter, who has been on a visit to this land pleading the cause of the Schwifat Mission Schools on Mount Lebanon, returns to her field of labour on the 26th inst.

Mr. C. H. Yatman, American evangelist, has started on an evangelistic tour of the world. From Honolulu he goes to New Zealand, Australia, and thence to South Africa.

Rev. Dr. Talmage, late of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, has accepted a call to Washington, where he will act as co-pastor with the Rev. Dr. Sutherland, of the First Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Lancelot Middleton has now closed his labours at the Imperial Mission Hall, Hanley. At the farewell meeting, the deepest regret was expressed at his departure, and testimony was borne to the remarkable blessing which had attended his faithful work at Hanley.

Miss Coventry, so well known in connection with the work at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, in which she has been associated for twenty-three years, has, to the regret of the trustees, felt compelled by the state of her health to resign the direction of the women's work centering at Mildmay.

The Earl Compton has now, we are thankful to hear, quite recovered from his recent illness. It is matter for rejoicing that the affection of the eyes has not assumed the serious aspect which at one time was feared. Thus he hopes to throw himself afresh into the work of the Ragged School Union, in which he, as president, is so deeply interested.

The Late Rev. Canon Hoare left a brief but interesting autobiography, which his family have requested Rev. Dr. Townsend, of Tunbridge Wells, to edit. Added to this will be a sketch of his youth and college days, with extracts from his correspondence, and some chapters upon his career at Tunbridge Wells. The volume will be issued before Christmas.

Rev. Mojola Agbebi, of Yoruba Land, West Africa, has been for a short time in London attending meetings arranged by friends, where he has spoken of Yoruba Land and of his work. He is returning to his own land, taking with him, as industrial missionaries and as missionaries of the Colwyn Bay Institute, Rev. E. J. and Mrs. Ricketts, formerly of the Congo-Balolo Mission.

Rev. D. Burford Hooke, who has been on a visit to South Africa as a deputation from the Colonial Missionary Society, arrived in London on Saturday morning after an absence of several months. He has visited during the time most of the native and European Congregational churches in Cape Colony, Natal, Transvaal, and Bechuanaland.

STORM IN JAPAN.

REV. A. B. HUTCHINSON, of Fukuoka, Japan, writes on August 22:—"On July 24, a terrible storm from the Pacific struck our coasts, and did a vast amount of damage. 15,000 houses were blown down in the Fukuoka Province and sixty lives lost; happily not a single Christian was killed. Our beautiful church at Uyamada was entirely wrecked. The poor people are nearly paralysed by this misfortune. They have rescued the usable woodwork and tiles, and wonder now when they shall ever see a church again. It will cost about £30 to rebuild on a smaller scale, and all they can give is their labour. I hope some special help may be given to us in this trial."

Any help will be gladly received by Miss Mackenzie, 4, Cotham-road, Bristol.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

South Leith, N.B.—Mr. J. Albinson's mission at the Spurgeon Memorial Temple has been blessed. He began a mission in Edinburgh on October 1, and asks for earnest prayer.

The Midland Bible Carriage, which has been working at Skegness during the summer season, has this week returned to Nottingham. During the Goose Fair some hundreds of Testaments and other Gospel books were distributed. Great interest was shown in the meetings held.

Ireland.—Evangelistic services, extending over three weeks, have been held at Coolbanagher, Mount Mellick, by Rev. G. L. Webster and others. Several professed decision for Christ. An open-air mission has been held by Mr. S. G. Montgomery for the last three weeks in Ballymacarrett, Belfast. Large numbers professed conversion, and at one of the meetings 179 total abstinence pledges were signed.

Mission to Men.—The special mission to men, conducted last week by Mr. T. A. Bailey, late secretary Cork Y.M.C.A., in connection with the Omagh Y.M.C.A., has been followed by evidences of blessing. Striking cases of conversions are reported, and Christian young men testify strongly to being greatly strengthened and helped by Mr. Bailey's pointed addresses. Showers of blessing have indeed descended.

Cheam, Surrey.—Much blessing has attended a five days' mission conducted by Mr. Newton Jones, at Cheam Baptist Chapel. From the first the power of God was manifest. The meetings were well attended, and on the last night the chapel was found to be far too small to accommodate the people. Both old and young have professed conversion, and a rich blessing has been received by Church and Sunday-school. C. A. F.

Mr. Ring Lambert has closed a successful season in Bedfordshire, where he has been working with one of the Evangelization Society's tents. He has visited the villages of Clifton, Arlesley, Langford, Henlow, and the town of Biggleswade, at each of which successful missions were held. On Sundays the tent was packed, and hundreds were unable to get in. Many tokens of the Master's presence were seen. God's people were stirred, and many testified to having been turned from darkness to light.

RICHARD BRADSHAW.

Boston, Lincs.—A two months' mission, in the large marquee of the Evangelistic Mission, has been concluded by Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims. As the mission advanced, the interest deepened, and at the farewell services from 3,000 to 4,000 gathered to a service in the Market-square, and at the closing meeting the capacious tent was packed to its utmost capacity, and many hundreds were standing outside and in. One pleasing feature of the mission has been the constant attendance of the ministers of the various chapels, and the leading mission workers of the town. Many have confessed Christ, of all classes of the community, and the whole Church has been quickened. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have closed a fortnight's fruitful services in the parish of Newbattle, Midlothian. Their centre of operation was the Free Church, where there were crowded meetings every evening. To reach the population, which is chiefly mining, they conducted services in the afternoon in the surrounding villages. The weather was specially favourable for open-air work, and, with a large band of earnest Christian workers, this was nightly taken advantage of before the evening service. The earnest, rousing heart appeals, both in speech and song, were accompanied by the Divine power, and many were found at the close of the services seeking the way of salvation. We believe that their visit to us will, in the lives of many, bear fruit unto holiness with the end everlasting life.

F.C. Manse, Newbattle. A. HARDIE, Minister.

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS. — The monthly muster was held at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's headquarters, in St. George-street, London Docks, on Thursday last. Rev. G. J. Hill, read most interesting letters from Christian seamen telling of their efforts to win their shipmates to the Saviour. He also gave a brief account of the recent visits to the Society's coast stations by Mrs. Hill and himself, in the course of which he referred to the conversion of an Irish sailor who had helped last year to stone the open-air preachers at Cork, and for this he feared he could not be forgiven. When told of Saul of Tarsus, who held the clothes of those who stoned Stephen to death, he asked who Saul was, as he had never heard of him, neither had he ever read the Bible! Addresses were also given by Rev. E. T. Beckett (Pastors' College), several Christian seamen, and other friends. A large muster of the Christian Harbour Lights was held the same evening at the Sailors' Rest, Whitehaven, and was addressed by Rev. J. M. Brown, late of the West Coast of Africa.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Culcaney (Hillsboro', co. Down), a new Association, has been admitted to the Irish Union.

Mr. W. R. Lane intends holding shortly missions in Dublin, Ballymena, and Waterford.

Mr. Samuel G. Montgomery is to hold a mission for men only in Cork, from November 10 to 22.

A conference of the Mid-Ireland District Union will be held in Dublin, on Thursday, October 24.

During this month Mr. McCann visits Cork, Tralee, Limerick, Curragh Camp, Tinahely, and Dublin.

The workers in the Association at Sheffield are greatly encouraged by the general outlook of the work there for the winter.

The Tralee Association has been crowded out of their rooms during the summer months, and they are negotiating for larger premises.

The annual report of the Cork Y.M.C.A. states that nine years ago the Association was started with nine members, and that now 374 young men are upon the rolls.

The Y.M.C.A. stationary camp at Duffield, Derbyshire, organised in the summer, in connection with the North Midland District, proves to have been a complete success.

The opening reception of the Richmond (S.W.) Association was attended by between eighty and ninety young men, who were addressed by Mr. Algernon C. P. Coote.

In connection with the Exeter Association a Bible-class, specially designed for Sunday-school teachers, is held on Friday evenings at 8.15. The teacher is Mr. W. Taylor-Smith, M.A.

Missionary Parliaments are now held with admirable results in connection with many Associations, and not a few have been the means of thrusting forth labourers into the mission field.

Out of the thirty young missionaries recently studying the Chinese language at the Nankin College, it was found that twenty-four were formerly members of English Y.M.C.A's.

A new association has been formed at Greyfriars House, Gloucester. The secretary, Mr. Edgar P. Garrett, late of Newport, Mon., would be thankful for gifts of books for the library.

The Folkestone Y.M.C.A. has just held a special meeting for the purpose of taking farewell of its secretary, Mr. Alex. Reid. Dr. John Murray, president of the Association, occupied the chair.

Mr. A. K. Yapp, general secretary of the Derby Y.M.C.A., is arranging for this month a "membership campaign," by which he hopes to increase the number of members in his Association from the present figure of 600 to over 1000.

At Stafford Rooms, to commence the session, Professor Gladstone welcomed a large gathering of young men from the neighbouring houses of business, and an address was delivered by Rev. H. E. Stone, of Abbey-road Baptist Church, St. John's Wood.

The Upton Park Association held its opening conversazione under the presidency of Mr. Carte, and Mr. W. H. Mills, secretary of the National Council, gave an address. The Stratford male choir, under the leadership of Mr. Fox Butlin, took part in the proceedings.

Burton-on-Trent annual meeting was held last week, and passed off very successfully. The national work was represented by Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., and the world-wide work by the founder, Sir George Williams, to whom a very cordial welcome was extended.

The Manchester Association gave a gymnastic display on the 30th ult., in the large hall of its own building. Mr. W. J. Crossley, president, occupied the chair, and the various class prizes were distributed by the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress, and the Mayor of Salford.

The record of the Bristol Y.M.C.A. for last year in all departments has been highly successful, and in none has this been more apparent than in the youths' section. Nor is there to be any slackening this winter, as the promising programme just issued clearly shows. The new session has been inaugurated with an enthusiastic meeting. The Association has completed a number of improvements in the premises in St. James's-square, assigned to the youths' department; and these have been formally inaugurated this week, Mr. S. T. Joy presiding. Mr. Frank W. White is specially set apart as general secretary of the junior work, which is in a very flourishing condition. The Bible lecture delivered weekly during the winter season by Rev. F. B. Meyer, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, maintains its popularity. On the resumption of this fixture on Saturday last, more than 200 young men were present. The subject for Saturday next (3 to 4 o'clock sharp) is, "The Triumph of Gideon." All young men, whether members or not, are warmly invited to be present.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The C.E. societies of Montclair, N.J., conduct services in the Mountainside Hospital each Sunday.

The Y.P.S.C.E. of the Presbyterian Church and the Epworth League of the Methodist Church in Hobart, N.Y., have held fruitful Union services.

At a recent convention the Tiffin Endeavourers reported the taking of a religious census, as a result of which between thirty and fifty people were induced to attend church.

Some of the Endeavourers of the Elliot Congregational Church, Roxbury, Mass., have started evangelistic work with a Gospel waggon. Successful meetings have been held.

One of the Christian Endeavour societies of Houston, Texas, holds weekly services in the jail. Conversions have resulted, and the Endeavourers get inspiration for their own meeting.

A public convention in connection with the Y.P.S.C.E. was held in the Richmond-hill Congregational Church, Bournemouth, on Wednesday, September 25. Rev. W. Knight Chaplin opened the afternoon, conference, and gave an effective address in the evening. About a dozen societies were represented at the meeting.

Visitors to Eastbourne this past summer will have heard the services held on the beach by a band of young people belonging to the Y.P.S.C.E. at Ceylon-place Baptist Chapel. Nothing has been given there save the simple Gospel of "death by sin" and life by the atoning substitutionary death of Christ, and yet crowds have assembled every Sunday. Ministers, evangelists, visitors, and residents have all helped to swell the chorus, and souls have been saved and believers quickened. A. R. Pearce, Leader.

Tuesday, September 24, was an important day for the mission work of the Y.P.S.C.E. at West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth. The members of the society have undertaken to support a Bible-woman to work in Calcutta, under the direction of Miss Way, of the Baptist Zenana Society, and a sale of work, and an exhibition of missionary curios was held to aid the fund. At 8 o'clock, Mr. Frampton presided at the public meeting, at which addresses were given by Miss Wakefield, going out to Agra to be the wife of Mr. Hale, the missionary supported by the church, and Miss Way, who gave an interesting account of the kind of work in which the Bible-woman will be engaged. The word of farewell was spoken by Pastor Geo. Wainwright, and Mr. R. C. Morgan committed the outgoing missionaries to God in prayer.

A PRAYER.

"I will not leave you comfortless, I will come unto you."

Come in the dawning of the day:
Ere earthly cares distract,
Diffuse thy sanctifying power,
Thro' thought and word and act;
Before I mingle with the crowd
In workshop or in mart,
Come, Holy Spirit, and possess
This wayward treach'rous heart.

Come in the splendours of the noon:
When life's tide swiftly flows,
May I, in midst of toil and care,
In Thee find sweet repose;
When troubled, tried, perplexed, and pained,
Be Thou my guard, my guide,
And bind me with the cords of love,
Close to my Saviour's side.

Come when the sombre shadows fall
Across the darkening world;
Come when against "the shield of faith"
The "fiery darts" are hurled.
Come when the sad and silent tears
Flow through the long, long night,
At "evening-time" of care and grief
Speak, and "it shall be light"!

Should e'er my footsteps turn aside
In paths of sin and pain,
Then still the tempest in my soul,
And call me back again,
To tread with worn and bleeding feet
The paths of peace and rest—
To lay once more this weary head
Upon my Saviour's breast.

Without Thee, I am poor and blind,
Helpless, and prone to sin;
With Thee, the blessed peace of God
Shall reign my soul within.
Come Thou in sickness and in health,
In joy and sorrow come,
In life, in death, to me draw near,
And make my heart thy home.

Ernest Rickman,

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Dr. Herdman, of Melrose, has attained the jubilee of his ministry.

Large and helpful meetings for the deepening of spiritual life have been held in Dundee in connection with the Y.W.C.A.

Mr. J. B. Wookey has visited Glasgow with his band of musical boys in the interests of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. He gave an effective lantern lecture in the Christian Institute.

The published report of the Edinburgh Wesleyan Mission is a most encouraging record. Under the ministrations of Rev. George Jackson the mission is a great power for good in the city.

The Evangelical Union of Scotland in its annual Conference, at Glasgow, last week, voted by 129 votes to forty-three in favour of organic amalgamation with the Congregational Union of Scotland.

The members and friends of the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. had a meeting last week to bid farewell to Mr. Charles Shirreffs, and to welcome the new secretary, Mr. W. Henderson. A purse of 400 guineas was presented to Mr. Shirreffs, and there were many warm expressions of gratitude for the services he had rendered to the Association these last twenty-one years.

The annual conversazione last week, at Falkirk, in connection with the United Christian Fellowship Association was a most enjoyable occasion. Thirteen associations in the town were represented, and the cause of Christian unity is much helped by its quarterly meetings. At the gathering of last week admirable addresses were given by Lord Overtoun, Sheriff Scott-Moncrieff, Dr. Stalker, Rev. W. A. Walton, Ex-Provost Macpherson, and others.

The following movements of missionaries in connection with the Established Church of Scotland Women's Association for Foreign Missions fall to be noticed. Miss Plumb, who returns to Sialkot after furlough, intends sailing on October 31, in the Branksome Hall, for Bombay. Miss Kesting, who has been appointed missionary of the Women's Association to Poona, sailed for Bombay in the Caledonia on October 4, and Miss Paterson, who has been appointed in Calcutta, sailed in the City of Vienna on October 9. The two last named go out to the Mission-field for the first time; and all are commended to the prayers of God's people.

SMYRNA SAILORS' REST.

The new report states that during last year nearly ten thousand sailors visited the Rest, and 1257 attended the meetings. Scriptures and Gospel books were distributed, and blue ribbon pledges taken. Narrating proceedings during the spring and the present year, the report says:—"Before the stay of the fleet in Smyrna was ended, we rejoiced over many lost ones found, and our hearts were full of praise to Him 'who alone doeth great wonders.' Since their departure a letter came from a young signalman, himself blest here, telling of his mate also accepting Christ. A friend from another ship writes of two more: 'Both are following on so eagerly, though the last few days one of them was in a perfect hurricane of abuse and blasphemy; but, praise the Lord, his faith is only strengthened, and he sees from what a pit he has been dragged.' Rev. G. Grubb visited these shores by invitation during the stay of the fleet in Smyrna, and was much used of God both in building up the Christians and in blessing to those outside the kingdom."

Regarding the work among the Greeks, we read:—"The Wednesday meeting and the services and prayer meetings held by Rev. X. P. Moschou at the American mission Church, have been more or less well attended, and a good many strangers come to hear the Gospel, besides some who, in years gone by, used to attend the preaching service in the Evangelical Hall. A man, after listening to the story of our Lord's life on earth, said, 'I gave up twenty plans I had for my own life, and resolved to live according to the will of God, as the Saviour did.' Other tokens of encouragement have been given, and we know that much seed is as yet hidden in hearts, only to spring up and bear fruit to his glory some day."

Communications regarding the Rest may be addressed to Colonel Morton, Conference Hall, Mild may Park, London, N.

IRELAND.—During the autumn fair at Ballinasloe, which lasted through the week, commencing on Sunday, September 29, a series of special meetings were held with most cheering success. The meetings were held in Harpur's Hall, and the local Christians, as well as those from a distance, supported Mr. Pratt, who had been invited from the North of Ireland to preach. It has been arranged to hold the meetings every year at the same period and same place.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. W. H. Barlow, B.D., Rural Dean of Islington, will preach at St. Paul's Cathedral next Sunday evening.

It is stated that the East London Church Fund has had to borrow £3000 in order to meet its September grants.

Rev. E. W. R. Walters, curate of Warden, has been appointed by the Lord Chancellor to Heddon-on-the-Wall, Northumberland.

Rev. E. Bigoe Bagot preached twice in connection with the Church Congress on Sunday at Norwich. He also delivered an address to the members of the Y.M.C.A.

The Church Congress opened its sittings on Monday at Norwich. There is a large attendance, and the proceedings are likely to be of varied and lively interest.

Rev. H. Webb-Smith, formerly minister of Christ Church, High Wycombe, and of Emmanuel Church, Tunbridge Wells, has been appointed vicar of Somerby, Leicestershire.

Rev. H. J. Colclough, Canon Christopher's curate at Grandpont, Oxford, has bidden farewell to his people and proceeded to enter on his new charge at St. Thomas's, Edinburgh.

Miss A. Wilson Carmichael expects to leave London on Friday, October 11, by s.s. Pekin, for Madras. Thence she will proceed to Bangalore, to work in connection with the C.E. Zenana Mission.

The incumbency of Portman Chapel, vacant by the appointment of Rev. Percival Smith to St. Margaret's, Ipswich, has been offered to Rev. Dr. Flecker, head master of Dean Close School, Cheltenham.

A number of members of the choir of St. Paul's Church, Peterborough, have resigned, as a protest against a request on the part of the vicar that they should "do obeisance to the altar" on entering and leaving the chancel.

Rev. R. R. Resker, the vicar of Purley, Surrey, has been appointed by the Committee of the Colonial and Continental Church Society to act as English chaplain at Davos-am-Platz, Switzerland during the coming winter season.

An exchange has been effected between Rev. R. Brent, vicar of Holmside, co. Durham, and Rev. M. C. Cooke, vicar of Minsterworth, Gloucester. Mr. Brent has been one of the most decided Evangelicals in the diocese of Durham.

The committee of the Medical Mission Fund of the C.M.S. have undertaken to bear the whole cost of the Society's medical missions without the usual grant of £1500 from the General Fund. They started the year with a balance in hand, but the total expenditure for the present financial year will be between £3600 and £4000.

The Queensland Church Chronicle gives a full account of Bishop Wilson's visit to the South Sea Island Mission at Bundaberg. He proposes that the schools in Queensland should be continued; that a training-school for teachers should be established in the colony; and that homes should be provided in connection with the schools in large centres.

The Sheffield Church of England Scripture Readers' Society held its annual meeting at the Church Institute last week, under the presidency of Rev. J. R. Eyre, vicar of Sheffield. Archdeacon Favell and several of the local clergy were also present. The report read by Rev. H. J. Shaw, hon. secretary, showed that the Society employed fifteen readers as against twenty-one eighteen years ago.

A company of missionaries of the American Church have left New York for China, travelling by Vancouver and the Canadian steamer Empress of Japan. The party included Bishop Schereschewsky, formerly of Shanghai, Mrs. and Miss Schereschewsky, Rev. D. T. Huntingdon, Dr. Ludlow, and others. Bishop Schereschewsky, although aged and infirm, goes out to superintend the printing of his translation of the Bible into Wen-li, the literary language of China.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. L. P. Sayles has commenced his ministry at Dronfield.

Rev. E. C. Rattray has been recognised as pastor at Westbury-on-Severn.

Dr. Newman Hall preached last week at the opening of a new chapel at Seaton, Devon.

Rev. M. Lansdown, late of Bournemouth, entered on his new charge at Tolmers-square on Sunday.

Mr. I. P. Thimann, of Cheshunt College, has been welcomed to the pastorate of Ashford Church.

Mr. Robert Sinclair, who has rendered unique service at Highbury Quadrant Chapel, is very ill, and earnest prayer is being made for his recovery.

The twenty-first anniversary of Broughton Park Chapel, Manchester, has been held. Mr. Henry Lee gave statistics showing the remarkable work which has been done.

Rev. G. Currie Martin has been welcomed at Reigate on his acceptance of the appointment of colleague of Rev. G. J. Adeney, who has held the pastorate for forty years.

Rev. J. Sheward has been recognised as pastor for the second time of the church at Milton-next-Sittingbourne, having by request resumed his former pastorate after a lapse of ten years.

Rev. Henry Davies has been recognised as pastor of Laisterdyke Church, Bradford. Several local ministers were present, and Rev. J. W. Dunne, vicar, wrote regretting his inability to attend.

At Binfield Heath Chapel (Oxon.) a good work is going on. Crowds listen to the Gospel each Sabbath, and over a hundred children are taught in the Sunday-school. To renovate the building, a sale of work was held on Wednesday last, chiefly attended by the villagers.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, on leaving St. James's Church, Newcastle, to undertake the pastorate of the late Dr. Dale's church, Carr's-lane, Birmingham, was presented at a largely attended meeting with an address, in which testimony is borne to the value of his services during a pastorate of nearly seven years.

The Dale Memorial Committee has decided that the public memorial to the late Dr. R. W. Dale should take the form of a seated statue in marble, which, when completed, will be placed in the Art Gallery. It is also intended to present a Dale medal to the Governors of King Edward's High School for competition amongst the scholars.

The Rev. J. H. Jowett, lately the pastor of St. James's Congregational Church, Newcastle, commenced his ministry at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, last Sunday. There was a crowded congregation at both morning and evening services. At the morning service Mr. Jowett preached an eloquent sermon from the words, "He hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor."

Calls.—Rev. F. Coram, to Beaminster; Rev. D. McIntosh, to Port Eroll, Aberdeen; Rev. J. Stafford, of Lambeth, to Nassington; Rev. A. T. Major, to Frampton-on-Severn.

Resignations.—Rev. Charles Pockney, assistant to Dr. Berry, of Wolverhampton; Rev. W. Harris, of Uley.

BAPTIST.

Rev. G. P. Edwards, late of Fleet, has been recognised as pastor at Gladestry.

Rev. Walter Holyoak has been recognised as pastor of Bromley-common Church.

A farewell meeting has been held in Belgrave-road Tabernacle, Leicester, in connection with the departure of Miss A. Seale, who is leaving to join the South African General Mission at Cape Town.

We regret to hear that Mrs. Pinnock, who returned with her husband, Rev. John Pinnock, from the Congo Mission about a fortnight ago in impaired health, died at Eastbourne on Sunday week. She was a native of Cameroons, West Coast of Africa.

In giving, two weeks ago, an account of the thank-offerings at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on the occasion of Rev. T. Spurgeon's return, our correspondent stated the amount received for the Tabernacle Institutions as £750. This should have been £150.

On Wednesday, Oct. 2, the ministers and delegates of the Lymington District of the Southern Baptist Association, met in the Baptist Chapel, Heatherlands, when an interesting conference was held on the subject of the Y.P.S.C.E. The evening meeting was in celebration of the third anniversary of the pastor, E. Flemington.

A meeting was held at the Mission House, Furnival-street, last week, to bid farewell to Miss Way, who is returning to her work in Calcutta, and several other ladies who are about to commence mission work. These included Miss Clare (daughter of Rev. R. B. Clare), going to Bankipore; Miss Edith Greigh ("Sister Ruth," of the Deaconesses' Home), China; Miss Edith Mannington and Miss Annie Williamson, India; and Miss Mary A. Phillips, North-West Provinces.

The work at Chelsea Chapel, S.W., is reported by Rev. John Spence as prospering. He says: "During my twenty months' pastorate in London, more than 300 persons have professed faith in Jesus as their Saviour. Often our vestry has been a vale of tears, where were heard the sobs and earnest prayers of those seeking salvation. It is about a fortnight since Miss A—— came into our chapel, weary, and worn, and sad, because of sin. At the close of our evening service I spoke to her about Jesus. Taking my hand firmly in hers, she said:—'I have given my whole life to Him this night, and I feel just as happy as I can be.'"

On Sunday evening, in the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Bloemfonfein-road, W., an address was delivered by the pastor (Rev. F. B. Monti) on "Cardinal Vaughan's Ultimatum," as reported in the Daily Telegraph for September 10. Having read extracts from the address delivered by the Cardinal, Mr. Monti dealt with four points especially. First, the re-union insisted on by Dr. Vaughan, showing that the Cardinal's Church history was entirely wrong. Rome claims headship over the churches, whereas Christ alone was recognised as head by the primitive churches. Second, the crucial point of the Cardinal's ultimatum is the acceptance of the Pope as the visible head of the Church. What this involved the preacher showed by quotations from Papal Bulls, contrasting these with New Testament teaching. In the third place the speaker showed clearly that Rome, while she wears a silken mask in this country, is absolutely unchanged and as ready as ever to re-establish the Inquisition. Finally, he proved that re-union with Rome would be all loss and no gain, closing by reading in extenso the creed of Pius IV., as indicating what Rome demands of her votaries.

Calls.—Rev. J. E. Shephard, of John-street, W.C., to George-street, Hull; Rev. F. Wynn, of Barrow-in-Furness, to Batley; Rev. Thomas Thomas, of Ruabon, to Caersalem Victoria, Ebbw Vale.

Resignations.—Rev. A. Graham, of Pembury, Tunbridge Wells; Rev. John Neighbour, of Coxwell-street, Cirencester.

METHODIST.

The anniversary of the Halifax-place Mission, Nottingham, was held on Sunday.

New chapels have been opened at Cardigan-road (Leeds), Chorley, Barrackton (Cork), Wood Lane (Hanley), and Bentley.

New chapels are being built at Heeley (Sheffield), Queensferry (Flintshire), Brightside (Sheffield), and Pits-o'-th'-Moor (Bury).

Mr. G. Hooper, the United Methodist Connexional evangelist, has conducted a most successful mission at Laister Dyke, Bradford.

Owing to his removal to Leeds, Rev. A. Holliday has had to resign his position on the School Board of Manchester, which position he held for many years.

Many will regret to hear that Rev. E. Boaden, the United Methodist Chapel secretary, is laid aside by illness. He has had to give up his public engagements for the present.

The annual convention of the Methodist New Connexion Evangelistic Union of Ministers took place last week in Nottingham. The president, Rev. H. T. Marshall, D.D., gave an address on "Aggressive Evangelism."

During the last few days a convention for the deepening of the spiritual life has been held in Preston, with remarkable results. The public hall, calculated to seat 4000 persons, was nearly full each evening, in addition to the prayer-meetings and Bible-readings.

It is now regarded as practically settled that the next president of the Wesleyan Conference will be Rev. Marshall Randles, of Didsbury College. His election to that distinguished position will be a fitting recognition of long and valued services rendered, not only in the Theological Chair, but in other important positions.

Rev. J. H. Hopkins, of the South London Wesleyan Mission, is still forbidden to take his preaching appointments. He contracted a cold some three weeks ago which produced facial paralysis. Apart from the pulpit, Mr. Hopkins is attending as usual to the business of the Mission. He is anticipating the sixth anniversary of the Mission to be held at Southwark on Sunday and Tuesday next.

Says The Methodist Times:—All who have a general knowledge of the condition of our Church in England are specially struck by the fact that we have now so many young men and young women in our congregations everywhere. Successive presidents of the Conference, in visiting different parts of the Connexion, have been strongly impressed by this hopeful fact. This seems to be the psychological moment to band these young people together for a higher devotion to Christ, for the enrichment of their own life, and for the welfare of all whom they can influence.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill is expected to visit Cardiff in December.

Rev. J. More, of Woolwich, is holding a special mission in St. John's, Tottenham.

Foundation-stones of a new chapel have been laid at Newton-on-the-Hill, Salop.

At St. James's, Alnwick, the anniversary services have been held with great encouragement.

Special services were held on Sunday and Monday, in celebration of the anniversary of Union Church, Kirkdale, Liverpool.

Rev. R. B. Crawford, of Kilmallie, will be the preacher at the bi-monthly Gaelic service next Sunday afternoon in Crown-court Church, Russell-street, Covent Garden.

Mr. H. M. Matheson, Convener of Foreign Missions, publishes latest letters received from Formosa, and adds:—"I have received a telegram from Mr. Gibson, of Swatow, that our Hakka Mission ladies have been withdrawn as a precaution, and are safe at the treaty port. In all the other parts of our field matters are quiet."

Both branches of Presbyterianism in the United States of America have published their statistics for the past year. The Northern Presbyterian Church reports 6797 ministers and 315 licentiates, 1477 students, 26,590 elders, 9058 deacons, 7490 churches, and 922,904 communicants. The accessions last year numbered 106,672; Sunday-school members, 934,733. The total contributions for all purposes were £2,794,515, an average of nearly £3 for each communicant. The Southern Presbyterian Church reports 1337 ministers, 79 licentiates, 425 students, 8481 elders, 6895 deacons, and 203,999 communicants. There were 21,162 accessions last year. The total contributions amounted to £375,025, or nearly £1 17s. each communicant.

Calls.—Rev. D. D. Williams, of Festiniog, to Oswestry; Rev. W. K. Miller, of Larges, to Dunipace; Rev. W. J. Lowrie, of Lattercrux, to Stoneykirk; Rev. R. P. Landreth, of Dundee, to West Church, Perth; Rev. E. Thomas, of Brithdir, to Llanbradach; Rev. Ambrose Williams, of Swansea to Pontrhydyfen; Rev. John Davies, of Aberavon, to Tredegar.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

A pressing request has been received to begin Army work in Barbadoes.

The work in British Guiana continues to make marvellous progress among the very lowest classes.

A cable this week from General Booth's representative announces that the proceeds of self-denial in the Australasian colonies amounts to £13,750, or £2487 more than last year's.

Two soldiers of the local corps of the Salvation Army in Rugby have gone to prison for seven days for speaking and singing in the market-place. One of them is seventy-two years old.

Reports from the provinces show that the self-denial effort has never been taken up with more spirit and enthusiasm. The headquarters' officials are hoping for a large increase in the returns.

General Booth has arrived in Tasmania; his health continues to improve, and his meetings are larger and more successful than ever. He was offered 20,000 acres of land for his Over-the-Sea Colony while in South Africa by a resident there.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth is making strenuous efforts to obtain the Home Secretary's order for the release and admission to the Rescue Homes of two young women, sentenced to penal servitude for life for the murder of their illegitimate children. Several such ex-prisoners are now sheltered in the Homes.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Bournemouth, on 25th ult., Rev. N. Jackson, formerly the minister at Richmond Hill Congregational Church.—At Harleston Lodge, Northampton, on 25th ult., Mr. Phineas Parsons, of Drayton Bassett.—At Culmstock, Exeter, Rev. A. P. Turquand, aged sixty-six, a faithful clergyman and personal friend of the late Bishop Phillpotts.—At Rochester, on 2nd inst., Rev. CONSUMPTION.

THE GRAND OLD MEDICINE OF NEARLY 70 YEARS

has maintained its position as the first medicine in all Chest Complaints.

As a preventative of mischief, it should be taken at the first appearance of Cough or Cold. As a safeguard against Influenza, and in subsequent weakness of the lungs, it has been used with wonderful results.

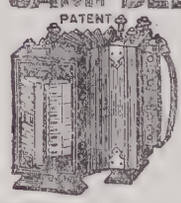
Ministers and Public Speakers have declared it to be invaluable for hoarseness, and "Splendid for the Voice."

So, also, in Asthma, it has been the means of wonderful relief.

But the renown of this celebrated medicine in all these cases has been eclipsed by its success in cases of

PHTHISIS PULMONALIS, or CONSUMPTION, Aptly called the "Scourge of England."

Interviews with patients, new and old, by Mr. Congreve's Commissioner, are published every alternate week in most of the weekly journals.



Mr. Congreve's book on Consumption and Chest Diseases may be had post free for one shilling, from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir may be had of all Medicine Vendors, or direct from the Proprietor (see the book).

"It is a book well fitted to stir up to greater zeal and activity in the Christian cause in whatever sphere God enables us to work."—Christian Work.

OLD MARGARET:

Or, A Saint at Last. By Rev. J. Elder Cumming, D.D. Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth boards, 1s. With Striking Portrait.

"Our readers will have the advantage of learning, from one who is well known as a spiritual teacher, what this 'higher life' teaching, of which we hear much nowadays, really is."—Perthshire Advertiser.

DOROTHEA TRUDEL:

Or, the Prayer of Faith. With Engraved Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"Dorothea Trudel became deeply penetrated with the striking passage of St. James, 'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' Led by circumstances to minister to the afflicted, she carried into practical action the settled conviction of her heart, and in hundreds of cases soul and body were alike healed without other visible means."—Record.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY
(The CHURCH of ENGLAND MISSION to SOUTH AMERICA).

All who desire to see the Gospel preached to the millions of Indians in South America, and are interested in the spiritual well-being of our fellow-countrymen scattered throughout that vast continent, and who also desire to see its Spanish and Portuguese speaking people brought to a knowledge of the truth, are invited to GIVE THEIR SUPPORT TO THIS SOCIETY, which sends out its Bishop and Clergy and Lay Missionaries to effect these blessed and important objects. Its work at the great ports AMONGST THE SAILORS is deeply valued.

THE MISSION BAND TO THE INDIANS OF ARAUCANIA
Now consists of a Clergyman and Three Laymen.

All who desire that this finest of all the Aboriginal races of South America should be brought to a knowledge of the Gospel of Christ, are asked to further the rapid extension of the work by their believing prayers and willing offerings. The door is open. The Leader is a tried Missionary, and the band includes a medically trained Assistant. Much blessing is anticipated through the power of God the Holy Spirit. There are other open doors the Society is waiting to enter. MEN AND MEANS ARE NEEDED.

Cheques and Money Orders should be crossed "Messrs. Barclay and Co.," and made payable to Captain E. Poulden, R.N., Lay Sec., at the Society's Offices, 1, Clifford's Inn, Fleet-street London, E.C.

Notes and Comments.

Our readers will recollect the letter which appeared in our issue of August 15 from Misses Leitch, of Ceylon, suggesting the sending of The Christian to editors of Indian papers. The responses to that suggestion, up to the present, have enabled us to supply the editors of twenty-six Indian papers, in addition to those already on our postal list. As the names of editors sent to us by Misses Leitch numbered over 150, there is much need for further help. One kind reader sent a sum sufficient to cover the annual subscription for twelve copies. Few of our readers may be able to do so much; but many, doubtless, could send one subscription (8s. 10d.), or two, or three, and so ensure the regular dispatch of the paper to leaders of the Indian secular Press, who might transfer articles from our pages for the benefit of their readers.

We are glad to see that the testimony recently borne in our columns by Mr. Charles Cook as to the disorderly condition of Hyde Park, by day and by night, is being echoed in various quarters. The Times, among other papers, has been publishing letters of protest on the subject; and The Daily Chronicle appeals to the Duke of Cambridge, as Ranger, to exercise his authority in the restoration of this splendid open space to decency and to its legitimate uses. Liberty is good if it is not allowed to degenerate into rowdy and corrupting licence. We earnestly join our contemporaries in urging the proper authorities to limit the freedom of the few, in order to secure the rational enjoyment of the many.

Whatever may be the action taken by the London County Council on the question of licensing the sale of drink in the auditorium of the Empire Music Hall and in other such buildings, there is one plain lesson to be drawn from the action of the Licensing Committee—Be ever on the watch. Last year the committee was early and influentially appealed to, and its vote obtained against the sale of drink; and the Council supported this resolution. This year, when no one is dreaming of the former policy of the Council being altered, the owners of these places of amusement come again with their requests, and are listened to, and gratified. The fight is an unequal one; the men who are making an enormous profit on the music halls—at present it is said to be 40 per cent.; when drink was freely sold it was 75 per cent.—are always ready to act; it is their business; whereas social reformers are busy with a hundred things, at which they work for nothing. Some sort of a standing-committee is evidently required.

Mr. Arthur Shadwell believes, from careful inquiry into intemperance past and present in our country, that the last sixty years form "the only period of decided and progressive improvement." Before that time there was, he thinks, a gradually developing consciousness of the evil as such; "but all efforts to check it were futile or worse, because they began from the bottom." The improvement, he believes, is mainly owing to the example of the Court. We wish we could believe with him that "Society" does not drink; that "drunkenness is a social offence among the upper classes." That there is a change for the better is allowed. And inasmuch as improvement began when the temperance movement began, it appears only reasonable to believe that improvement began at the bottom. Five millions of teetotalers, mostly of the working classes, are proof of that. Mr. Shadwell does not appear to be so familiar with temperance as with intemperance. But we do not mind at which end reform begins, if it only begins and goes on.

Oriental archæology is steadily discrediting the Higher Criticism in so far as it affects the Pentateuch. From Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, and Palestine old literatures have been unearthed; they have told of ancient civilisations, mentioned in Bible story, and their story is beginning to confound those who have been so industriously analysing the book to suit historical "reconstruction." At the Church Congress last week, Professor Sayce read a paper of great value on the latest results of monumental research; and it is gratifying to find that, intimate as the Professor is with this fascinating subject, he sees no reason to question the old (that is, the Biblical) reading of Israelitish history, that the Law preceded the Prophets, was supernatural in origin, and Divine in character. It did not, as the new teachers have alleged, come in as a result of the decay of Prophecy, and make its way through acts of deceit or fraud.

Professor Sayce was able to announce two facts that strongly confirm the historicity of the early portion of the Bible. For some years tablets have been available illustrative of the great military campaign described in Genesis xiv. Now, Mr. T. Pinches, of the British Museum, to whom Biblical and historical students are so deeply indebted, has discovered a tablet in which the name of Arioch (Eri-Aku), King of Ellasar (Larsa), is associated with Chedorlaomer (Kudur-Lagamar) the Elamite, and Tudkhal (Tidal), the other king mentioned. The proof of the historical accuracy of the narrative in this chapter, so human in its facts and so significant in its issues, is now complete.

The other fact is that in those early times Babylon was ruled by a dynasty originating in Southern Arabia. It appears from the inscriptions that the Hebrews and the tribes of Southern Arabia had a common ancestor, with a meeting point in Babylonia. In that land, in the very century to which the Bible assigns the lifetime of Abraham, men with Hebrew names were living; the name Abram is found, also Jacob and Joseph in an idiomatic combination. To this common ancestry Genesis has borne witness for thousands of years. In chapter x. we read that "unto Eber were born two sons: the name of one was Peleg," the ancestor of "Abram the Hebrew," and the name of the other was Joktan, the ancestor of the tribes of Southern Arabia. Professor Sayce reasonably asks:—"Could any better verification be needed of the truthfulness of an account which even conservative critics have been accustomed to look upon as referring, not to individuals, but to tribal relations? Or could we wish for any stronger confirmation of the statement that Abraham himself was born in 'Ur of the Chaldees'?"

Rev. J. M. Gibbon cannot safely be followed in his utterances on "propitiation," if he has been correctly reported. "Jesus Christ came as the envoy of God's sweet-naturedness, with the command, 'Be merciful.' The death of Christ benefited all mankind by its ministry of sympathetic grace, and, with his life, revealed his humanity." Sweet-naturedness is, of course, an echo of Matthew Arnold's famous words, "The sweet reasonableness of Jesus," but comes dangerously near in meaning to good-naturedness, which is only another term for pliant softness. Let us keep to the clear impressive words and thoughts of Scripture, when we deal with this great theme, and not degenerate into a goody-goody style which is calculated to lead men to look on the Cross less solemnly than they ought to do. Paul says that "God set forth Jesus to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God." This setting forth of the dying of our Lord purges the conscience; such language as Mr. Gibbon's, we fear, will lull it.

And then, how inadequate is the statement that our Saviour's death "benefited all mankind by its ministry of sympathetic grace." Sympathy can benefit no one who is ignorant of it, or who does not believe it. Surely the Cross had a Godward as well as a manward aspect; and our joy is to know and believe that God laid on his Son the iniquity of us all; that though He knew no sin He was made sin for us. To deny, or to ignore, or to hide away this objective aspect of the atonement, is to rob it of that subjective influence, which, nevertheless, is made by those who treat it thus its only characteristic.

Principal Simon avows, from a conviction rooted in long years of thought, not only his belief in the fall of man, but also his profound assurance that to deny it is to be guilty of an irrationality, the outcome of which will be the shattering of the entire Christian idea of the world. He believes that the first man came into existence as normal in constitution and state as any other living being; but that he was a normal man, not a beast, not a man with "ugly animalism" clinging to him; that at a particular historical moment he disobeyed God, and fell; and that, in consequence, the race of man gradually, but ever more completely, degenerated into what some call "ugly animalism." He asks, with great pertinence, to whom does animalism owe its ugliness, if it is ugly per se? It is a remarkable thing that Scripture never uses these opprobrious epithets of the animal world, but it does call the sinful part of our nature "the flesh," and does condemn us for not being spiritual.

One immense power wielded by the medical missionary is his ability to shake all confidence in the charms and incantations and sacrifices of the heathen doctors; what they cannot accomplish he very frequently can; so frequently and so surely indeed that the old confidence is broken and disappears. Were it only to clear the world of superstition and imposture medical missions are well worth aiding.

Mr. Arnold White suggests, in The Observer, that after a century of missionary labour the time has come when a Royal Commission should be formed to inquire into the results, so that untravelled Englishmen may have the opportunity of forming an impartial judgment on questions that are now under dispute. The real occasion of the suggestion is the trouble our country has with China; for Mr. White would have our Government give "denominational missionaries clearly to understand that if they choose to run risks, it is they, and not the taxpayers of this country, who must take the consequences." So far as we know, this is just what the missionaries do. But if missionaries are Englishmen, and they are assaulted or slain in defiance of treaty rights, then the Government intervenes, not because they are missionaries, but because they are Englishmen. As for the proposed Royal Commission, why not have one to inquire how far Christianity has justified its existence in England after 1800 years?

The education conflict is now in full blast. The school is becoming the battle ground of the churches. The London School Board is once more the scene of the warmest encounters, and so far as things have gone there has been a sad exhibition of the unscrupulous and persecuting spirit which religious bigotry fosters. If School Boards are to be turned into engines for testing the faith of day-school teachers, and sending such away as do not conform to a certain standard, then we are not far from one of two things: either a state of abject submission to Romanism under some form or other, or a state of rebellion against religion in any form at all in elementary schools. Judging from the tone of the Press, which usually upholds what are called Moderates, the latter alternative appears to be the more likely one.

In view of the mad culture of athletics, and the glorification of the "gospel of the body," which turns some of our northern towns into a pandemonium on a Saturday, and has even instigated some of the workingmen to petition their employers to let them work on Sundays, that they may have a "day off" per week for the excitement of football, we quote the words of the late Dr. R. W. Dale:—

> No doubt it is a fine thing for a man to walk forty miles a day, but that does not make him a saint. There is no virtue in being sickly, but neither so far as I can see is it the highest attribute of piety to have the digestion of an ostrich, or the lungs of a race-horse. Many a fool has had muscles of iron, and nerves of steel, and I imagine that it is possible to be a member of the Alpine Club, and yet to break all the commandments.

The old ideal is still true—"a sound mind in a healthy body"; but physical vigour is often cultivated at the expense of spiritual interests, and perfect bodily health may be accompanied by a soul dead in trespasses and sins. The question is this: "Shall the body rule the soul, or the soul the body?"

Madagascar is in the hands of the French. The Queen, it is said, is to be kept as a puppet, and the government is to be a protectorate. Merchants profess to be glad that the island has passed under a rule which will ensure security and facilities for trade. That side does not concern us here, but the Christian side does. What about our missionary friends? So far they seem to be safe, and to be justified in their determination to remain with their people. And if the French remain true to their treaty with this country regarding Madagascar, the work of God will suffer little, if any, hindrance. Complete religious liberty is guaranteed. That we shall begin to hear of Jesuit plots and intrigues is likely enough, but the Word of God is, to a large extent, grafted in the native mind. In anticipation of a French conquest of the island, steps have for some time been taken to make the Christians familiar with the French language, so that they may be the better able to hold their own in the spiritual struggle which is imminent.

The Revised Version gains in clearness and force where for "covetous" (Luke xvi. 14) it reads "lovers of money." This goes down to the root of the matter. What we love we covet to possess; what we covet to possess we take means to obtain. And if so be the object we love is unworthy, then the means we take to obtain it will probably not be over scrupulous. The only antidote to the love of money is faith in the providence of our Heavenly Father, and obedience to his will. The end of the Sermon on the Mount is the corrective of worldliness.

INDIA AND PALESTINE.

As already stated in our columns, Mrs. Mountford (née Miss Lydia von Finkelstein) has entered on a course of winter lectures in Great Britain on "Palestinian Life and Customs," subjects which she has made peculiarly her own. She has added to her repertory a new lecture on "India, and its Relation to the Bible," based on a recent residence of several years in our great Eastern dependency.

This lecture was delivered on Monday evening at Forest Hill. Its main purpose is to show that many of the religious and social customs among Indian native peoples to-day have a singular correspondence with the ancient Jewish ritual and symbolism; the deduction being that the Hebrew race borrowed their traditions from the dwellers in distant India. Some of the resemblances detected by the gifted lecturer will not be very readily received, we think, by Western interpreters of the Scripture. Mrs. Mountford's powers of scenic description are as remarkable as ever, and the lecture abounds in brilliant passages. She is delivering it this week in other parts of London. On Sabbath next she begins a short series of addresses in St. Andrews Hall, Glasgow.

MR. CLEMENT PALSER, who has been much used in evangelistic work during a visit in the United States and Canada, has returned to England. He is highly commended by pastors in America. His address is 46, Bolton-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

HULL FAIR.—This large fair, attracting thousands to the old town, affords a good sphere for evangelistic effort. A meeting was held in the fair on Sunday afternoon, about 1500 being present, who were addressed from the stage of one of the shows. The children of the showmen were entertained to tea in Walton-street Presbyterian Mission Hall, which was crowded with young folks, who were afterwards addressed. Perhaps the most interesting meeting was one held in the fair ground on Sabbath evening. A good number of hearers stood nearly two hours, and the Lord was present in much power.

Definiteness in Prayer.

"Much of our prayer is vague and pointless," says Rev. Andrew Murray. "Some pray for God's blessing on those around them; for the outpouring of God's Spirit on their land, or the world, and yet have no special field where they WAIT AND EXPECT TO SEE THE ANSWER. To all the Lord says, what is it you really want and expect Me to do? Every Christian has but limited powers, and as he must have his own special field of labour in which he works, so with his prayers also. Each believer has his own circle, his family, his friends, his neighbours. If he were to take ONE OR MORE OF THESE BY NAME, he would find that this really brings him into the training school of faith, and leads to personal and pointed dealing with his God.

We all know with what surprise the whole civilised world heard of the way in which trained troops were repulsed by the Transvaal Boers at Majuba. And to what did these owe their success? In the armies of Europe the soldier fires upon the enemy standing in large masses, and never thinks of seeking an aim for every bullet. In hunting game the Boer had learned a different lesson; his practised eye knew how to send each bullet on its special message to seek and find its man.

Such aiming is wanted to-day in our battle against sin. By some of the Lord's feeblest children it is being done. In March last a war ship was commissioned at Portsmouth for foreign service. Amongst its crew was a sailor lad filled with the Spirit of the Lord. So far as he knew there was not another man upon that ship like-minded with himself. By a clean, clear Christian life he gave evidence to all in his "mess" that he belonged to the Lord. He interceded for his shipmates daily one by one, and within three months sixteen of them have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Writing a fortnight after he left us, he says, "It is with a heart full of thankfulness that I ask you to unite in praising God for answered prayer in the salvation of my sister before I left home, and for blessing on this ship."

Persistent, believing prayer is always answered. Its history to-day as in past generations is a memorial of Divine grace. It is indefiniteness, inconstancy, and unbelief that hinder the extension of Christ's kingdom. The work given by our Master to EVERY DISCIPLE has been by a trick of the enemy appropriated to the few. The Divine promise for needed power is not withdrawn, the Divine commission is not abrogated, but the links of prayer and faith in the God-appointed order are missing.

The mighty revival which commenced in New York in 1857 supplies striking evidence that when specific individuals are interceded for in God's appointed way they are saved. Hundreds of wonderful and blessed facts have been put on record, coming not only from churches, meetings, and homes, but from the streets, workshops, stores, and markets; reaching not only the religious, but all classes of people—lawyers, merchants, seamen, and others, MEN as well as women and children—who were saved in answer to definite prayer. Wives cried unto God for their husbands and they were saved. Children cried unto God for parents and they were saved. Parents prayed and asked others to pray for children and gracious answers were given. Its history is a memorial of Divine grace.

Portsmouth. THOMAS HOGBEN.

The Quiet Days.

Wherever the glad tidings of God are preached Scripturally and experimentally, intelligibly and heartily, the people throng to hear, for aching hearts are always crying, "Who will show us any good?" And when the children of God are invited to wait on Him in confession and humiliation, in prayer and consecration, there is always a response, with unanimity of purpose, and union of heart, often in numbers which surprise themselves; for beneath all the diversity of experience and opinion, education and association, we are all one in Christ Jesus, born from above, partakers of the Divine nature, and are drawn together by the instincts of the spiritual life.

The Great Assembly Hall was packed to the ceiling on the evenings of the "Two Quiet Days" last week, and in the mornings and afternoons the area and first gallery were full. The intense addresses of Rev. Andrew Murray were listened to with eager attention, not because of any new or peculiar aspects of truth, but because they laid bare the secrets of the heart, and urged that which the conscience acknowledges to be at once its reasonable service and its way of peace.

The issue raised was not confined to the individual Christian, but embraced the Christian Church. "What could the risen Lord accomplish by the Church which is his body, were its every member yielded to his will, and filled, therefore, with his Spirit?" In order to do this there must be the absolute surrender of every member. Such surrender God claims, works in the willing soul, accepts, maintains, and wonderfully blesses.

Again, Christ is our life, in no vague sense, but as our example, propitiation, Saviour, and strength. The fruit of the Spirit is love to God and man, shown in worship and service. That which is impossible with man is possible with God; hence salvation and enduement with power for work are of grace, and when we are weak then are we strong.

Such was the line of truth along which inquiring and hungering souls were led.

It is very needful to emphasise in this connection the important truth that we are members one of another; that only with all saints can we comprehend the length, and breadth, and depth, and height, and know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, and be filled unto all the fulness of God. The early Church was exhorted earnestly to endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Unto each one is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ, for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ; from whom all the body, fitly framed and knit together by that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in the measure of each several part, maketh increase of the body to the building up of itself in love.

Instead of obeying these wise and benevolent commands, the example of gifted but carnal Corinth has been too much the rule, and is so still.

God commanded Moses to make the tabernacle according to the pattern shown him in the mount; and thus did Moses, according to all that the Lord commanded him, so did he. But Israel soon and persistently departed from the pattern. To Ezekiel, God said, "Thou son of man, show the house to the house of Israel that they may be ashamed of their iniquities, and let them measure the pattern."

Still more have we departed from our pattern. The pattern of the tabernacle and temple consisted of three parts, answering to body, soul, and spirit; but the pattern of the Church is the highly-organised and complex human body, instinct with soul and spirit, its every member having nourishment ministered from the Head, contributing to the well-being of the whole.

Each member absolutely surrendered to the ruling Head will be ministered unto from the Head according to its own proper place and function in the body, whether eye or ear, or hand or foot, or one of those less honourable members on which the faithful Creator puts the greater comeliness.

Such absolute surrender not only does not require but absolutely prohibits censorious judgment of other members: "Judge not that ye be not judged." "Wherein thou judgest another thou condemnest thyself." "Who art thou that judgest the servant of Another?" and He the Lord of all.

Some of the saddest reading in all literature is the unloving condemnation of each other by the members of the body of Christ. "If a brother be overtaken in a fault [whether of doctrine or of practice], ye that are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted."

Another very needful thing to remember is the principle which the Lord Jesus laid down when He said, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." Very different was the case at Corinth, where knowledge came, but wisdom lingered; where gift abounded above the grace to use it aright; where each one had a psalm, had a teaching, had a revelation, had a tongue, had an interpretation. Forgetting that "the spirits of the prophets are subject unto the prophets; for God is not a God of confusion, but of peace."

There is enough truth on which we are all agreed to evangelise the world, and to build up the saints; should we not, therefore, in doubtful matters preach the Word, and forbear to insist upon our own interpretation, if it provokes dissension, and cannot be demonstrated by express appeal to the Word of Scripture? There are many questionable teachings of men who draw away disciples after themselves — teachings more or less speculative, which engender strifes. The Holy Ghost by his imprisoned apostle, Paul the aged, pathetically beseeches us to give diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. "Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect be thus minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, even this shall God reveal unto you: only whereunto we have already attained, by that same rule let us walk."

If the influence of those "Quiet Days" is to last, we must hold fast the pattern of healthful words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness; not doting [not sick] about questionings and disputes of words, whereof come envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, wranglings of men.

And around his Word, as at his table, we must avoid the sin of gifted carnal Corinth, where there were heresies, i.e., divisions, schisms, sects, that those who were approved among them might be made manifest; where it was not possible to eat the Lord's supper, for in eating each one took before the other his own supper, and one was hungry and another was drunken.

What the bread and wine are to the body, that the Word is to the soul and spirit. If they at Corinth had remembered that it was on the same night that Jesus had washed the disciples' feet, the same night in which He was betrayed by one of them, that He took bread and gave thanks, and brake it, and said, "This is my body which is broken for you; take it, and divide it among yourselves, in remembrance of me," could they have eaten and drunk judgment to themselves, because they did not discern the body? not the crucified body of the Lord, but "the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him who filleth all in all."

As the ashes of the red heifer sin-offering were mingled with the water of separation, so are the humiliation and the sufferings of our Lord contained in the Scriptures of truth. With what humbled and reverent separateness from the uncleanness of self and pride should we meditate alone or unitedly upon the Word of God! with what tenderness, forbearing one another in love!

If these quiet days of blessing lead all the true people of God to recognise our absolute oneness as members of that one body, the Head of the body will be able by his Spirit to do wondrous things.

FRET NOT.

Fret not! Let the Lord relieve thee
Of thy worries and thy care;
All the trifling things that grieve thee
Take to Him, and leave them there.

Faint not! When the way is lonely
One is ever by thy side;
Lean on Jesus, Jesus only,
In his precious love abide.

Fear not! When temptations try thee,
Trust the Saviour's loving care;
No temptation will come nigh thee,
More than thou hast strength to bear.

Fail not! In the hour of testing
Christ is pledged to bring thee through,
In his arms securely resting,
There thou shalt thy strength renew.

OUR DWELLING-PLACE.

(Psalm xc. 1.)

O God of the ages,
Though sadly we roam
Where the wild tempest rages,
In Thee is our Home.

As the wandering dove,
O'er the waters so dark,
Returned to her love
And her nest in the ark;

As the little one fair,
'Midst childish alarms,
Loves to run to the care
Of its fond mother's arms;

O God of Creation,
O Help ever nigh,
Our Rock of Salvation,
To Thee would we fly.

O Strength of our weakness,
O Peace of our strife,
Receive us in meekness,
O God of our life.

DEAUVILLE, CALVADOS, FRANCE.—Mr. F. C. Brading writes from the Sailors' Rest:—"I have been much encouraged in visiting the villages around here, distributing tracts and Gospels. I have been well received; the people are getting tired of the priests. We should be glad of papers (not old ones) for the reading room; any sort likely to interest sailors. Good French tracts would also be very welcome."

Quiet Days in East London.

MEETINGS AT GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

The special meetings at Mile End, convened by Rev. Andrew Murray (through Mr. A. A. Head, of Wimbledon), have come and gone. Those who were privileged to be there will say, as with one heart and voice, that of a truth God hath visited his people. We trust that the fruitful outcome of the gatherings will be seen, not only in East London, but far beyond the bounds of our great city through the coming years. The weighty utterances by Mr. Murray on each occasion were, of course, the outstanding feature of the two memorable days. It is seldom that one hears words so fraught and instinct with Divine reality and spiritual power. The twin key-notes of the Conference were humiliation of soul and entire surrender as to God, and loving unity of spirit as to one another. Many voices were heard in earnest confession and petition. Waiting on God in prayer was, indeed, one of the chief objects of the assembly, and every opportunity was given for this. Besides Mr. Murray, three well-known servants of God spoke briefly during the Conference, but it was judged right that concentration and consecutiveness of thought would best be obtained by leaving the convener substantially to do the speaking.

On Tuesday evening the ground floor and the first gallery of the Great Assembly Hall were filled for a prayer meeting, in which God's manifest blessing on the proceedings of the next two days was sought. After a short address by Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness as to seeking preparation for work, and power in work, for God, Mr. Murray earnestly exhorted the brethren and sisters working in East London to greater unity, in order to the reception of the Divine blessing on their work among the perishing masses of the city. It was felt to be a time of heart-searching, and a fitting preliminary to the conference meetings of the following days.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The gathering this morning was again a remarkable one, and showed how ripe the time was for such a convocation. Not from East London only, but from all parts of the city, and from other places as well, there came together a great band of devoted workers. Rev. Andrew Murray directed the course of the meeting, and was surely led of God in the matter. At his call there was, first, a season of silent waiting on God; then he offered prayer that the Holy Ghost might be honoured through all the gatherings; that every soul might be in the dust before God, so that no flesh should glory in his presence. The opening hymn was:—

God holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad;
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if He trusted it to me,
I might be sad.

A season of prayer followed, those who led being Lord Radstock, Rev. J. B. Figgis and Mr. Murray. Then was sung Pastor Monod's deeply experimental hymn:—

Oh, the bitter shame and sorrow!
That a time could ever be,
When I let the Saviour's pity
Plead in vain, and proudly answered:
"All of self, and none of Thee!"

SEPARATED UNTO THE HOLY GHOST.

was the theme of Mr. Murray's address, based on Acts xiii. 1-4. In this story, he said, we shall find some precious thoughts to guide us, as to what God would have of us and what He would do for us. The great lesson for us is this: that the Holy Ghost is the Director of the work of God on earth. What we want is to stand in the right relation to the Holy Spirit; that in all our work and our planning He should ever receive the place of honour. Let us consider some thoughts that the passage suggests:—

First, we see that God has his own plans with regard to his Kingdom. Before the Church at Antioch was established, God had certain plans for Asia and Europe. We talk about the wonderful campaign in the East-end of London. Do we not know that the commander-in-chief organises the campaign, and his generals and officers do not always know his secret plans; they receive their orders from him as he thinks fit to reveal them. God in heaven has plans for East London with regard to the work that ought to be done, and the way in which it ought to be done. Blessed is the man who gets into God's secret, and works under God. Alas! we too often make our plans. We think we know what ought to be done, and we ask God to help and bless us in doing it. We go first and ask God to follow, instead of absolutely refusing to go unless He goes before. The Holy Ghost says here respecting Barnabas and Paul, "the work to which I have called them." So the work in East London is Holy Ghost work; God help us ever to be afraid of touching his work except as we are led by his Spirit.

Another thought is—God is willing and able to reveal to his servants what his will is. Communications come from heaven still. We read in this passage that "the Holy Ghost said." So, still, He speaks to his Church and people; in these later ages He has often done it. He has come to individual men, and by his Divine teaching He has led them out into fields of labour that others could not at first understand or approve; and by ways and methods that did not commend themselves to the majority. And the Holy Ghost does still, in our time, teach his people, in our missionary societies and in our home missions. In a thousand forms the guiding of the Holy Ghost is known; but, we must all confess, too little known. We have not learned enough to wait on Him, and we want this Convention to be a solemn declaration before God that we want to wait on Him, so that He may show us his will.

If you ask me whether it is an easy thing to get these communications from heaven and to understand them, I would answer: It is easy for those who are in right fellowship with heaven, and who understand the art of waiting upon God. You may ask, How can a person know the will of God? People think when they are in perplexity, and pray very earnestly to God, that God must answer them at once. Nay. God can only reveal his will to the heart that is humble, and tender, and empty; that has learned to obey and honour Him loyally in the little things of daily life.

We see here the kind of disposition to which God reveals his will, "As they ministered to the Lord and fasted." What a deep conviction these disciples had that direction must all come from God; that they must have close communion with Him and He would reveal to them his will. There they were—glad and joyful, but deeply humble and conscious of their ignorance and helplessness. So it was also with Peter when he was on the house-top at Cæsarea, fasting and praying. God grant that this may be the outcome of our convention. As we look forward to our winter campaign may we realise, with hearts entirely surrendered to the Lord Jesus, and separating ourselves from the world, and for a time even from the ordinary religious exercises, that God's will shall be made manifest.

Then comes a fourth point. The will of God as the Holy Ghost reveals it, is contained in one word—separation unto the Holy Ghost. That is the keynote of this message from heaven, and it is the keynote of the message for us to-day. Look at it in a twofold aspect. We are to be set apart to the Holy Ghost, and the Church is to do this separating work. The Holy Ghost could trust these men to do it in the right spirit, because they were abiding in fellowship with Him. Here we come to the very root of our need as workers. The great question is, What is needed that the power of God should rest upon us more mightily, and that the blessing of God should be poured out more abundantly among those poor perishing sinners among whom we labour? This is what God says: "Separated unto the Holy Ghost." What does that imply? You know there are two spirits on earth. Christ said, when He spoke about the Holy Spirit, that the world could not receive Him. Paul said, "We have received not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit that is of God." That is the great want in every worker—the spirit of the world cast out, and the Spirit of God taking possession of the inner life. I am afraid there are workers who only cry to God for the Spirit to come upon them as a Spirit of power for their work. But God wants something more and higher than that. He wants us to seek for the Holy Spirit as a Spirit of power in our own heart and life—to conquer self, to cast out sin, and to work the blessed and beautiful image of Jesus in us. That is the difference between the power of the Spirit as a gift, and the power of the Spirit for the grace of holy living. A man may often have a measure of the power of the Spirit in service, but if there be not a large measure of the Spirit as a Spirit of grace and of holiness, this want will appear in his work. He may be the means of conversion, but he will never lead people on to the higher standard of spiritual life; and when he passes away a great deal of his work may pass away too. The man who is separated unto the Holy Ghost is the man who is taught to say, "Father, let the Holy Ghost have full dominion over me, in my home, in my temper, in every word of my tongue, in every thought of my heart, in every feeling towards my fellow-man." God grant that this word, "separated unto the Holy Ghost," may enter into the very depths of our being and search us. And if we discover that we have not come out entirely and intensely from the spirit of the world, and if God discovers it to us that the self life, self will, self pleasing, self exaltation are there, let us humble ourselves before God.

(At this point in his address Mr. Murray broke out in most earnest prayer that God would cause this separation unto the Holy Ghost to become the experience of every worker present, and that each worker might be deemed worthy by God of being the instrument of this separation in their fellow workers. He then resumed the thread of his argument.)

The fifth thought is this: This higher partnership becomes a matter of consciousness to all. "They being sent forth by the Holy Ghost went down to Seleucia." What a wonderful fellowship—the Holy Spirit in heaven doing part of the work; men upon earth doing the other part. After the ordination by man upon earth, it is written in God's inspired Word that they were sent forth by the Holy Ghost. Then see how this new partnership calls to new prayer and fasting. That teaches us that not only in the beginning of our Christian work, but all along we need continually to have our strength renewed. If there is one thought in regard to the Church of Christ which at times gives me overwhelming sorrow, and which I feel that the Church has not accepted and grasped, it is the wonderful power that prayer is meant to have in the Kingdom of God, and that we have so little availed ourselves of it. If we had more prayer in all our ordinary Christian life, are we not certain that there would be more blessing in our own inner life and in our contact with the world?

My last thought is: What wonderful blessing comes when the Holy Ghost is allowed to lead and direct the work, and when it is carried on in obedience to Him. I need not refer to the story of the work done, as it is recorded in the Acts. But I pray you let us learn to believe that God has blessing for us. The Holy Ghost is brooding over this dark world and over this East London and every sphere of work within it. He is blessing, and He is willing to bless. Why is there not more blessing? There can be but one answer. We have not honoured the Holy Ghost as we should have done. God forgive us. We have grieved Him and allowed self, the flesh, our own will to work where the Holy Ghost should have been honoured. May this company be taught to give honour to the Holy Trinity in its Divine fulness—to the ever blessed Father and his everlasting love, to the adorable Lord Jesus and his mighty saving grace, and to the blessed Spirit in his indwelling power in our hearts, and in his work through us in the world.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Charles A. Fox and the hymn was sung—

The Holy Ghost is come,
We feel his presence here,
Our hearts would now no longer roam,
But bow in filial fear.

REV. F. B. MEYER

closed the impressive engagements of the morning by a short address, based on Peter's question to the Lord, "Why cannot I follow thee now?" (John xiii. 37). He showed that before the eager, self-seeking apostle could enter into Christ's glorious work, and share in his baptism, he must be abased to the dust, so that pushing, energetic self should be dethroned, and Christ enthroned in his resurrection power in his disciple's heart. From Exodus xxx. 22 he pointed out that in the directions with respect to the anointing of Aaron and his sons for the priestly office the command was given, "Upon man's flesh shall it not be poured." Is not this the reason why some workers miss the anointing of the Holy Ghost to-day? We have relied on flesh energy and flesh effort. Like Peter we have to pass through the valley of humiliation before we can share in the exaltation and the endowment of Pentecost. How much of our Christian work is marred by this subtle spirit of self lurking in the deepest recesses of the nature, so that we are always running in front of God. The remedy for all this is: Live in the Spirit, walk in the Spirit, be possessed by the Spirit, receive the Holy Ghost that He may realise in us the death of self, that He may lift us ever nearer the very bosom of Christ, and that He may glorify Christ through our daily service.

Mr. Meyer, at the close of his exhortation, led in prayer and pronounced the benediction.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The afternoon meeting was solemn and subdued, the thoughts of the longing audience being directed towards humiliation on account of failure, and confession of sin. Mr. Murray opened by calling for special prayer for the Jews and for three Christian conferences—Barnet, Manchester, and Wakefield—being held at the same time, to which greetings were sent by telegram. After a season of prayer and silent waiting upon God, an address was given by Rev. Andrew Murray, on

PETER'S FALL AND RESTORATION.

The words I wish to speak from you will find in Luke xxii. 61, 62. "The Lord turned and looked on Peter...And Peter went out and wept bitterly." That was the turning point in the history of Peter. How clearly this was put this morning by Mr. Meyer, showing why Christ said to Peter, "Thou canst not follow Me now." Peter was not fit; he had not been brought to an end of himself, and could not follow at that time. But now came the great change of which Christ had spoken, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Here we see Peter converted from self to Christ. I thank God for this story of Peter. I do not know any man in the Bible whose history is so full of help and encouragement to weak believers. But remember, Peter had to go out and weep bitterly. To understand this let us look, first, at Peter the devoted disciple of Jesus; second, at Peter as living the life of self; third, at Peter in his repentance; fourth, at what Christ made of him by the Holy Spirit.

First, Peter as the devoted disciple; when he was called by Christ to forsake his nets and follow Him, he did it at once; so that he could say with truth, "We have left all and followed Thee." Here is entire surrender. Again Christ, said "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets." Peter as a fisherman knew there were no fish there, but he said: "Nevertheless, at thy word I will let down the net." Here was obedience; he submitted to the word of Christ. Moreover, he was a man of great faith. "Lord," he said, "if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee on the water." And at the word of the Lord, Peter stepped out of the boat and walked on the water. Was not that faith? Further, he was a man of spiritual insight. When Jesus asked, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter replied, "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus told him that the Father had revealed the truth to him. Peter was the rock-man, a splendid disciple, yet how much was wanting.

Look next at Peter living the life of self; pleasing, trusting, seeking the honour of self. Christ began to speak of his coming suffering and death. Peter dared to say, "Be it far from Thee, Lord," and Jesus had to rebuke him, "Get thee behind Me, Satan." There is Peter in his self-will actually forbidding Christ to go and die. He trusted in his self-wisdom about Divine things. Later on we read of a question among the disciples, "who should be the greatest?" And Peter doubtless thought he had a first claim. At all events, Jesus begins to speak of the conditions of discipleship, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me." Self must be utterly denied. Peter in denying his Lord, virtually said, I know not the man; He is no friend of mine; I have no connection with Him. He repudiated Him utterly. Now in some such sense must we deny self. Peter did not understand this, and what happened? On the last night Jesus said to him, "Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny Me thrice." What self-confidence is implied in the reply, "Though all men forsake Thee, I am ready to go with Thee, both unto prison and to death." He meant it honestly; but he had not learned to distrust self entirely. Notice Jesus uses the word deny in two senses. "Let him deny himself," and "Thou shalt deny Me." This is the choice. We must deny self or Christ. There is no alternative. Self in the power of sin, or Christ in the power of God. Which shall it be?

Now see how a look of love changes everything. Peter denied Christ, the Lord looked on him, the look pierced his heart, showed him his terrible failure, his awful sin, the depth to which he had fallen, and he went out and wept bitterly. Who can tell what the next two days meant, when his Lord lay dead and buried? What hopeless despair and shame. "My Lord is gone, and I denied Him, after all that life of love, that blessed fellowship. God have mercy on me." Thank God, that was the turning point. On the first day of the week Peter saw the risen Christ, and in the evening met Him again. Later on by the lake of Galilee he was asked thrice, "Lovest thou Me?" And being grieved at the repeated question and implied doubt, he appealed to Jesus' own knowledge of his heart.

Thus was Peter prepared for deliverance from self. The Lord led his footsteps to the throne, and on the day of Pentecost Peter was taken hold of by the Holy Ghost, filled and changed. See the change, not merely as shown by his sermon, but in his after-life and in his epistles. He who had rebuked Christ when He spake of suffering, now he glories in suffering, and declares that those who are reproached for the name of Christ are happy. See him also before the Sanhedrim boldly saying, "We must obey God rather than men." Follow his career and see the self-pleasing, self-trusting, self-seeking Peter filled with the power of the Spirit and the life of Christ Jesus.

Now what is my object in recalling this story? Because it is the history of everyone who has received blessing. We come together not only to pray over God's work and speak about it, but to seek the outpouring of the Spirit of life. We know that as God deals with individual workers so will the work itself prosper. What, then, do these lessons teach? That we may be godly devoted believers, and yet the flesh may have power. Many may be working with some success—as Peter had preached, cast out devils, and healed the sick even—and yet the flesh may have power and even rule. You long for blessing, but there is some hindrance. What is it? Self? Pride, impetuosity, self-confidence, self-seeking, self-pleasing—it all roots in that one word self-will.

Then remember it is the work of the blessed Lord Jesus to discover the power of self. How He revealed to Peter his own self-will. How was he ever delivered? Because Christ had him in charge and training; and the warnings Christ gave him were part of that training. Then last of all came the look of love; for the suffering Christ did not forget his tempted disciple. That look broke his heart, and by-and-by at Pentecost the Holy Spirit found him willing to surrender and obey. How many of us feel the mischief of self-love, self-effort, self-consciousness; but how are we to get rid of these? My answer is, Christ alone can give deliverance from the power of self. What does He ask of you? To humble yourselves before Him, surrender to Him, acknowledge you have grieved the Holy Spirit by your self-seeking; confess it all, and ask Him to break the pride of your heart' and make you willing. Accept his teaching that "In you (your flesh) dwelleth no good thing.' Nothing can help you but the incoming of another life. Deny yourself once for all, and let Christ come in. Let us confess our failure, abandon everything, and casting ourselves before Him, pray we may "be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man"; and as the Spirit reveals Christ in us, self-love is cast out, and Christ Jesus enters to dwell in us for ever.

An earnest and searching personal application followed, in which Mr. Murray sought to bring each hearer to humiliation and confession. He closed with prayer, in which he was followed by a number of brethren.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

In the evening the Great Hall was crowded in every part, and not a few gathered in expectancy and faith, assured that God was able to bless. In the early and informal singing—before the actual meeting—Mr. Head introduced the hymn "Moment by Moment" (written by Major Whittle), and emphasised the glorious truths it contains. In order to drill these into the minds of all present, he got the friends to sing the chorus again and again until they became familiar with it. The proceedings of the meeting proper opened by silent devotion and prayer. Mr. Murray referred effectively to a telegram received from a sick chamber, sending as a message Isa. lxiv. 1-4, a passage which he read and commented upon. After another hymn and several prayers, the address of the evening was given by Mr. Murray on

ABSOLUTE SURRENDER.

In the 20th chapter of the First Book of Kings we read that Ben-hadad sent to Ahab messengers claiming his all, and the reply was, "My lord, O king, according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have." What Ben-hadad asked was absolute surrender, unconditional surrender, and Ahab yielded it. Now, I want to use these words, "I am thine, and all that I have," as the expression of that absolute surrender with which every child of God ought to yield himself to his Father. We have heard again and again what God is willing to do for us and through us, but the one condition is, absolute surrender of all into his hand.

Absolute surrender! Let me tell you where I got this word—though I had used it often before. Ten days ago, in Scotland, I was in the company of a devoted, godly man who has much to do with training workers. We were talking over the state of the Church, and I asked him what he thought the great need of the Church, and what message ought to be emphasised. The answer came clearly and decidedly: "Absolute surrender to God is the one thing that must be preached as never before." So I desire to come to each of you with this message from God, "Are you willing to surrender yourself absolutely into My hands?"

Now first of all I observe—God claims this from us. It has its foundation in the very nature of God. He is God, the fountain of life, the only source of existence, power, and goodness, in the universe; and there is nothing good but what God works. All created things—sun, moon, stars, flowers, trees or brooks—are absolutely at his command. Creation is given over to Him, and so must his redeemed children be. But what is absolute surrender? You know what it is to be given up to a special object. That pen is for writing, and it must be in my hand only—if another holds it I cannot write. Now, your immortal being is his temple, and the temple of Solomon was absolutely surrendered to God. So the believer is a temple of God in which He is willing to dwell and work on condition of absolute surrender. God claims this, and He is worthy of it.

Secondly, God not only claims it, but He will work it Himself. Many hearts say, "Oh, but absolute surrender implies so much." A little note I had this afternoon speaks of so much trial and sorrow that the writer dares not surrender wholly. Alas, that we should have such cruel thoughts of God. I come to trembling ones with this message—Make perfect surrender, assured that God is willing to work it out to the end. The everlasting God will come in and accomplish his own will in us. Cast away every fear and trust Him. If you are only half-hearted, ask Him to make you willing. He offers to work this absolute surrender in you, to draw you by the Divine magnet, Christ Jesus, to lift you into the life of absolute surrender.

But, thirdly, God not only claims and works it, but He accepts it when we bring it to Him. You come and bring Him an absolute surrender, but so far as your feeling and consciousness are concerned it is one of great imperfection, and you doubt and hesitate whether it be absolute or not. There was one who cried to Jesus, "Lord, I believe, help Thou my unbelief"; and that faith triumphed over the devil, and the evil spirit was cast out. If you come to Him, even with trembling heart and conscience, He will accept you, and work in you. Have you noticed how everything, besides the Holy Spirit, seems feeble? So you realise how weak and trembling you are; but yield yourselves, fully assured He will accept. Do not be occupied with yourselves, be occupied with God. Let Him be all in all. Bow before Him in simplicity, "Oh God, I accept thy terms, absolute surrender; I yield now." From that moment He will take possession. You may not feel and realise it; but He has accepted you, and will work in you his will.

Then, in the fourth place, God not only claims it, works it, and accepts it, He also will maintain it. That is the great difficulty with many. We are stirred by some meeting or convention; we consecrate ourselves to God; but it passes away. Why? Often because we do not believe God, who began the work in us, will care for it and keep it. In this bargain two are concerned: the omnipotent Jehovah and a poor worm of the dust; surely the worm can leave himself in the hands of this Almighty God. He is willing. Are you? So that you may truly say—

> Moment by moment I'm kept in his love;
> Moment by moment I've life from above,
> Looking to Jesus till glory doth shine,
> Moment by moment, O Lord, I am thine.

Thus are we led into a life which is simply impossible, save by the grace of God; yet it is a life to which we are called, and which is made possible by his Holy Spirit. Some of you have read in The Christian of last week (October 3rd) of that devoted saint of God, who has just celebrated his ninetieth birthday, George Müller. Did you notice the secret of his happiness and blessing? Two things are mentioned by him—that he had been able to maintain a good conscience before God, and that he was a lover of God's Word. These things indicate a life of absolute surrender. This surrender has two sides—on the one side a willingness to work what God wants me to do, and on the other side a willingness to let God work his will in me. Can you look up and say, "Lord God, by thy grace I desire to do thy will in everything, every moment and every day as long as I am here below." Once we are brought to this, God is prepared (Isa. lxiv. 4) to do unheard-of things for us.

Lastly, this absolute surrender will be made by God a wonderful blessing to others. We ask what is the meaning of our failure? It is lack of surrender. We are not absolutely in the hands of our loving Father. Separate from the world and yielded wholly to Him, when we are brought to that, God will bless. We have been praying for floods of blessing; but there must first of all be full surrender. Let us so yield, and we shall come out and stand out for God. "O Lord, Thou wouldst have absolute surrender; my soul yields to Thee; by thine own grace accept and keep me there." Shall we not join in an act of consecration and surrender to the everlasting God?

A very solemn season of prayer and consecration followed, when apparently the whole congregation made full surrender of themselves to God.

THURSDAY MORNING.

At the morning gathering, the portion of Scripture read was Isaiah xxx. 1-3, 15, and in the course of some expository remarks, Mr. Murray contrasted the "covering" of the Holy Spirit with the covering of darkness. After a season of prayer, he delivered an address on taking for his text Col. iii. 4. If the attitude of absolute surrender is to be maintained, it must be by Christ coming into our life. It is only in Christ that we can draw nigh to God, and it is only in Christ that God can draw nigh to us. We are pleading with God to work mightily in London and the world in the power of the Holy Ghost, for the sanctification of his people, and the conversion of sinners; and what we need is that what we ask God to do in others, should be perfectly done in ourselves. We want to let God reveal Christ to take entire possession of us, and then Christ will be able to work through us above what we ask or think.

If Christ is to be our life we must look, in the first place, at Christ before us as our Example. If Christ comes into me as my life, it must not merely be something hidden in my heart, but something which proves itself in every action, in every moment of my existence. If I want to know how it will show itself in regard to my sentiments, words, actions, and habits, I must study the life of Christ upon earth. When we look at Christ, we find that absolute surrender was the very root of his life. He came as a Man whom God had sent into the world, and as a Man who had nothing to do but the will of God. Every day He depended upon God, and waited for God to teach Him, to speak words through Him, and to show Him the works He had to do. "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but whatsoever things He seeth the Father do." He lived and died for God's will, God's honour, God's kingdom; it was his delight and strength to live in God and for God. When we ask how we are to live, the Father points to the Son, and says: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased"; hear ye Him, follow Him, live like Him, let Christ be the law of your life. What does Christ mean when He says in effect, "As I have loved you, so love ye one another. As I have kept my Father's commandments, so if ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love"? The mind of Christ must be mine, and my disposition of life.

We must also (2) look at Christ for us as our Propitiation. In his life Christ prepared the path in which we were to walk; He left us an example that we should follow in his steps. But that was not enough, for we were shut out from the path of life by sin and its curse. So Christ, after having prepared and marked out the blessed path,

BORE OUR SINS AND SORROWS.

The chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with his stripes we are healed. He shed his blood, the blood of the everlasting covenant, that an entrance might be gained for us into the very presence of God. Now Christ is there to plead with Divine power that propitiation which He has made. When the thought arises that we, with our transgressions and backslidings, cannot have fellowship with God, the answer comes, "We have been brought nigh by the blood of Jesus; and, having boldness through the blood of Jesus, let us draw nigh to God." You who are afraid to surrender yourselves to God, because you feel unworthy, remember that your worthiness is not in yourselves, or in the intensity of your consecration, but your worthiness is in Christ Jesus. It is the altar that sanctifieth the gift; and we know that Christ is not only priest and victim, but also the altar. If any should say, "Can God accept me?" I say, Go, child of God, and in the sweet consciousness of faith lay yourself upon Christ, the living altar, the everlasting propitiation. All unworthy and feeble though you be, He can make you acceptable to God every moment. Hence, there is continual access to God. "If we walk in the light...the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin." In Christ the door of the heart of the Father is ever open.

We have also (3) Christ with us as our Saviour from sin—our friend, leader, and guide. While his disciples could not as yet understand the words, He said: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst." What we want to realise is that Jesus Christ is nearer to us than our nearest earthly friend; and if we would but take time to turn our eyes away from the world, and humbly and trustfully to look to Jesus, He is able so to that our hearts shall be filled with the consciousness that He is ours. He can make his presence as clear and as dear to us as the fellowship of the dearest ones upon earth. He wants to walk with you that He may do his blessed work in you; He wants to be your companion, that you may never be alone; in trial and in difficulty, in fire and in water, He will fulfil in you the Old Testament promise, "I will be with you."

Further (4), we want Christ in us as our Life and our Strength. That is the crown of all. The young convert ordinarily understands but little of that. Many a believer, who has lived long in an experience of Christ, knowing Him as Comforter, Guide, and Helper, has never yet realised what it is for Christ to be within, as his very life and strength. Yet that is what the Apostle Paul tells us is the great Gospel mystery, which was hid for ages and generations, and is now revealed. He speaks of the riches of the glory of this mystery—"Christ in you." God wants us to have his Son living in us. If workers, whether in London or in heathendom, are to have power, it must be through a

CLOSER CONTACT WITH CHRIST.

Did not Christ say: "He that believeth on Me, out of him shall flow rivers of living water"? Jesus, the Lamb of God, sat down with his Father on the throne in glory; and the river of the water of life flows from the throne of God and the Lamb. It is the Lamb who leads us to fountains of living water. We shall not prevail in our work by the power of reason or human love, by earnestness or zeal, but in the power of God. Absolutely surrendered to God, be an empty and cleansed vessel, and wait upon God. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive, what things God will do for them that love Him" and wait for Him.

Several brethren afterwards led in prayer for blessing upon Gospel work.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The afternoon meeting opened with prayer (1) for God's favour upon his children throughout the world, and (2) that his Spirit may be poured out upon East London in particular. Mr. Murray's address was founded on Gal. v. 22, "The fruit of the Spirit is love." He said:—One of the great reasons why God cannot bless our efforts in his Name is the want of love. It is only when God's people stand united in the fellowship of love—one among themselves in the bonds of affection, one before the world in a love that the world can see—that they will have power to conquer. If there is one thing we have to pray for, it is that we may be melted up together into one by the power of the Holy Spirit, that as at Pentecost we may be "of one heart and one soul."

Why is it that the fruit of the Spirit is love? Because God is love. It is the very nature and being of God to delight in communicating Himself. He is unselfish, and it is his nature to be always giving. He endows his creatures with life, whether angels around his throne or flowers of the earth. God keeps nothing for Himself; to his eternal, only-begotten Son He gave all things. One of the old Church Fathers said that we cannot better understand the Trinity than as a revelation of Divine love. The Father, the Loving One, the Fountain of Love; the Son, the Beloved One, the Reservoir of Love, into whom the love was poured out; and the Spirit, the Living Love that linked Father and Son together, and overflowed to this world. Praise God, the Spirit of Pentecost, the Spirit of the Father and the Son, is Love.

CHRIST'S REDEMPTION RESTORES LOVE

to this world. Why was it that man sinned? It was because selfishness triumphed. Man sought self instead of God; hence Adam accused the woman of leading him astray. Love to God had gone, and love to man was lost. Then of the first two children of Adam, one becomes a murderer of the other. Sin has robbed the world of love. The Lord Jesus came from heaven as the Son of God's love, and brought us a message of love, that God so "loved the world" as to give Him for the life of the world. He came to show what love is, and to live a life of love, in fellowship with his disciples and in compassion with the poor and miserable; and out of love for men He died a death of love; and when He ascended to heaven He sent down the Spirit of Love, to banish selfishness and hatred and pride, and to bring the love of God into the hearts of men.

Before He gave the promise of the Holy Spirit, Christ gave the new commandment: "Even as I have loved you, so love ye one another." The law of his love to his disciples—his dying love—was to be the only law of their conduct with each other. When Pentecost came, they were "of one heart and one soul." What more did He say? "Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Christ says to us: "I put a mark upon you—and that badge is l-o-v-e—love. That is the only thing by which men can know you." Do we not begin to feel that love has fled from the world? If we were to ask the world—have you seen us wear the badge? The answer would be "No; we have heard of no body among whom there is so much quarrel and division and separation." Ask yourself—am I wearing visibly the badge of Jesus—love, love, love?

The fruit of the Spirit is love, because nothing but love can expel and conquer our selfishness. We sometimes talk of deliverance from the self life. Praise God for every word that can be said of it; but I am afraid some think it means that they will not have further trouble with themselves in serving God. But such deliverance means being a vessel overflowing with love to everyone. Many who pray for the power of the Holy Ghost get something, but such a little; they pray for power and blessing, but not for deliverance from unloving self in their intercourse with God and man. You have understood that the love of God shed abroad in our hearts means the love of God to us, but that is only the beginning; the love of God in its entirety and fulness is the indwelling power and love of God to us leaping back to Him and overflowing to our fellows. That love is threefold—God's love to me, my love to God, and my love to my fellow-men. But the three are one.

Without love we cannot live daily the life of God. How often when we speak of a consecrated life, we have also to speak of temper! Some have said—You make too much of temper. We cannot make too much of it. The hands of the clock tell us what is going on within the clock. Temper, in like manner, tells whether or not the love of Christ has filled the heart. How many find it easier to be happy in church or at the prayer meeting, than in the daily life, at home with wife and children! God wants to make of us. Have we learned to long for it, to work for it, to expect it? Just think with what liberty some Christians speak of each other and their neighbours—what sharp remarks they pass! God shut my mouth if I am not to speak in love! Among Christians banded together in work, you will find sharp criticism, unloving thought, secret contempt, and condemnation of each other—how little love! Jesus Christ said: "I have loved you: love ye one another;" and He did not put that among the other commandments, but put it forth as a new one.

We talk of grieving the Holy Spirit by our worldliness, ritualism, formality, or indifference; but the one thing that grieves the Spirit is want of love. Even the question of holiness, the cleansing of the blood, the doctrine of baptism of the Spirit, have caused differences among believers. That there should be difference of opinion does not trouble me; yet how often has bitterness, contempt, separation, unlovingness, been caused by the holiest truths of God's Word! It was so in the time of the Reformation, between the Lutheran and Calvinist churches about the Lord's Supper. So all down the ages, the dearest truths of God have become mountains that have separated believers.

If we want to have power, and to have the Holy Spirit come down in power, we must enter into a covenant with God that we will henceforth love one another with a heavenly love; and we must take into it the most

UNLOVABLE AND UNBEARABLE.

It is not only love that is to bind us together, but we want a Divine love in our work for the lost around us. Do we not often undertake work as men take up efforts of philanthropy, or from a natural spirit, or because our minister or friends call for it? And do we not perform it with a certain zeal, although we have not had a heart full of love? This is what the Church needs—love; and to get it we must at once go before God in confession. Without love we cannot do our work. May God baptize ministers, missionaries, and other workers, and may He begin with us, and baptize us all with his heavenly love!

Only love can fit us for the work of intercession. The hardest work that has to be done down in East London, and the most important work that has to be done, is the work of intercession—going to God, and taking time to lay hold on Him. A man may be an earnest Christian, and do good, but alas, how often he has to confess that he knows too little of what it is to tarry with God. May God grant us the great gift of intercessory prayer and a spirit of supplication. Never let a day pass without praying for all saints; take time to pray for the Church of Christ. It is right to pray for the heathen; God help you to pray more. Also for missionaries, and evangelistic work, and the unconverted. But Paul never told the people to pray for the heathen and unconverted, but for believers. Pray, "Lord bless thy saints everywhere!" The state of Christ's Church everywhere is indescribably low, as a rule. Ask Christ to pour out afresh upon you every day the Spirit of love, for life, work, and intercession.

IMPOSSIBILITIES POSSIBLE.

In the evening the burden of prayer was Christian work in the East-End. Mr. Murray spoke some searching words on waiting upon God. Reply telegrams were read from brethren in conference at Barnet, Wakefield, and Manchester, and mention was made of the fact that a convention was also in progress at Cape Town.

Mr. Murray's address was based on Luke xviii. 27, "The things which are impossible with men are possible with God." In religion the first lesson man has to learn is that he can do nothing of himself; the second is that God can do what man cannot. Many Christians live a low life, of failure and sin instead of rest and victory, simply because they do not see their powerlessness to please God of themselves. When they come to the point of saying "I cannot," they are in the way of realising the need of Divine omnipotence to work in them the will of God. There must be an end of the flesh and self, and we must regard it as a glory to be helpless if our God is to use us. Our religious life is to be a series of impossibilities made possible and actual by God's power. If we would only learn that lesson, and surrender ourselves absolutely, we should know the blessedness of dealing with Almighty God every moment of our lives. He is able to make you rise from bed every morning, with the blessed thought, "I am in God's charge: my God is working out my life for me." Some sigh about sanctification, and pray and cry over it. There is only one doctrine of sanctification, that is Scriptural, real, and effective, and that is: "The things which are impossible with men are possible with God."

In further remarks, Mr. Murray showed that in Christian work, and in expectation of revival, our confidence must be in God and his omnipotence. Rev. E. W. Moore followed with a brief address on the surrendered life, and several friends engaged in prayer. The close of the conference was thus as solemn and stimulating as the beginning.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC LECTURE CAMPAIGN is being carried on with untiring energy. At present, Kensington is the seat of operations, where weekly lectures are delivered in the Town Hall by Romish priests. The committee of the Protestant Reformation Society are most anxious to organise reply lectures in the same place, but unfortnnately the society's funds are too low to justify the necessary outlay. The committee have, however, arranged for a very wide distribution of Protestant tracts in the neighbourhood of Kensington, and especially on the lecture nights to the crowds attending the Romish lectures.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 20.

"The cloud of the Lord by day...and there was fire therein by night."—Ex. xl. 38.

This was the cloud of the Shekinah, in the heart of which was fire, the symbol of the presence of God. Probably this fire was always present, but only visible on the background of the surrounding darkness. In the New Testament fire is always associated with the ministry of the Holy Spirit; and in Isaiah (iv. 5) we learn that in the coming time God would give, on every dwelling-place in Mount Zion, and in all her assemblies, the same cloud of smoke by day, and flaming fire by night, as had been vouchsafed to the tabernacle. What a glorious revelation is this!

The Holy Spirit brooding over each individual believer.—We are called temples of God, in which He dwells, and which He desires to fill. We should move only when He lifts, rest under his canopy, and recognise his presence as setting us apart for Himself.

The Holy Spirit resting on each home.—"Every dwelling place in Zion" must stand for the homes of God's people. How blessed it is when the home is a temple, and each inmate of the beloved circle a priest. Such homes are rare, but they are possible. Let those who are founding a new family make this their ideal.

The Holy Spirit directing and filling each assembly and believer.—As of old the movements of the cloud determined those of the tent and people, so in the Pentecostal Church the Spirit was Guide, Director, Executor. "Separate me...to the work to which I have called them." We must rely most absolutely on Him, waiting for his initiation, his teaching, the putting forth of his mighty energy. Then there will be glory and defence.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 21.

"A sweet savour unto the Lord."—Lev. i. 9, 13, 17.

How sweet the offering up of the Son was to the Father (Eph. v. 2). The burnt offering was an imperfect type of his entire devotion to his Father's will. When Jesus saw the inability of man to keep the holy law, and volunteered to magnify it, and make it honourable; when He laid aside his glory, and stepped down from his throne, saying, "I delight to do thy will, O my God"; when He became obedient even to the death of the cross, it was as sweet to God as the fragrance of a garden of flowers to us.

Let us never forget the Godward aspect of the cross. The sacrificial fire fed on every part of the sacrifice, on the inwards as well as the carcase, so did the Holy God delight to witness the spotless and entire devotion of the Son to the great work, in which the entire Godhead was so deeply interested.

There is a sense also in which our consecration to God is fragrant and precious. When we see his claims, and yield to them; when we submit to his will, and commit our lives wholly to his direction; when we offer and present ourselves to Him, keeping nothing back: his heart is gladdened, and his fire of complacency feeds on our act. Always count on this; you may feel no thrill, and see no light, but reckon on God, believe that He accepts what you give, and will accept your sacrifice with the fire of Pentecost. Who to-day will surrender to God, and become an offering of a sweet smell?

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 22.

"Fine flour, and he shall pour oil upon it and put frankincense thereon."—Lev. ii. 1.

This type is only true in its fullest extent of the blessed Master, but as we are to be conformed to his image, we may humbly take the ingredients of the meat offering as indicating various qualities in our personal character and behaviour.

Fine flour.—There should be nothing coarse-grained or rough to the touch; but all even and tender. So that however great the pressure brought to bear on us, we should meet it with perfect grace and gentleness. Jesus reviled not again, but was led as a lamb to the slaughter. David Livingstone said that the promise of Christ was the word of a perfect gentleman. This should be our character.

Oil upon.—We must be mingled with oil—that is, the Holy Spirit must have access into the secret places of the inner life, and we must have the anointing of the Holy Ghost for service. Nothing is of any value or permanence in Christian work, useful to man or pleasing to God, in which the Holy Spirit is not first.

Frankincense.—Every act of our life should emit sweet fragrance towards God. Always moving forward in Christ's triumphant procession, bearing aloft the incense—bowls of thought, action, word, filled with love and praise.

Salt.—"Let your conversation be always with grace, seasoned with salt." The words of Jesus were full of grace, and also of truth. There was a pungency and purity, and uncorruptness in his speech, which have in every age arrested the progress of the world's evil. Let us give Him our lips.

No leaven, the symbol of the rising of pride and self.

No honey, that which is merely attractive and sensuous.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23.

"A sacrifice of peace offerings."—Lev. iii. 1.

In the burnt offering the priest burnt all, but in the peace offering a part only was burnt, "the fat, kidneys, and caul." The inner parts were consumed as God's portion, whilst Aaron and his sons fed on the breast and the shoulder. In that feast God and the priests participated. We need not dwell now on the wonderful thought of Christ as satisfying the Divine hunger or of his suitableness to feed the Divine life in us; these will come before us in the fuller passage of Lev. vii. 28-36.

But think of the blessed feast with God. We who were once far off in wicked works and hostile imaginings, are now made nigh; we sit at God's table as his children, and hear Him say, Let us make merry and be glad; this my son was dead and is alive again.

We have peace with God.—We are justified by faith in Jesus. In Him we stand before God, accepted and beloved. The curse is exchanged for blessing; distance for presence; the husks of the swine for the fatted calf. There is no controversy, no need for God to avenge a violated law, no condemnation, because we are in Christ Jesus. The past is for ever under the blood, above us is the clear heaven of God's love.

We have the peace of God.—The very peace that fills our Father's heart, undisturbed by the storms of care and strife which sweep this lower world, is ours also. We sit in heavenly places; his peace, like a sentry, keeps our hearts and minds against molestation; the peace of God rules in us, bringing every thought into subjection to itself.

We have the God of peace.—According to the Apostle's fervent hope and prayer, He is with us. Not the gift, but the Giver; not I, but He; not the river only, but the source. We may well open our doors to admit such a guest, in having whom we receive the Author and Giver of concord, unity and unbroken rest.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24.

"If anyone should sin through ignorance."—Lev. iv. 2.

Sin is something more than that of which our conscience convicts us. Our conscience may excuse or palliate our sins, or may fail to detect them for want of proper enlightenment, or may be misled by the practices and sentiments of those around. Therefore we may do things which are grievously wrong in God's sight without realising their evil or bemoaning it.

All such sin must be met and atoned for ere God can admit us into his holy presence. Sin must be dealt with and put away, not only as it appears to us, but as it is in itself, and in the sight of the All-Holy. Hence, in the types of Leviticus, there was provision made for sins of ignorance; and the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin, whether known to us or not.

There is more sin in us than any of us know. If we think we have passed a day without conscious sin, we have only to wait till an intenser light is flashed on our motives and intentions, for firelight to be exchanged for electric light, and we shall see specks and flaws. If we do not actually violate known commands, there may be a grievous coming short of the infinite standard of the Divine perfection. Who shall dare to say that he has loved God with all his heart, and soul, and strength? Besides, there is always the possibility, nay, the liability to sinfulness, and this needs to be perpetually met and atoned for.

It is very needful, then, for us to be perpetually cleansed in the precious blood of Christ. We must ask to be forgiven for the many sins which we know not, as well as for those we know. The work of confession and forgiveness must therefore go on to life's end, applied to each heart and conscience by the Holy Spirit.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25.

"He shall confess that wherein he hath sinned, and bring his guilt offering."—Lev. vi. 6.

It is said that sometimes a soldier will come from the battle bleeding from a hidden wound which he received without knowing it. So in the rush of life we may contract defilement by touching uncleanness, or speaking rashly, which in the sight of God will leave a foul stain upon the white robe of the soul.

The presence of unconscious sin with us is the reason why often we are unable to pray or read the Word of God at night. We are aware of a certain distance, a veil, a cloud, which has settled down between us and the beatific vision. At such times we do well to examine ourselves and the past more critically, for probably we shall be able to detect the hidden cause, which, when we know it, must be confessed, and placed on the head of our guilt offering, whilst we yield ourselves to God as a whole burnt offering, in a new act of self-surrender.

But confession is all important. We must confess our sins if the faithful Lord is to forgive them. Confession is taking God's side against ourselves. It is the act of judging evil in the light of his Throne. It is like the unpacking of a box, in which one begins with the lighter things at the top, and works steadily down to the heavy articles underneath. It is the repetition in the heart of Joshua's act of calling the roll of Israel until Achan, the son of Carmi, was taken.

When the atonement has been made as touching sin "in any of these things" there is forgiveness. Dare to believe that this is so, O penitent soul, who hast made Christ's soul an offering for thy sin. Go thy way, and sin no more.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26.

"Fire shall be kept burning upon the altar continually; it shall not go out."—Levi vi. 13.

This is an emblem of the perpetual work of God for man.

The love of God.—There never was a time when God did not love. The bush that Moses saw gave no fuel to maintain the holy flame that trembled around it, because the love of God to Israel and to the human race demands no sustenance. Through the ages it burns and will burn; however much indifference and neglect and rejection are heaped upon it, or poured over it, like barrels of water over Elijah's sacrifice, it never goes out. It is as fresh and vigorous to-day as ever, and waits to consume your sin and mine, for God is a consuming fire.

The intercession of Christ.—As the ages pass this sacrifice retains its merit. What He did as Priest on the cross, He does as Priest on the throne. It is always "this same Jesus." What He was, He is, and will be; and as generations of saints bring their gifts to the altar, He takes them, and lifts them up to God, as the fire bears up the substances which are submitted to it. From the fire of this altar the coals were obtained for the censer, and the perpetual prevalence of our Saviour's merit, in the presence of God, makes our prayers and tears acceptable. He ever liveth to make intercession, and the fire that burnt through the long night in the Tabernacle witnessed to the undimming unwaning virtue of our Saviour's work.

The ministry of the Holy Ghost.—The fire that was lit on the Day of Pentecost burns still in the Church. There has been no intermission to its presence from the first day till now. Multitudes of unknown sects and persecuted saints have kept that fire burning in the world. It glows to-day if you will light your torch at it. On the perpetuity of its existence in our midst depends the constancy of our own love and purity and prayer. If the fire shall never go out in our hearts, if the life is indeed everlasting, it is because He lives and loves always.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

OCTOBER 27.

THE CHILD SAMUEL.—1 Sam. iii. 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT—verse 9.

AT the time when this incident occurred Samuel was about twelve years old. He was born at Ramah or Ramathaim (i. 1), about four miles north-west of Jerusalem, and thirteen miles south of Shiloh. His name means "Asked of God," and was intended as a memorial of the fact that God gave him to Hannah in answer to prayer. His mother, having received him from God, gave him back to God. From his birth he was a Nazarite (Numb. vi. 1-12; 1 Sam. i. 11). From the age of two or three years (i. 24) he lived near the tabernacle court, under the care of Eli.

Eli was nearly eighty years old, and was both high priest and judge. His home was at Shiloh, where the tabernacle was set up. He lived another twenty years, and died at the advanced age of ninety-eight years (iv. 15), having judged Israel for forty years (iv. 18). He had many excellent qualities; but one weakness of his brought serious trouble into his family, and merited the special reproof of God. His two sons made themselves vile, and he contented himself with mild reproof, and continued them in an office which their conduct disgraced (ii. 12-36).

The strength of Samuel's piety is all the more remarkable considering how closely he was brought in contact with these young men. They were like elder brothers to him. Their example and conduct contradicted all the influence of Eli. Samuel was kept in the midst of danger; and his severe temptations, instead of leading him to sin, only tended to strengthen his own character. Under the same influences which hardened and corrupted Hophni and Phinehas, Samuel grew, and "was in favour with the Lord, and also with men" (ii. 26).

Two things are in this lesson:—

I. THE CALL OF SAMUEL (1-10).—It was a call, not to conversion, but to more responsible and more exalted service. Already "the child Samuel ministered" (1). The kind of service a child could render was not refused because he could not do the work of a man. Lighting the lamps, opening the doors, ministering to Eli, were acts of service which God accepted. Fidelity in what you are called to do is the condition of being entrusted with something greater. "The word of the Lord was precious" (1), because rare. There was no one to whom the people might look for God's message. The Scriptures are a common possession to-day, and are therefore lightly esteemed by many. God sometimes takes away our blessings that we may learn to appreciate them more.

The call came at night (2, 3), evidently when the night was far advanced; for the lamps of the golden candlestick, lighted every evening (Lev. xxiv. 2-4), had not yet gone out (R.V.). The stillness of the hour was God's opportunity (see Job xxxiii. 15, 16). Yet the call was not understood (4-7). Think of the strange voice sounding on Samuel's ear, calling him by name (Isa. xliii. 1). God calls now by his Spirit, by his word, by his mercies, by painful providences—and men know not his voice.

See the patience and persistency of God. When the first call was misunderstood, He called again. Not until the fourth time did He get the response He wanted (9, 10). Yet the previous three calls had not been in vain. They had revealed the promptness of Samuel's obedience to Eli, from whom he supposed the call to come. There is no better training for obeying God than the practice of obedience to those in authority over us.

The Golden Text describes how we should respond to God's call (9, 10). It expresses readiness not only to listen, but to receive, and obey. It involves surrender of self-judgment and of self-will, and the acceptance in all things of the will of God. Take it as a daily motto text. Above all, if you have never responded thus to God, when calling you to be his, make the response now. You cannot do it too soon.

II. HIS FIRST COMMISSION (11-13). His message to Eli was substantially that which the prophet had given before (ii. 27). It was a painful burden for Samuel to deliver, and for Eli to hear. It announced a terrible judgment, which should cause horror and alarm to all who should hear of it. And that was the message which Samuel, the young prophet, was called to deliver! God would reprove Eli through the lips of the child. "It is good for a man that he should bear the yoke in his youth." A very heavy yoke was put upon Samuel in having to deliver such a message to the man he so tenderly loved.

Yet the message only announced the judgment. It was twenty years before the stroke fell. There was ample opportunity for repentance. Will Eli alter his treatment of his sons? Will they heed the warning, and turn from their sins? The mercy of God speaks the warning message early. If men refuse to heed it are they not without excuse?

For the Young.

GOOD SWORDSMEN.

THE other day I heard of some wonderful Syrian swordsmen who, to the beating of a tom-tom, perform marvellous feats in sword-fencing and practice. They are so expert in their use of the weapon that though they hold only a tiny shield of the size of an ordinary plate, they receive each of the heavily and swiftly dealt blows upon it. Faster and faster they let fly with the flashing steel; faster and yet faster they avoid its descent anywhere but on the guard. There are some points about these swordsmen which impress me as bearing upon our use of the sword of God's Spirit, which is his Word (Eph. vi. 17).

First, they take their swords at the word of command, and examine them keenly. They are to be used on the foe, and those who wield them know all their points, for they mean to conquer.

God says—"Take the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." I wonder how many boys and girls in the United Kingdom obey that command daily? How many take it and study it, making it their own, mastering the points of what they read, so that should they meet any of their spiritual foes, they may wield the sword of victory? There is another way of taking the sword, too. When the Bible-lesson is being given in school, or when you hear the Scriptures read from the sword of God on Sunday, or in the family circle, do you take it then, making it your own, and seeking to conquer self by it?

Before these swordsmen use their swords, they see that they are bright—no spot of rust, no cloud of damp, no speck of dust upon them. They spend hours every day polishing and handling their swords; some binding linen round the hilt, that they may be able to hold and wield it more firmly. All this takes time, and these Syrians do not grudge giving every spare minute to the care of their beloved weapons. How much time do you give to the study of God's Word, the sword of his Spirit? Is it your delight? or do you let the dust of days accumulate upon it? A good swordsman keeps his sword bright.

Then, these Syrians are most skilled in the use of their swords. Not a false lunge or parry, not a weak or indecisive cut, not a single clumsy action as the swift strokes fly and cleave the air, and fall with unerring precision upon the shields. "The sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Think of that as you put into practice its thousand precepts, yet so harmonious that they might be but one, and so are as easy to carry out as one—or accept its Divine teaching, and Him of whom it teaches; or use it to show others how they, too, may find and serve the great Captain of our salvation; or to put to flight your enemies and the enemies of Christ.

"How can I do that?" you perhaps ask.

Well, you may know those among your companions who would try to prevent you from reading God's Word, and from following its precepts; or there are the more formidable enemies in your own heart (Jer. xvii. 9; Mark vii. 21, 22), which rise up with their evil suggestions and allurements, and these must be put to flight at once and for ever, if you would grow more like to Christ day by day.

Should your schoolfellows, or even your friends, sneer in any way at your desire to live as God's child, some gentle word from the Book—a flash of the sword bearing God's name on its blade—the pointing to such a verse as, "I love them that love Me, and those that seek Me early shall find Me" (Prov. viii. 17); or "My son, give Me thine heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways" (Prov. xxiii. 26); or, "Let thine heart retain my words; keep my commandments and live" (Prov. iv. 4), may silence the thoughtless tongue, and perhaps win a soul for God. There could be no sweeter, stronger words than these, as invitations; and if you are God's child, your living according to them will "silence envious tongues," and show that you are in earnest.

And for yourself, you can put to flight the whole army of aliens to God, which seek an entrance to, or spring up in your heart, by reading on your knees, such words as these (Heb. iv. 15-16). "For we have not a High Priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Flash out your sword, thrust it through your most cherished sins and follies, even to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow (Heb. iv. 12), and you will conquer. There are three verses I want you to notice on the sword—(1 Cor. x. 13) just when you think the fight is against you, and your sword-arm is growing weak, your Saviour will make for you a "way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

"My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow Me," says Jesus. He is watching you all the time. He will nerve your arm.

The second verse on the blade is 2 Pet. ii. 9: God, even when all the odds seem to be against us, will find a way to deliver us out of our temptations; if we call upon Him in the thick of the fight, He not only hears us, He delivers us (Ps. xci. 15-16). My third verse shows the final victory. With sword in hand, and arm nerved for the fight, you are waiting for the adversary; you have worsted him many times, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ (2 Tim. ii. 3), and you have never met him without taking the shield of faith (Eph. vi. 16); and now God says, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation." Glorious! At first He showed you the way of escape; then He Himself plucked you out of the enemy's way; and lastly, He sees how you have used that good old sword, and will permit you the warrior's rest, so that you see only the back of your foes!

The sword of the Spirit, the Word of God; the sword of Apollyon, the destroyer, which is like unto a scorpion's tail. Does it sound terrible and formidable to you? Dear child, read in the fourth chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel, how God's sword overcame the tempter. For every word the Evil One addressed to Christ, he received a slash from the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. "This same Jesus" who conquered in the wilderness, is with you and me in this wilderness world. There is but one sword for us to use, all others will fail us—as those miserable contract swords failed and bent in the hands of our sailors a short time back—and our sword is God's Word. "Thus saith the Lord" will silence scoffers, disarm doubters, put enemies to flight, and by constant use so strengthen you in body, soul, and spirit that, like the Syrian swordsman, you will be able to parry every blow, and learn to smile in the face of the foe.

There is only one thing you must never do with your sword—You must not learn to fence. Fighting, not fencing—as good Richard Cecil says, "To parley is to fall"; no "perhaps" for you, step out sword in hand, as you say:—"I will love Thee, O Lord my strength. The Lord is my rock and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust...I will call upon the Lord...So shall I be saved from mine enemies" (Ps. xviii. 1-3). G.

PARMITER-STREET MISSION, BETHNAL GREEN.—Sir C. Robert Lighton, Bart., president, took the chair at a bright and well-attended meeting held on the 3rd inst., to inaugurate and seek God's blessing upon the work of the coming winter. Encouraging addresses were given by the chairman, and Revs. Dr. Hamilton, W. Adamson, and H. Oliver Allbrook. The hon. sec., Mr. G. W. L. Barraclough, asked for continued earnest prayer. The report speaks of much blessing, especially amongst the young, several having come out unmistakably on the Lord's side. The Sunday-school and mission are greatly in need of workers. Any who can help this Protestant and evangelistic work in a district surrounded with Ritualism and worldliness, should obtain copies of the report from the secretary, Parmiter-street Mission, Bethnal Green, E.

REASON OR CONVICTION?

"Settle it in your hearts!" said Jesus to his disciples. And never did He make a greater claim upon their trust than when advising them to make no preparation for their defence before tribunals of persecution. After the gift of tongues had become an established fact, Christ's demand and his promise, "I will give you a mouth and wisdom," would seem reasonable enough. But before that time, it was asking them to believe in the possibility of an experience they had never seen. Yet, while Jesus demanded this belief, He did not demand that they should believe with their reason that for which there seemed no reasons. "Settle it in your hearts!" said He.

The fact is "the heart has reasons of which the Reason itself knows nothing." But this method is not a favourite one in modern times. Reason and experiment are the methods by which many expect to reach all truth.

The Parisian rabble in their madness once erected a statue of the goddess of Reason and worshipped before it. To-day men erect no statue, yet Reason is all in all to them. "Prove all things." "What is clear is true."

But beyond our sight are regions unattainable, within our sight are facts unaccountable, and within ourselves is perhaps the greatest puzzle of all. If we are to settle these things by Reason, we shall have to find our highest bliss in never coming to a conclusion. We have, however, instincts enabling us to hold a great deal as true for which we can give no reason, except the feeling itself.

Just as in the beaver is placed a building instinct, and in the bee a storing instinct, so within us are deep instincts which we feel but cannot explain. There is much that we know by conviction; spiritually there is little we know in any other way. There is a man at prayer, He rises with a heart lightened of its burdens, with the sense of forgiveness filling him. Ask him to explain his belief that God has heard his prayer. What positive proof has he of the fact? If he attempts to argue the trustworthiness of his own conviction he can get no reasonable proof.

Reason would say: "Where in nature do you find a hint of prayer? Man alone prays. Two men pray for the same thing; an answer can only come to one. Two nations at war pray for success; only one can win." In short Reason can suggest many difficulties without removing one. But deep down in the heart there is an instinct of prayer, and men, obeying it, find the answer within.

There is a man seized with shame for sin. He has done that which he ought not. A conviction is in him that something is wrong. But Reason would ask how does he know it to be wrong? It would suggest that moral ideas are matters of education; that standards of right differ between nations and nations, men and men. One says Right is the useful, another that it is the pleasing, another that it is the seemly. And finally Reason would point to the fact that men like Martineau, who have made the ethical sense a life-study, have concluded that the nature of Right cannot be analysed.

But, abandoning reasoning, men find that actions bring their own witness with them as to their nature. Life by conviction does not go astray. The way to God and to right living is not through the brain. Our outlook upon both is small. Our inlook is wider far. Said Moses: "The things which are revealed belong unto us. The secret things to God." Some things God will keep secret, but, nevertheless, within us is the conviction that there is a secret, and that He keeps it.

Meanwhile, it is sufficient for us to live on the things which are revealed within us. They belong to us as soon as they make their presence known. The shrinking sense of shame, the sense of right and wrong, the sense of reverence and prayer—when these are felt within they can safely settle life for us. The difference between the belief into which the mind has persuaded itself, and that which is instinctively felt by us is, that we hold the first, and the other holds us. In this age of unrest, when points of view are shifting and remorseless, questioning, assailing beliefs supposed to have been well-reasoned, let us take as our "seat of authority," God within the heart. "Settle it in your hearts!" "I will give you a mouth and wisdom." "If any man be ignorant, let him ask!"

HEBREW CHRISTIAN TESTIMONY.

In the October issue of The Scattered Nation (2d. Morgan & Scott) some account is given of the recent work of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, conducted by Revs. D. Baron and C. A. Schönberger. With regard to work at the Mission centre in Whitechapel-road we read:—"We feel full of joy and gratitude that we have been able to bring our 'testimony' before so many. During the last twenty-four Sabbath meetings more than 2000 Jews have listened to the message of the Gospel in our hall. How many of these 2000 Jewish souls have never before heard about Christ, or, at least, have never heard from Hebrews that this Christ is the seed of Abraham. The usefulness of the reading-room has been established beyond doubt. It has become in a short time an acknowledged centre for inquiring Jews. The daily Bible readings form one of the characteristic features of our testimony. Many an evening the room could not hold the visitors, and we had to sit closely packed, or open the door to let some stand and listen outside. The social condition of the people that gather round us is for the most part of such a kind, that unless we 'abound in doing good,' we cannot make headway for Christ; yea, unless we can show that the Christ we preach is at the same time influencing us to have pity on them, it is no use to proclaim Him."

Very readable notes are given of Mr. Baron's last tour in Eastern Europe; and some of the helpers say words about the work, and its difficulties and encouragements. By the way, saddening particulars are given of the advance of the Jew-hate on the Continent. At Vienna, "Anti-Semitism is certainly growing to monstrous proportions. Recently, there was a report in the papers, of a sermon preached by the Roman Catholic vicar of Weinhaus, a small place near Vienna, one of a series which this professed minister of the Prince of Peace is now preaching in his church, with a view to stir up the cupidity and hatred of the masses against the Jews. The sermon referred to concluded with the words: 'Verbrennt die Juden, zur Ehre Gottes, Amen.' (Burn the Jews for the glory of God. Amen.)" At Oedenburg a spirit of indifference prevailed. Mr. Baron's assistant looked up three Protestant pastors, with a view of obtaining their co-operation in arranging for a public meeting. "Our 'Evangelical' brethren deprecated our coming to the place to disturb the concord which existed between the Jews and the Christians, by preaching to the Jews that they must be converted and turn to Christ. The utmost they could do, after a lot of trouble and conference, was to offer us the use of their schoolroom as a place of meeting, but they could not possibly promise to be present, or in any way mix themselves up in the matter, lest the Jews, who have great influence in the town, should think that they countenanced any effort for their conversion. Alas! for dead 'Protestantism' in these parts, ashamed to unfurl the Gospel standard, lest it should offend rich Jews or unbelieving Gentiles. We accepted their offer, and then went to the Captain of Police to ask permission to hold a meeting, but in vain."

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN INVERNESS.

We have closed a most wonderfully blessed mission of eleven days, conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz, the Jewess evangelist. She came here in face of prejudice and opposition, and, notwithstanding both, God has used her to be the instrument of leading many into the Kingdom, and of arousing believers to see that there is a life higher, and more satisfying, than that they were living on the low, foggy plains of worldliness and backsliding.

Most evangelists have felt the work in the Highlands to be difficult, and Mrs. Baeyertz came prepared to find it so. Perhaps, being forewarned, she was led to place herself and the mission more utterly in God's hands, whose is the power. At any rate the power came, and she had the joy of dealing with over three hundred in the inquiry-meetings. This does not include those, both believers and unbelievers, who received blessing and did not give in their names.

The meetings opened on Sabbath, September 22, with a large meeting in the Free High Church at 3.30, and at 8.15 in the Market Hall, the largest meeting-place in the town, holding between three and four thousand people. It was filled in every part by an audience who gave the most perfect attention to a startling and solemn address on "The Unpardonable Sin." At its close many remained to be spoken with, an unusual thing for the first night of a mission here.

The Bible readings for the first week were held in the hall of the Free East Church; the second week they were in Union-street U.P. Church. All the evening meetings, except on Sabbaths, were held in the Free High Church. Day by day, and evening by evening, the interest grew and deepened, and the numbers increased, until on Sabbath, October 6th, at both afternoon and evening meetings, there was not standing room in the Market Hall.

It is impossible to convey in a notice like this any idea of the power that accompanied the preaching of the Word. Christians will not soon forget how they have been helped at the Bible readings. Yet they were quiet, clear, conversational addresses, without the least attempt at oratorical display or appeal to emotion.

The great gatherings in the Free High Church night after night testify to the fact that the old, old story has not lost its ancient power; that the lifting up of Christ crucified still draws men unto Him. One night is specially memorable, when the subject was "The Great White Throne." The hearts of the people were moved by the Spirit of God, and crowds flocked to the inquiry-room, broken down under a sense of sin, asking the old question, "What shall I do to be saved?"

The mission practically closed on the Thursday evening with a holiness meeting in the Free High Church. Admission was by ticket, yet every corner was packed. Here it was that many Christians were enabled to surrender wholly to Christ, to be filled with the Spirit, and went forth, we believe, to a life of victory by faith. As one of these said to the writer, "I have cause to bless God that Mrs. Baeyertz came to Inverness."

The outstanding feature of her method is the way she honours the Word, the Atonement, and the Holy Spirit. It is a curious fact that those most opposed to her are those who do not believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, or in the blood of the Great Sin-offering. As we would expect from a daughter of Israel, there is no flippancy in her manner of dealing with holy things; on the contrary, there is the very greatest reverence. God has given her a beautiful voice and manner of speaking, and she is in all her actions a true Christian gentlewoman. M. Black.

Rev. William Edward Cousins.

MISSIONARY TO MADAGASCAR.

The senior worker of the London Missionary Society in the greatest of African Islands is in many respects a notable man. The rare combination of simplicity and strength, lucidity and fairmindedness, have produced a man whom all are compelled to like and with whom no one can quarrel. Though the mission staff is so large and contains all types of men and women, whilst the native church furnishes still more diversities, all are on good terms with the doyen of the mission. Nor has time and experience hardened his opinions into immovable ideas. He is always ready to receive the opinions and conclusions of other people with courtesy, and give them an honest and patient consideration.

Success in that part of his work in which he has won most distinction—in linguistic studies—has not affected the humility which was conspicuous when he went as a freshman to the Missionary College, at Bedford, in 1858. Although regarded as the best Malagasy scholar, in this as in other attainments, one of his colleagues has well remarked, "I am often surprised at the ready way in which he has been prepared to take a hint from the veriest tyro in the native tongue."

Mr. Cousins was born at Abingdon in 1840, and at the time of his acceptance by the London Missionary Society was a member of Castle-street Chapel, Reading. He sailed for Madagascar in April, 1862, and took charge of the native church at Amparibé in the capital. He opened a chapel there in 1863, and in that year and the following made pastoral visits to the district of Vonizongo, about 100 miles to the north-west of Antananarivo. Returning to England in 1864 he married Miss M. A. Williams, who was a faithful helpmeet until her death last year. In October, 1865, he resumed his former duties in the capital and country around, and also occupied himself with literary work in his native tongue. A break occurred in the routine of this life when he accompanied the deputation, the Rev. Dr. Mullens and Rev. J. Pillans, to the Betsileo province in September, 1873.

Upon his return he was appointed editor of a revised version of the Malagasy Bible under the sanction of the British and Foreign Bible Society. His long study of the language enabled him to go with thoroughness into this arduous work. Its importance will be realised when we say that the Christianity of our converts in Madagascar has been described by Romanists as consisting mainly in "reading the Bible." Love for the Bible was one of the most marked characteristics of the persecuted Christians, and Mr. Cousins says, "I see no prospect of the Bible losing its supreme place in the love and esteem of the people." In his new book, "Madagascar of To-day" (Religious Tract Society), he tells the interesting story of how the Bible was first given to the Malagasy by Messrs. Jones and Griffiths. Though the translators were driven away the book remained; studied in secret and at the risk of life; served during more than a quarter of a century of persecution to keep alive faith in the newly-received religion. This first translation, although so honoured of God, needed revision. In almost no instance has a first translation stood the test of time.

The revision committee consisted of eight foreigners, English, Americans, and Norwegians, with three native helpers. There were Anglicans, Lutherans, Presbyterians, Independents, and Friends, and the union of these in common work gave an easily-appreciated answer to the taunts of the Jesuits, who delight to talk of "the five different religions" introduced into Madagascar by Protestants. The natives see clearly that whatever divisions exist among these missionaries, all are at one in their loyalty to God's Word, and in their desire that the churches of Madagascar should possess as accurate a translation as possible. After twelve years of continuous effort, steeped in prayer, the work was closed with a public thanksgiving service in the church which had been built at Ampamarinana (the place of throwing down), just on the edge of the precipice over which in 1849 the fourteen Christians were hurled because of their love to God's Word, and their unwillingness to renounce the Saviour that Word had made known to them.

Next in literary importance to Bible revision is the grammar of the language prepared by Mr. Cousins, the accuracy of which is its chief feature. He has also written some hymns, which the natives love and will sing for many generations to come. Besides these labours he has had charge of the Church at Ambohipotsy and its country district of churches.

In 1876 Mr. Cousins came on furlough to England; and all will sympathise in that his present furlough, long anticipated, has a deep shadow cast over it by the death of his loving wife in this country before his arrival.

Despite his modest and quiet disposition, Mr. Cousins's public utterances have often an honesty and boldness about them which surprises the habitually timid and cautious natives, who have a wholesome fear of their despotic Government. There is good reason for this plain speaking, and a missionary justly remarks: "Mr. Cousins is thoroughly acquainted with the growth of everything tending to purity and spiritual-mindedness in the Malagasy Church, and his opinions on all questions touching the life and liberty of the churches are always listened to with the most profound respect, both by his brethren and the natives."

Mr. Cousins had as a fellow-worker for twenty years his younger brother, Rev. George Cousins, who, since 1884, has been the energetic editorial secretary of the London Missionary Society. Our friends will remember that an account of the characteristics and work of this earnest missionary was given in these pages some time ago. We rejoice to know that after a period of thirty-three years' service Mr. Cousins will be able again to exercise in Madagascar the influence of that strong and kindly personality which those intensely conservative Christians have so long loved.

THE BIBLE IN PORTUGAL.

There is great need for the Bible in Portugal, and we rejoice to hear of efforts to disseminate it there. On the one hand we learn that well-known translations are being revised, and on the other of their re-issue in attractive forms. Under the latter heading we place the great work, now nearly completed, which has for several years been coming out in parts at Oporto, under the editorship of Mr. Herbert W. Cassels, with the title Biblia Sagrada Illustrada. This work, in three volumes, large quarto, is a diglot, presenting in large type the old version of Padre Antonio Pereira de Figueiredo (without the Apocryphal books), and in smaller type, at the foot of the page, the Latin Vulgate. Hence it will be obvious that this edition is intended for Roman Catholics.

The object has been to produce an attractive edition. The engravings, over 3000 in number, many of them covering entire pages, are the same as were used in the illustration of the well-known "Family Bible," in English, issued by Cassell and Co. The maps have been prepared by Rev. R. H. Moreton, Wesleyan minister, Oporto, and valuable aid has been rendered by Rev. R. Stewart, Presbyterian minister, Lisbon (agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society), Canon Pope (Church of England Chaplain at Lisbon), and Mr. J. T. Morton (of London). There have been obstacles, and of these Mr. Cassels writes: "They were not so much owing to opposition from the Ultramontane party—although some of the clerical press have opposed the work bitterly—but principally limited time and funds. My wife and I habitually committed the matter to a higher Hand, and now these obstacles have practically been overcome." It is believed that, when completed, there will be much demand for the book in Brazil.

Communications regarding this large undertaking may be addressed to Mr. H. W. Cassels, 191, Mousinho da Silveira 1, Porto, Portugal.

AN AUTUMN SUNSET.

By Mary Rowles Jarvis*

Once more the land hath rest, its strivings done,
Its crown of harvest won;
The days are brief and chill,
The golden rod has faded on the hill;
But in the sunset, summer lingers still,
And shows what promise lies
Far in the rain-swept deeps of pale November skies.

Still in the woods some lovely things abound,
Where the last leaves are found,
Where lichens green and grey
Hang their crisp fringes on the empty spray,
And scarlet berries lean across the way;
While glowing brambles tell
How gaily autumn weaves her banners of farewell.

The red-brown furrows where the floods have been
Show silvery lines between;
Within them, cradled deep,
The tender nurselings of the future sleep;
And while above their rest the storm-winds sweep,
They whisper under breath,
Of hope outlasting fear, of life that masters death.

For He who wrought the lily's robe of white
Keeps its least root in sight.
Beneath his rule secure,
No flower can fade till next year's bloom is sure;
Alike through spring and fall his covenants endure
By his smile overshone,
The world rejoicing sings when summer days are one.

BANGALORE TELUGU MISSION.—We last week gave some account of the work in which Mr. G. W. Gillings is engaged in Bangalore. Friends desirous of knowing more may communicate with the British correspondent of the work, Mr. G. J. Hyde, Ingleside, Grove-road, Walthamstow.

NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS.

A number of instructive papers on the controversy with Rome were read last week at the meetings of the National Protestant Congress at Preston. Rev. Charles Guest, of Burton-on-Trent, dealt with "How Rome Treats the Bible," and Rev. Dr. Kerr, of Glasgow, delivered an address on "The Influence of the Papacy in British Politics." Rev. J. B. Meharry, of London, spoke on the influence of the Papacy on the nation morally. He said that wherever the Roman principle has prevailed and occupied an undisputed field, there we would find vice and ignorance, and a phase and condition of society such as would be found under no other Christian organisation. Freedom was the sine qua non of moral development, and Roman Catholics were not free, for they were denied the pure Word of God.

Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness spoke on "The Pope's Letter and Cardinal Vaughan Answered; or, No Peace with Rome." He said that when the head of the Roman Catholic Church wrote a letter condemning every good work of the Reformation, and asking them to return to what he called the true Church, they were not disposed to treat the matter lightly. One answer to this invitation must be a calm and firm refusal to bring about the outward unity of the Church by the sacrifice of truth and the Gospel. We can make no peace with Rome until she makes peace with truth. He condemned the confessional, which he said was one of the many barriers between the Protestant Church and the Church of Rome. The Pope of Rome took the place of the Father and the Son, was head of the Church and husband of the Church, and, according to his faith, had power to forgive sins and relieve souls from purgatory. He not only held this, but took the place of the Holy Spirit, and claimed to be the infallible teacher of faith and morals. In conclusion, the speaker said we cannot make peace with Rome, for Rome is at war with the Gospel.

Rev. Jacob Primmer addressed the meeting on the subject of "No Peace with Rome, because of her Cruelty and Intrigues." He said it was an insult that the question of union with Rome should be before the country, for they had heard what an abominable system hers was. Rome was waiting her chance to get a hold in England, and bargained with either political party to gain her end. Hers was not a religion, but a system of political intrigue, and one which, if adopted, would destroy the country and bring down the curse of God. He referred to the cruelties of the nunneries, and concluded by saying that they could never make peace with assassins and murderers.

At the closing meeting, Mr. S. Smith, M.P., spoke on Sacerdotalism, and addresses were delivered by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of London, and Canon Woodward, of Liverpool.

At a meeting in connection with the Women's Protestant Union, Mrs. Arbuthnot in the chair, Miss Maynard, of London, read a paper on "Conventual Life, its attractions and antidotes." She held that the best antidote to any desire to merge personal responsibilities in any human system, was to live our lives where God had placed them. Madame Lecoat, of Paris, formerly inmate of a Roman Catholic convent, addressed the meeting on the subject of the confessional, and related the history of her early life. Parents who sent their children to confession, she said, lost them, for they became the slaves of Rome; husbands, whose wives went to confession, had some one between them and their wives; and people who went to the confession had some one between them and God. At a second meeting, Mrs. Arbuthnot detailed the work of the Union, and stated that it has now 8000 members. She read a paper on "Our Children and the Italian Mission to England." Miss Rouse, of London, also read a paper on "The Protestant Woman, her Place and Power in the Home."

THE BARNET CONFERENCE.

The multiplicity of united conferences that include all evangelical sections of the one Church of Christ, but are specially identified with none, are a happy feature of the living Christianity of to-day. While enjoying the privileges that pertain to these, we are apt to forget the origin of them; for they are a comparatively modern product. Fifty years ago such an assemblage of Christians was practically unknown. Many of the younger generation are probably ignorant of the fact that all these delightful and useful gatherings have sprung, humanly speaking, from the conference at Barnet, called together in a schoolroom there by Rev. Wm. Pennefather, of blessed and sainted memory. That was in 1856. When he moved his sphere of service to St. Luke's, Mildmay, in 1864, he brought with him the iron room which he had erected at Barnet for the growing meetings of the conference, and the annual gathering was transferred to Mildmay, where it has been held ever since. Mr. Pennefather was the second vicar of Christ Church, Barnet, an edifice erected just fifty years ago by Capt. Trotter, well known to many as an active and devoted Christian. When the conferences began at Mildmay they ceased to be held at Barnet. This year, however, the meeting has been revived, partly to celebrate the jubilee of the church, and partly as an expression of thanksgiving to God for all the blessing that has been reaped from the seed sown at Barnet by Mr. Pennefather.

The present incumbent of Christ Church is Canon Trotter, a son of its founder, Capt. Trotter, and that fact lent an added interest to the gatherings held on three days of last week. Canon Trotter presided at most of the meetings, and cordially extended hospitality to many of the friends who attended from a distance.

On Sabbath week sermons were preached in the church, having special reference to the jubilee. Many happy memories of the past were recalled, and were regarded as reasons for expecting a stream of continued blessing through future days. A preliminary meeting for prayer and thanksgiving was held on Monday evening. This and the subsequent meetings were held in a marquee erected on the vicarage lawn. Mr. Oscar Owers gave a helpful address, and much prayer was made for blessing on the three following days.

The Conference meetings proper were held on the mornings and evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday; the general subject being, "The Love of God in our Salvation, our Sanctification, and our Service." The chief speakers were the Chairman, Revs. Sydenham Dixon, Barnes Lawrence, G. H. C. Macgregor, W. C. Chapman, and E. H. Hopkins, Col. Morton, etc. A peculiarly interesting fact was stated by the last-named friend. It was at the Barnet Conference of 1863 that he was converted, while quartered at Aldershot. Now, as he observed, he fills at Mildmay one of the posts held there by the late Mr. Pennefather. The addresses on the main subject were very helpful and practical. In the afternoons of Tuesday and Thursday there were Bible-readings, the subject on the latter occasion being "The Second Coming of Christ." On Wednesday afternoon a missionary meeting was held when several missionaries gave accounts of work.

If it could be arranged for an earlier period in the year, we doubt not an annual conference at this bracing and beautiful northern suburb would be largely attended, and become a centre of extended blessing.

REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

In a country district beyond Newry a preaching station has been kept open by the Irish Evangelical Society for a number of years past, and worked from Newry by Rev. Thomas Whiteside. Unitarianism held sway here in former years, and was succeeded by a very general indifference to Divine things. Some four years' labours of Mr. Whiteside and friends were much blessed in awakening interest among the people, so that they came out to hear the Word of Life in increasing numbers until the place of meeting proved too small.

At this time a disused corn mill was thought of. After much prayer for guidance it was opened for Gospel services and Sunday-school work in April last. The school has grown rapidly; so has the attendance at the preaching services. Mr. Whiteside and his helpers desired to have a short series of mission services extending over four or five days, and invited Rev. R. H. Noble, secretary of the Irish Evangelical Society, to conduct the meetings. At the end of the series some professed to have found Christ, and others were evidently on the way. Mr. Whiteside carried on the mission, aided by some Christian soldiers of the Cornwall Regiment and other friends, for fourteen days longer. It was a blessed reaping time after four years' faithful service and much prayer. Night after night seekers were pointed to the Saviour, until on Sunday, October 6, the number of converts during the mission had risen to a goodly number.

Classes of converts are being formed for Christian instruction and preparation for service. A Christian Endeavour Society is organised for the younger believers and inquirers. Helper.

THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

This Mission held its annual meetings and farewell to missionaries at Exeter Hall on Tuesday afternoon and evening last week. The first meeting was presided over by Colonel Morton, of Mildmay; the speakers being Rev. J. G. Train, of Norwood, ane several missionaries. Miss Grissell, who had worked at Tunis for seven years, gave a very interesting account of the work carried on; she summed up the people as being "Oppressors and Oppressed." Others spoke of the different methods employed to induce the people to listen to the Gospel—medical missions, sewing classes, and schools for the women and girls; night refuges for the men, and dispensaries for both sexes. The work is carried on among Moslems, Kabyles, Jews, Spaniards, and French; but the labourers are very few for the enormous population.

At the evening meeting, Revs. James Stephens, of Highgate, and Thomas Spurgeon gave eloquent addresses, and some of the returning missionaries spoke of their work. Mr. Edwards, who had worked for over seven years in Morocco, spoke as to the slavery which is still carried on all over the country. He stated that he had seen both in Fez and Tetuan young girls sold in the market-place by public auction, where they were inspected by possible purchasers as if they were cattle—and this happens now within five days' journey of London. Seventy-two missionaries are in the field; eleven more go out in the course of a few days. Their work lies in Morocco, Algeria, the Regency of Tunis, Tripoli, the Sahara, Egypt, and North Arabia.

SLAVERY IN ZANZIBAR.—At a meeting on this subject in the Mansion House on Monday afternoon, Mr. Donald Mackenzie, the special commissioner of the Anti-Slavery Society, described the results of his mission to Zanzibar and the adjacent island of Pemba. He declared that the greater part of the slaves on these islands are held in illegal bondage, even according to Mohammedan law. Of a population of 400,000, some 266,000 are slaves. He believes that at least 6000 slaves are yearly imported thither from the mainland of Africa. He called for instant and efficient action by the British Government to prevent this horrible system. Other friends spoke.

LITERATURE FOR CHINA.

The Christian Literature Society for China was an outcome of the China Mission Conference of 1877. Its headquarters are in Shanghai, and the secretary there is the Rev. Timothy Richard, who is maintained by the Baptist Missionary Society, as his predecessor, Rev. Dr. Williamson, was maintained by the United Presbyterian Missionary Society. Mr. Richard is supported by an influential and representative committee in Shanghai. The name by which the society is known in China is, "The Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge among the Chinese," usually shortened into S.D.K. (Society for Diffusion of Knowledge).

The general aim of the society is the publishing and distribution of books that are fitted to enlighten the Chinese as to what is for their benefit, both temporal and spiritual. So we see on their catalogue not only such books as "The Life of Christ," "The Benefits of Christianity," "The Religions of the World," "Tracts on Immortality," "Communion with God," etc., with a women and children's series, which includes many beautifully illustrated religious books, but also treatises on the benefits of railways, of machinery, electricity, of improved coinage and postal system, of mining; on Western civilisation, English law in China, the importance of international intercourse, the progress of China's neighbours, tracts against foot-binding, prize essays on subjects bearing on the development of the vast resources of the empire, and kindred subjects. The society also publishes two high-class monthlies, one The Review of the Times, with news of the world at large, and the latest developments of Western civilisation, as well as suitable articles of a religious tendency; the other, The Missionary Review, contains information for the strengthening and developing of the energies of the leaders of the native churches.

The authors of the society's books and treatises are not only missionaries but also members of the Consular and Customs Services, who, as a rule, are good Chinese scholars and keenly interested in the welfare of China. The books and tracts are sold at the bookshops of the various mission stations throughout the empire. Free grants are also made to missionaries who reside at the capitals of provinces for distribution among the thousands of literati who attend the examinations at these centres and at Pekin. By the liberality of a German resident in Shanghai the large work on Western civilisation by Dr. Faber has been put into the hands of all high officials. The China Merchants' Company (a native firm) have at their own expense published a fine edition of the society's works to put into the hands of those in high authority.

The funds which carry on this work are still extremely inadequate to the wide aims which the society has in view. The Chinese are only beginning to appreciate the value of such literature. The son of the late Marquis Tseng speaks of it as "a society for which we Chinese have every reason to be grateful." The Viceroy Chang Chih-tung not only reads the publications of the society regularly, but last year showed his appreciation by sending a donation of one thousand taels (£150 or so, at present rate of exchange), to the funds of the society. A few other mandarins have contributed smaller sums, while the China Merchants' Company have given two hundred taels, besides publishing and distributing one of the society's works as mentioned above. Funds from sale of books are on the increase, last year about £235 being realised from this source. As yet, however, the Chinese, as a whole, are not alive to the need of such literature, hence much gratis distribution will be necessary for a long time to come.

It is hoped by all interested in this work for China that the visit of the secretary to this country next year may result in the establishment of many more auxiliaries, and that many more individuals or churches may be led to support depots throughout the empire. The honorary treasurer in Edinburgh is Mr. J. A. Wenley, of the Bank of Scotland, and in Glasgow, Mr. James Drummond, C.A., 58, Bath-street. Either will be happy to receive contributions towards the work of the society, or any of the special objects referred to.

LETTER FROM A STUNDIST.

I have received your letter through my mother-in-law. She writes that she has received the money from you, and will forward it to me. It causes me great sorrow to leave my beloved home, and perhaps for ever, but I am resolved to go whither the Lord will lead me. Apparently I have not much longer to wander in this dreary world. Since my illness, my family have been much cast down, but they hope that Jesus, the great Physician, will soon hear our prayers and restore me perfectly, if it be his will.

Twelve days ago I gave in my petition, with the doctor's certificate of my illness, to the police. In my petition I begged for complete liberty, or if this is impossible, for permission to remove either to Baku, Batoum, Kutais, Cori, or Elizabetpol, because the rough climate has quite ruined my health. At the beginning of this month the Governor was here. Because of bad health I could not go myself, so my wife went to him, and begged for our removal, but he answered that he could not do it, and that we must apply to ——. As the Governor had heard of my sufferings, he advised us to present the petition, so I hope that we shall either be set at liberty or be removed from here.

Next to God, we thank you, and through you all our kind friends, for their love that we have so richly enjoyed for so many years. Please remember us in your prayers, that the Lord will lead us in his own way, and if it be his will, free me from my sufferings, to glorify his holy name.—

MORLEY HALLS, REGENT-STREET.

The "Quiet Days" here are now looked forward to each year as a preparation for the winter's work by the secretaries and workers of the London division Young Women's Christian Association, as well as many others. The gatherings were held on October 2 to 4.

The morning prayer-meeting was a time of quiet waiting upon God, the influence of which was felt throughout the day in every meeting. From eleven to twelve most helpful Bible readings were given by Colonel Oldham, in which God wonderfully prepared all hearts for his messages in the devotional hour which followed, presided over by Mrs. Penn-Lewis .

On Thursday afternoon stirring words came from several missionary sisters, some home on furlough and returning to the work, others leaving for the first time. All testified to the deep need for more workers, especially in India, where Y.W.C.A. secretaries are so sorely needed, and so much work can be carried on in English without need of foreign language. They testified also to the great joy of living with God among the heathen. Sister Lucy gave us many helping loving words.

Most interesting letters were read from some of the Y.W.C.A. workers who have gone out to India, all of which give an urgent invitation to their sisters at home to join them. Hon. Mrs. Waller, of the World's Y.W.C.A., 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W., will be glad to hear from any ladies who will respond or may like to contribute towards Y.W.C.A. work in India or Ceylon. This autumn reinforcements are being sent out. One has sailed for Darjeeling; the other sails shortly for Colombo. A call from Bombay still remains unresponded to.

UNITED HOSPITALS' MISSION.

A successful five-days' mission in connection with the London Medical Prayer Union has been held from October 7-11; meetings were held each evening at the following hospitals:—St. Thomas's, St. Mary's, London, Guy's, St. Bart.'s. The speakers were chiefly University men, among whom were Rev. W. H. Finney (Oxford) and Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby. The meetings were well attended, the aim in all cases being to draw the freshmen especially, that at the outset of their professional career they might be led to take a definite stand for Christ. One is indeed thankful to God that at most of the great seats of medical learning, there are branches of the Medical Prayer Union, whose object is to unite men in the bonds of Christian love and sympathy to work and witness for Him. The influence of such a Union is untold.

THE BURIAL OF MOSES.*

By the late Mrs. Alexander.

And He buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor, but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day.—Deut. xxxiv. 6.

By Nebo's lonely mountain,
On this side Jordan's wave,
In a vale in the land of Moab
There lies a lonely grave.
And no man knows that sepulchre,
And no man saw it e'er,
For the angels of God upturned the sod,
And laid the dead man there.

That was the grandest funeral
That ever passed on earth;
But no man heard the trampling,
Or saw the train go forth—
Noiselessly as the daylight
Comes back when night is done,
And the crimson streak on ocean's cheek
Grows into the great sun;

Noiselessly as the springtime,
Her crown of verdure weaves,
And all the trees on all the hills,
Open their thousand leaves;
So without sound of music,
Or voice of them that wept,
Silently down from the mountain's crown,
The great procession swept.

Perchance the bald old eagle,
On grey Beth-peor's height,
Out of his lonely eyrie,
Looked on the wondrous sight;
Perchance the lion stalking,
Still shuns that hallowed spot,
For beast and bird have seen and heard
That which man knoweth not.

But when the warrior dieth,
His comrades in the war,
With arms reversed and muffled drum,
Follow his funeral car;
They show the banners taken,
They tell his battles won,
And after him lead his masterless steed,
While peals the minute gun.

Amid the noblest of the land
We lay the sage to rest,
And give the bard an honoured place,
With costly marble drest,
In the great minster transept,
Where lights like glories fall,
And the organ rings, and the sweet choir sings,
Along the emblazoned wall.

This was the truest warrior
That ever buckled sword;
This the most gifted poet
That ever breathed a word.
And never earth's philosopher
Traced with his golden pen,
On the deathless page truths half so sage
As he wrote down for men.

And had he not high honour?—
The hill-side for a pall,
To lie in state while angels wait,
With stars for tapers tall,
And the dark rock-pines, like tossing plumes,
Over his bier to wave,
And God's own hand in that lonely land
To lay him in the grave—

In that strange grave without a name,
Whence his uncoffined clay
Shall break again, and wondrous thought!
Before the judgment day,
And stand with glory wrapped around
On the hills he never trod,
And speak of the strife that won our life
With the incarnate Son of God.

O lonely grave in Moab's land!
O dark Beth-peor's hill!
Speak to these curious hearts of ours,
And teach them to be still.
God hath his mysteries of grace,
Ways that we cannot tell;
He hides them deep, like the hidden sleep
Of him He loved so well.

* The death of Mrs. C. F. Alexander suggests the desirability of bringing before our young readers her beautiful poem, which, when first written, charmed many who are now advancing into years, and has been universally admired as literature, and as an interpretation of Scripture story.

THE BAPTIST UNION.

The Baptist Union meetings at Portsmouth began with a large and enthusiastic home mission meeting in the Town Hall. The chair was taken by Rev. C. D. Joseph, who is at present a specially prominent figure in the town. The cheers which greeted him when he rose to address the audience were evidently intended as an expression of confidence in him, and of sympathy with him in the troubles he has recently had to meet. The speech of Mrs. Bonwick was an earnest plea for the evangelisation of the villages. The sincerity of our interest in foreign missions would be proved only if we were concerned for home missions. An eloquent and rousing speech on "Some Conditions of Social Progress" followed from Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, of Norwich. His closing appeal on behalf of the Church Extension Scheme, of which he has been such an earnest advocate, moved the audience to considerable enthusiasm. The opening of the Extension Church at Blackburn was a specimen of the kind of work the scheme proposed to do, and there were opportunities for doing it in many other places. Very little time was left for Rev. W. Cuff, but he held the audience in a cheery talk about "Men, Money, and Movement."

Tuesday was devoted to the Baptist Missionary Society. If there was one cause for regret in connection with the valedictory service it was that only two new missionaries were going into the field. The addresses of returning missionaries told of fields white unto harvest; of people ready to hear and to receive the messengers; of open doors all over the world; of lonely labourers oppressed with the weight of needs which, single-handed, they are unable to meet. Two new missionaries are a very poor and unworthy response to such an appeal.

Very touching was the story told at the Zenana meeting by Mrs. T. Richards, of Shanghai. During the awful famine some years ago millions were dying only four hundred miles away from where ample stores of good grain were piled almost mountains high. The people perished, not because there was no food for them, but because there was no means of carrying it to them.

A most important point was raised by Rev. Chas. Williams in his appropriate and touching valedictory address. It is to be feared that one mistake of mission work hitherto has been that of taking too much care of our mission converts, and not showing confidence in them by trusting them with a share in the work of saving others. Among instances of the remarkable growth of missionary churches without the presence of the missionary Mr. Williams mentioned Madagascar, in which during a time of cruel and bitter persecution, when missionaries were excluded, the native Christians increased twentyfold in twenty years. The Baptist work in the Cameroons is another illustration of the same kind. In 1885, when the English Baptist missionaries were called to retire from the work, the converts numbered 285. Ten years afterwards the numbers had grown to 1355. The lesson from these facts is:—Trust the native Christians. No men ever render their best service until they are trusted. This is a lesson that has been insisted on more than once in these pages. We commend Mr. Williams's facts to the notice of all missionary committees.

The aim of Dr. Pentecost's sermon in the afternoon was to show that foreign missionary work is not a modern side-issue of the Church; and a great amount of Scripture was referred to in proof of the fact that the participation of the Gentiles in Gospel blessings was intended from the first.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

The real business of the Union began on Wednesday, when the president, Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of, Leicester, gave his address. In many respects it was one of the most remarkable addresses delivered from the presidential chair. The manner of its delivery was also remarkable. Without once consulting his printed copy, Mr. Greenhough repeated it, with scarcely a word different from what was found in the pamphlet sold at the doors. This was no mean achievement in view of the fact that the address occupied an hour and a-quarter in the delivery. The title of the address was "A Free Churchman's Thoughts about the Church." His definition of a Church was a company gathered together in the name of Christ, to worship Him, and to do his will. "There can be no question," he said, "about the consecration of the building when He condescends to enter; no doubt about the validity of the sacraments where the real Presence is enjoyed; no need of bishops when the one Archbishop presides; no want of the Holy Ghost when He breathes upon the faces of his disciples; and no longing for communion unrealised where souls are joined in mystical fellowship with Him."

The subject of Reunion, so much to the front today, has seldom been touched more wisely than in this address. The demand that the Nonconformist should accept the Historic Episcopate only showed how entirely the position of Free Churchmen was misunderstood. "We attach no value whatever to those orders which are with Churchmen of supreme importance; and we regard their solicitude in this matter as the outgrowth of an anxiety to exalt the privileges of a priestly caste." Referring to the statement of the Archbishop of Canterbury, that "our divisions are a chief obstacle to the progress of the Gospel," Mr. Greenhough replied: "In no other department would a proper division of labour be regarded as a hindrance to progress and production. The hindrance lies, not in the multiplicity of operations, but in the want of sympathy and mutual recognition among the workers. It is not our divisions that retard the Gospel, but the envies, jealousies, prides, and uncharities which men bring into them; the poverty of love and imagination which claims for a small arc of the circle all the grace which God makes to flow through the whole circumference; the ungenerous competition which cares not how it weakens its neighbour's part of the wall, if it may but strengthen its own; the personal vanities and disputes about the infinitely little which needlessly multiply congregations; the occasional malignity which puts the dissenting sanctuary and the beerhouse into the same class, and the general waste of energy which compasses sea and land to make a proselyte, when it might be moving heaven and earth to make a Christian."

The unity which means the denial of one's deepest convictions was described as worthless. There must be great beliefs in common, or unity is a mere pretence. It is of no use joining hands around an empty shrine, or marching together under a flag which means nothing in particular. We cling to those great and vital truths which have been substantially the heritage and jealously preserved treasure of the Universal Church, and only on the basis of these are we prepared to recognise communion. If men think they have a part in the Church, who have given up nearly everyone of her distinctive doctrines, who call in question the Incarnation, the Divinity of our Lord, the Atonement, and the supernatural and miraculous, it is not for us to deny their claims. We leave that to our Master's wiser judgment. But while we are ready to work with all good men in furthering moral and righteous ends, we must part company at those hallowed places where our Master meets with us, unless our lips can say in common, "My Lord and my God."

Other quotations might be given, but these are enough to indicate the character of the whole address. It was listened to throughout with the greatest interest by a large assembly of delegates and friends.

The whole of Wednesday afternoon was occupied in discussing the reply of the Baptist Union to to the English people. The vice-president, Principal T. Vincent Tymms, had drawn up the letter, which was wise and weighty, courteous yet convincing. If we had space we should be glad to reproduce it in full. The resolution that the letter be adopted led to considerable discussion. First an amendment was carried referring the matter back to the officers of the Union, to be brought up at the meetings in spring. When this became the substantive motion, other suggestions were made, until a resolution was carried to the effect that the letter be addressed as an open letter to the Pope. To us it seems a pity that the matter should have provoked such controversy. It may be taken for granted that the enemy will make the most of the discussion, and endeavour to turn it to their own advantage. W.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN CHINA.

The recent war has aroused many of the leading Chinese, and they realise that nothing but Western education and civilisation can save their nation. As Christians, we must teach them that the religion of the Lord Jesus is the only basis of all true reform. The Anglo-Chinese College, Theological school, Biblical training schools, medical work, women's training schools, boys' and girls' boarding schools, and day-schools, have had an increased attendance, are exerting a wider influence and creating a greater interest than ever before. Bright young men and women are being educated and trained for positions of influence and usefulness. Many who have already gone out from our hall, are proving themselves efficient workers.

In 1893 I had three day schools, in 1894 sixteen, and now I have just one hundred, with about 3000 pupils. Within the past six months we have brought fully 2000 children under Christian influence for the first time. They are now daily studying Christian books and learning to sing our beautiful hymns. A four years' course of study for the teachers, upon which they are to be examined annually, and a course for the pupils upon which they are to be examined quarterly, have been adopted. A pastor visits each school at least once a week for the purpose of helping and encouraging the work; he also superintends quarterly examinations. Some of my best schools are held in heathen temples and ancestral halls; where idols have been worshipped for generations, the Bible is now studied, its truths preached, the songs of Zion sung, and the God of the universe worshipped. Rev. N. J. Plumb recently dedicated a heathen temple to the worship of the True God, and the time is nigh at hand when scores will be thus transformed.

I have been obliged to refuse more than thirty urgent requests to open schools in as many different places. In eight instances the people were told that if they wanted schools they should go on and support them as far as possible themselves, and if money could be raised they should have help. The money came, but not until the schools had been opened for six months. We insist upon every pupil paying something towards the support of the schools, unless poverty compels them to live on two meals a day. The self-support will average about twenty per cent. of the expense of the schools. These schools are supported by "special gifts," and by the people here. We depend on no missionary fund, but upon God and the generosity of his people. These sources have not failed us in the past, and we believe will not in the future. Before January 1, 1896, I hope to receive pledges to support two hundred day schools, one hundred in addition to those already established.

CHURCH CONGRESS AT NORWICH.

[By a Special Correspondent.]

During the last week the Church Congress has met in Norwich; perhaps its second visit to the city is a symbol of the untiring energy of the new Bishop and Dean. It would be useless and impossible to review all the gatherings of the Congress. Three simultaneous meetings have been held morning and afternoon in the largest halls of the City, besides gatherings of working men and women in the evening. The most interesting discussions were those connected with "Hindrances to Christian Unity," the "National Church," the "Second Coming of Christ," and the "Observance of the Lord's Day." It was expected that the "Authority of Holy Scripture" and "National Education" would lead to very warm debates, but there was no scene with Father Ignatius this time, and Mr. Athelstan Riley was absent.

The subject of the relation of Anglicanism to the Roman Church has undoubtedly attracted most attention. The only disorderly meeting during the week was that of the English Church Union on the Monday night, when the speech of Lord Halifax was delivered amid a hurricane of protest. In my judgment it cannot serve the cause of truth that the Protestant brigade should patrol the streets with banners emblazoned with the Smithfield fires, or that they should fill the air with violent cries of "Down with Popery."

On Tuesday morning the Archbishop of York in the opening sermon at the cathedral preached from Eph. iv. 3-6. After traversing the claims of Rome, he distinctly declared that the Church would never submit itself to Papal despotism; that the claim of supremacy had been investigated again and again, and deliberately rejected; that it was regarded as an interference with spiritual liberty, and contrary to the mind and will of Christ. The president of the Congress in his address also described the Roman claims as preposterous.

On the Thursday afternoon Lord Halifax again introduced the subject of reunion with Rome. No doubt he had a considerable following in the meeting, and, in addition to that, Englishmen always admire pluck, but the general feeling was unmistakably against him. Canon Garrett, of Ipswich, asserted that there were hindrances between the Church of Rome and the Anglican Church which nothing could remove, and which it was useless to attempt even to diminish. The audience received with loud expressions of assent and dissent his references to the "man of sin" and the "scarlet woman;" but it was left for the Dean of Norwich, with inimitable skill, humour, and decisiveness, to utter an emphatic protest against such dallyings with Rome as Lord Halifax has indulged in. Amid loud laughter, he reminded his lordship that the catechism taught that we ought to submit ourselves to our spiritual pastors and masters, and therefore before setting out on his mission to the Pope he should have expected his lordship at least to consult the Archbishop of Canterbury. On the whole, the strong Protestantism which is not yet extinct in the Church of England found a very considerable expression.

There has been undoubtedly of late years a softening of the relation between Churchmen and Evangelical Nonconformists. In the Anglican Church there are multitudes of good men who like Barnabas, when they see the grace of God, are glad, At Keswick and elsewhere those who belong to different communities kneel together on the basis of common spiritual experience and hopes. The pastoral letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury at Whitsuntide on Christian Unity—such acts of courtesy and fellowship as the reception of the Nonconformist ministers at Bishopthorpe by the Archbishop of York, and of the Primitive Methodist Conference at Durham, by Dr. Westcott, have undoubtedly fostered a disposition for peace. On the Tuesday afternoon a deputation of Nonconformist ministers presented an address to the Congress, which was read by Rev. W. A. McAllan (Presbyterian), and supported by the Rev. J. H. Shakespeare (Baptist), who had been appointed the official spokesman of his brethren. It was unfortunate that no announcement had been made on the official programme, and most of the members of the Congress were perhaps rather puzzled as to what was really taking place, but the incident made a favourable impression. The Bishop responded in most kindly terms, recognising the blessing of God which had followed the labours of Nonconformists at home and on the mission field. Later on, he emphasized the fact that "Churchmen and Nonconformists were beginning to work together more cordially for the overcoming of sin and misery."

The subject was again introduced on the Thursday morning by Canon Garnier. There were, of course, some very strong declarations that the "Historic Episcopate" and the apostolic ministry could never be regarded as an open question, but we are much more struck with the sympathetic nature of the discussion than with the expression of differences. There was little bitterness of feeling, and a marked desire on the part of some of the speakers to understand the Nonconformist position. One Churchman, Rev. H. Sutton, said that although the hindrances to unity were very great, he did not believe them to be insuperable, and he rebuked those clergymen very plainly who were as proud as peacocks if they were mistaken for Romish priests, but who would blush for shame if they were supposed to be Nonconformist ministers. No one imagined that organic union was possible in our generation, but at least there was a strong desire for a better understanding.

On the fourth day of the Congress a devotional meeting was held, at which papers were read by Archdeacon Perowne and Rev. H. C. G. Moule on "The Second Coming of Christ." It was a novel feature of the Congress, but a most fitting close. The archdeacon declared that to the Second Coming of our Lord all avenues of Christian hope and thought, of Christian work and effort, converge; and that even now, above the loud tide of human care and sin, and above the clamour of controversy, the Church could hear the long-expected cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." Mr. Moule said that the extraordinary development of missionary enterprise within the last ten years suggested that in another decade we might see such numbers of well-equipped messengers in the foreign field as to make the preparation of the way for the glorious return of Christ anything but a visionary prospect.

The least satisfactory discussion, to my thinking, was that on the "Observance of the Lord's Day." The reader of the paper, Mr. J. Murray, while conceding the value of Sunday observance, and that Sabbath occupations should not be allowed to interfere with religious worship, said that such games as golf, lawn-tennis, cricket, and football were proper games for Sunday under certain restrictions. Another speaker viewed Sunday bands and the opening of art galleries and museums with favour. It is my deliberate conviction, however, that there is the gravest danger in any practice or teaching which lessens the sanctity of the Lord's Day in the minds of the English people. I regard it as nothing less than criminal selfishness on the part of the upper classes to endanger the toilers' day of rest that they may add a little more to their abundant leisure for amusements and sports. On the other hand, if the working classes know their own interests they will maintain inviolate the English Sunday, which not only affords to them the opportunity of worship, but also protects them from a round of unceasing labour. I am not sufficiently acquainted with Church Congresses to compare this with earlier ones, but the general opinion seems to be that while not containing any very notable features it has been a distinct success.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.

After another year of faithful and devoted stewardship in the service of the little ones, Mrs. Hilton has sent out her report—the twenty-fourth. With her great motherly heart, so full of practical sympathy towards those who most sorely need it, she has, "by patient continuance in well doing," for nearly a quarter of a century been able to send help and happiness into many lives and homes in East London. It gratifies us exceedingly to note that the recent appeal which our friend made to her kind subscribers was generously responded to, and that her financial burden is less heavy at this juncture than it has sometimes been. But the daily and weekly outlay goes on, and of course there is a need for constant supply, so that the good work may not suffer. We make a few extracts from the report, the perusal of which in its entirety we commend to our readers. Copies may be had from Mrs. Hilton, Shore House, Shore-road, South Hackney, N.E.:—

"Although our pathway has been among the shadows, we have been helped over many difficulties that blocked our way, and once again we are enabled to say in truth, and with deep thankfulness, that hitherto the Lord has helped us. When necessity, in the shape of some epidemic, compels us to close the Crèche, it is always a sorrowful time for both mothers and nurses. In the summer the loss of the convenience is not so severely felt, for the children can be kept out in the air; but in the winter months it means danger to life through cold, hunger, and neglect, although we never lose sight of our children, and do all we can to alleviate their condition. . . .

"One cannot help being struck with the extreme delicacy of the women who bring their children to us, and one wonders how they are able to exist from day to day. And how hopefully they work, and with what grand patience!—only earning sufficient for a bare subsistence.

"In reviewing the year's work of the Infant Home, I am happy to say that we have been enabled to alleviate much suffering, and to afford temporary relief in many sad cases. The Home has fulfilled its purpose to the extent of the means at our disposal. But how little we have done in comparison with the great and increasing needs of the neighbourhood! It is one of the saddest and most trying things in connection with this branch of the work to be obliged to refuse case after case, all deserving of assistance, and some truly heart-rending in their distress. Applications for admission continue to reach me almost daily.

"We still have several cots to be adopted, and should be glad if friends would help us in this way. Combined with the mothers' pence, £15 a year will provide for a child for one year in the Home, £10 in the Infirmary, and £6 in the Crèche.

"To those ladies who would like to help us with clothing, and are anxious to know what articles are most needed, we may mention that we are always glad to receive flannel petticoats with calico bodies, for babies from three months to two years old, print frocks and pinafores of the same size, warm frocks and petticoats, night dresses, etc., for little girls from three to eight years old, and boots and shoes for children of all ages. The Crèche and Infirmary accommodate from eighty to 100 children daily, whose ages vary from three weeks to five years. In the Home we have forty residents.

"I am looking forward to the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the Crèche, when I shall probably call friends and subscribers together to consult them as to the future of the institution. Many friends have made welcome contributions of clothing during the year, and we have also received goods for a Bazaar which we intend holding some time in February, 1896, and we trust the proceeds will be sufficient to place the institution in a more hopeful financial position."

THE BIBLE LEAGUE.

A most interesting conference, under the auspices of the Bible League, was held at Bournemouth on Thursday and Friday of last week. Six meetings were held at the Shaftesbury Hall, the audiences increasing in number at each gathering till the hall was well filled. Hon. General Ward (Christchurch), General Hutchinson, Revs. S. A. Selwyn (Vicar of Boscombe), Geo. Wainwright, and Wm. C. Minifie, and Mr. R. C. Morgan presided at the various meetings.

Powerful addresses on the "Full Inspiration of the Bible" were delivered by Rev. Talbot Greaves (vicar of Holy Trinity, Torquay), Rev. J. B. Barraclough (vicar of St. Thomas's, Lambeth), Rev. Wm. Cuff (Shoreditch), Rev. G. D. Hooper (Luton), and Rev. John Urquhart (late of Weston-super-Mare). Two afternoon lectures by Mr. Urquhart, on "Inspiration" and "The Testimony of the Monuments," were leading features.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of Richmond Hill Congregational Church, Bournemouth, preached a masterly discourse on the Bible, in way of preface, the previous Sunday evening; and Mr. Minifie, in Lansdowne Chapel, closed the conference with another sermon last Lord's Day evening. There is reason to believe that great blessing has resulted from the testimony to the claims of the Scriptures as the infallible Word of God. Other conferences of a like kind are about to be held at Derby, Reading, Bristol, various districts of London, and other parts of the provinces. Any information that is desired on the work and aims of the Bible League can be had from the Secretary, 10, Paternoster-row, E.C.

PROGRESS IN MEXICO.

Rev. Dr. Siberts, Methodist Episcopal missionary at Queretaro, Mexico, writing to the New York Independent, says:—On all sides are manifest traces of the silent but powerful influences exerted by the Gospel through missionary effort. It would be difficult to find a town in the Republic of Mexico, however remote, that has not felt this influence. I will present only one instance of a hundred that might be given. I once passed through the mountains of Central Mexico, three days' travel from any railroad, and where native races alone are found. Our Indian guide led us through a native village of thatched huts. We rather feared the people, and had no intention of making ourselves known. An old man approached us and asked for a Bible. He said, "As soon as I saw you I knew you were missionaries." No missionary had ever visited that district before. This experience could be duplicated in the most out-of-the-way places in any State in the Republic. The whole country seems to be in expectancy and waiting for the Gospel. What may be called the indirect influence of the Gospel is everywhere apparent, although the people here do not fully realise it.

Every year the demand for the Bible increases. In 1894 the American Bible Society employed fifty colporteurs, who traversed Mexico in every direction. Thousands of Bibles were given away, and 29,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions were sold for over 8000dols. This shows that Mexicans want the Gospel and will pay for it. Gospel truths are making themselves felt even in the Government schools, where all religion is prohibited by law. Students are inquisitive, and buy our books and tracts. The Government college of the State of Guanojuato has for its motto the words of our Saviour, "The truth shall make you free." Whether they realised it or not, they have crowned Christ as the Great Teacher. God grant that they may all soon have that truth that will make them free indeed.

BARRY DOCK TENT WORK.—The gracious awakening which has taken place in connection with the tent at Barry Dock necessitates the work being continued. The recent gales have told tremendously on the tent, and it must very soon come down. We are hoping to put up soon a cheap structure, chiefly of wood, to hold some 400 people. At the least it will cost £100. Mr. John Cory has promised to give £25 if we can get the remainder. It seems sad to stop this pioneer work for a few pounds. Sailors from all parts visit these docks; their conversion is far-reaching in its results. Gerald Coultas.

A STORM IN THE NORTH SEA.

The doctor now engaged in evangelistic and medical mission work on board the Alice Fisher, one of the four hospital ships employed by the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, writes as follows:—

The beautifully fine weather we experieneed at first underwent a sudden and most unexpected change last week. I have previously been through one or two smart storms in lats. 62 to 63, on one occasion losing our rudder and one of the blades of the propeller by the ice, but I never saw a sea such as I witnessed here on Friday last. Anyone who has never witnessed a storm breaking over the shallow waters of the Dogger Bank would find it impossible to form any adequate idea of the wildness, the grandeur, the fury of the scene. The surface of the dark waters was lashed and tortured into writhing and convulsive waves, which swept over our decks from stem to stern; occasionally a majestic mountainous billow would hurl its defiance against our quarter, and break right over us. Hatchways battened down, skylights on deck boarded over, and under three-reef main, a fore and mizzen sails, the Alice Fisher behaved admirably, and we suffered no further inconvenience than some water down the companion and a thoroughly good knocking about. There was no betrayal of timidity or cowardice in even the youngest of our crew—a lad of seventeen. Why should there be? With "Christ in the vessel" we could afford to "smile at the storm." We felt that He was standing at the helm, and above the rolling and roaring of the waves his voice whispered to our hearts, "Peace, be still."

Two men from the smack John Brown lost their lives on Thursday, at the commencement of the storm. They were on board here to see me about some trifling ailment only last Sunday morning, and I had an opportunity of speaking to them about Jesus and the way of Salvation—not for the first time—but oh! had I but known it would be my last opportunity, how much more earnestly might I have urged the claims of a crucified Redeemer. Let us hope that in the providence of God they came to our Bethel ship last Sunday morning not for medicine, but for a life-line by which the shore of eternal peace may have been gained.

I am glad to be on the North Sea again. I love the fishermen. I grieve for many whose lot I know to be cast in places where the temptations to evil are manifold, and the opportunities for religious improvements are but few. God grant the weather may admit of our carrying the message of his love to many a fisherman's heart this voyage—a voyage which cannot be too prolonged for me, if Christ is getting souls for his inheritance.

CONVALESCENT HOME FOR YOUTHS.

The letter of your correspondent last week leads us to say that a Home for Youths was opened on the South Coast last spiring at Lancing-on-Sea, near Worthing. Here all through the past season, to the extent of the accommodation provided, youths from twelve years upwards and a few men have enjoyed seaside rest and change at a moderate charge to their lasting benefit; many grateful letters from whom have been received. There being no subscribers' letters necessary, the benefits are open to all.

Lancing is specially suitable from its climatic advantages for winter residence, and it is hoped that by making the existence of the Youths' and Men's Home more widely known, it may be found possible to keep it open during the winter months.

A suitable plot of land has been offered on the sea front, and hopes are entertained that the present cottage may give place to a larger and more convenient Home before the ensuing warmer season. The Home is conducted on the "family" plan, the matron being an earnest Christian lady, and the Christian tone has proved most stimulating to many grown weary through the toil and burden of the way. MEDICAL MISSIONS.

The students of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society belong to all Evangelical denominations, and are largely drawn from churches outside of Scotland. The Society has supplied a considerable number of medical missionaries to the Church Missionary Society, the London Missionary Society, and other English organisations.

It is felt that an Association which provides such facilities for English students being trained for the foreign field should have a much larger support from England than it has hitherto received. Large meetings have lately been held in Southport, Preston, Birkenhead, and Chester. At the latter meeting a remarkable interest was manifested in the work of the Society. The churches and the leading medical men of the city so heartily united that the meeting was one of the largest and most enthusiastic ever held in Chester. Ireland, also, has recently received attention, with the result that great meetings were held and much interest awakened in Belfast, Londonderry, etc.

Meetings are about to be held in Bristol, Bath, Ealing, Brighton, Reigate, and other places in the south of England, and we would bespeak for the Society the welcome which its operations deserve.

MEXICO AND CHILI.

We recently announced that Mr. Walters, of the Scripture Gift Mission (84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.), was sending copies of the Illustrated Spanish Gospels to Mexico City, for distribution during an idolatrous Romish festival. Mr. Walters was enabled, by the kindness of Christian friends, to send several thousand copies to different workers in the city. One of the recipients, Rev. W. H. Sloan, writes: "I can hardly tell you how grateful I am for this precious seed, which I will see is sown with care."

Pastor Neveu, of Galvarino, Chili, to whom Gospels were also sent, writes: "A good part of the copies already received have been distributed. The Chilians, except the most ignorant, who are enslaved by the priests, are ready to receive the good tidings. There is, sad to say, general hardness of heart, but the Lord can change that. The door, however, is wide open, and in all parts there are Evangelical places of worship. The Lord bless all those who have interested themselves in this work, which is so evidently according to the mind of Christ."

DOVER SOLDIERS' HOME.

The new report shows good work for the past year, with token of genuine results among the red coats. Letters from soldiers now in India and other parts testify to the blessing granted. We hear that the Home is much in need of funds. The expenditure has been increased by absolutely necessary repairs during the year, and the Home has lost several supporters by death and other causes. Those who have the spiritual welfare of our soldiers at heart will surely aid this work, which has been a blessing to many of our soldiers both at home and abroad. Communications may be made to Miss Wright, Lady Superintendent, Soldiers' Home, Dover.

THE ANNUAL REPORT of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland shows that colportage as an agency was never more acceptable, nor more needful than at the present moment. The churches in Ireland are now largely interested in their own agencies, and are doing excellent work, yet there are attached friends of this society in all the churches, who value it as a platform on which Christians of all the Protestant denominations can meet and work for the good of Ireland. The report tells of 83,270 families visited, 98,328 sales made, including 1,178 Douay Testaments. There were also 44,851 tracts distributed.

TONGOA, NEW HEBRIDES.—Rev. Oscar Michelsen, writing from Tongoa, New Hebrides, in July last, said: "The work for which we live continues to prosper. Do not suppose that there are not a thousand little things to try us; but these are only spiritual tonics, and things are going forward for all that. As an indication of that I may mention that three weeks ago I baptized seventy-two men and women on their profession of faith in Jesus. They were first instructed by the teachers, and then examined by myself. They had also been attending my Friday afternoon Bible-class for over a year. The Sunday before last 193 of us sat down at the Lord's table, and there was a cash collection of £13 4s. as an expression of gratitude to the Saviour.'

Letters to the Editor.

OPPRESSED ARMENIA.

Dear Sir,—Will you not appeal to all your readers to make constant prayer and intercession with Almighty God, that for Jesus' sake He will put forth his power to deliver the Armenians from their cruel persecutors? God hears prayer, and how often when human aid has been of no use (and the best of such is but a broken reed to lean on) has the power of God destroyed the might of the oppressor!

Will not churches and chapels and every Christian who kneels daily at the throne of grace, send up earnest petitions continually? Was ever fasting and prayer more called for than now, when those who believe on the Name of Christ are being trodden down by the heel of the false prophet? I write from feelings of pity and indignation. And there is so little help in man.—Yours in the faith,

Torquay. C. Hall.

AFTER THE CONFERENCE — TEMPTATION.

Sir,—It is a cause for deep thankfulness to see how our God is answering prayer, and stirring so many tens of thousands to seek for a far fuller and deeper experience of communion with God, as evidenced in the great number who have attended at Mildmay, Keswick, and similar conventions, and especially at the very remarkable gathering last week in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End; and we may be sure that our God will abundantly bless the thousands who have afresh given themselves to Him.

But it may be well to give a word of warning to any who may be expecting the answer to their prayers in having a continuance of the feelings they experience, and who think that the fulness of the Spirit will be evidenced only by joyous emotion or power in the conversion of souls.

Immediately after his baptism, our blessed Jesus was "led of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil," and "He was there in the wilderness forty days tempted of Satan, and was with the wild beasts." Of what most of those temptations were we have no record, but we are told He "was in all points tempted like as we are." Then began that unspeakably glorious ministry which culminated in the Cross.

It is well to be reminded that blessing is of God's infinite grace to lost sinners, and that, therefore, spiritual enjoyment or spiritual power is not an outflow from "entire consecration," or "absolute surrender"; but that the "holy calling" is "according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the world began," and that an act of "entire consecration" or "absolute surrender" is only a surrender by faith whereby we claim blessings which are already given us in Christ Jesus. Therefore such acts do not cause God to be willing to give blessing, but are the expression of our desire to be receivers to the full of the inexhaustible treasures of grace in Jesus.

But all faith must be tested, and as long as there is faith in Jesus, the seductions of temptation, the depression from fierce spiritual assault, may indeed harass, but will not move us from the path of obedience, and amidst conflict and storm. "It is Written" will determine our action.

We all know the glorious revelation of Jesus in the first ten chapters of the Hebrews. Then the examples of faith in chap. xi., and then the exhortations to the pilgrim life of faith and patience which close the Epistle. James immediately follows:—"Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing that the trying of your faith worketh patience." Peter begins with the triumphant burst—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us...to an inheritance incorruptible," then, "though, if need be ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations"—yet believing (in Jesus) "ye rejoice."

It is to be feared that the expectation of some has been based more on an act of "entire consecration" or "absolute surrender" on their part; and, therefore, when they have a fresh sight of their own utter helplessness, the edifice of happiness which was built on the quicksands of self-action, almost immediately crumbles away. Perhaps Peter thought that he was the Rock (petra) on which the Church was to be built, and that self-confidence led to the fall, which showed him he was only a stone (petros), and that he and others were "living stones," built on the immovable Rock of Ages.

One thought more. The Holy Ghost can never make us satisfied with ourselves, but will reveal our need, and that Jesus is the Alpha and the Omega; that "all the fulness of the Godhead dwells in Him bodily," and that we "are complete in Him," and only in Him, and that "severed from Him we can do nothing." Temptation is to show us our need, and so is to make us live closer. The forty years in the wilderness were "to humble thee, and to prove thee, and to show thee what was in thy heart," and it brought them to Jordan, the only way out of it, the burial of self.

"Buried with Him by baptism unto death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."

In the Epistle to the Ephesians alone believers are spoken of thirty times as being in (en) Christ, or God, or the Holy Spirit—that is the power for service and life.—Yours faithfully, Radstock.

MISSION AT SHOREDITCH TABERNACLE.

A series of blessed Gospel meetings have been held here by Dr. Harry Guinness. Night by night crowds came to hear "the word of the truth of the Gospel," and it was spoken in much simplicity and power. Every night the after-meetings were very largely attended, and the spirit of prayer was abundantly poured out on the people. Every night, too, there were many inquirers. These so increased as the mission went on that the vestries were not large enough to hold them, and the large hall had to be opened. Very many decided for the Lord, and will now join the Church at the Tabernacle or some other in the neighbourhood.

On Saturday night, Dr. Guinness gave his medical lecture to men only. It was a scene never to be forgotten, I only wish that those who object to such lectures could have seen what we saw and heard at the close. More than a hundred men came into the enquiry room—broken, anxious, troubled—some of them half mad to know what they could do to be delivered from self and sin. Most of them were young men, and oh, they seemed so earnest, and honest, and anxious, that we could only weep and pray. Many of them will be saved, and become useful men in our churches.

The whole neighbourhood has been roused. Dr. Guinness sent down between forty and fifty students from his training institute every day, to visit every street, court, and slum, and ask the people to come to the services. Hundreds did come as the result. The students were bright, brave, and happy, and went about the work with devotion and enthusiasm. They were intensely earnest in visiting, in the services, and in the inquiry room. What better training could they have than this in a place like Shoreditch, Hoxton, and Bethnal Green?

This has been a mission greatly used and owned by Him in two ways. First, very many Christians have been quickened and blessed; their spiritual life has been deepened. Secondly, many souls have been saved. Some who had been long seeking found the Lord, and others, who were careless and indifferent, have been moved and brought to concern and faith. I bear my testimony gladly as one who was at all the meetings and saw how the blessed work was done by Dr. Guinness and the students. I am sure other Christians will rejoice to hear of the work, and the blessing which the Lord granted to it all.

There is to be a meeting of all the inquirers and converts in a few days. Will all who read this pray that our gracious Lord will guide and bless the speakers and those who come? Mr. Cuff asks for special prayer for so important a gathering.

EVANGELICAL PROTESTANT UNION.—At the seventeeth annual conference, held a few days ago at Manchester, Sir Robert Phayre presiding, there was a useful discussion on the study of Holy Scripture. Rev. T. W. H. Copner, of Liverpool, said that, as we look round and see men of learning and genius groping in darkness, and reading God's Word only to criticise it, and on the other hand humble Christians, hardly able to read or write, understanding the inner meaning of the sacred volume in a way which many learned men know nothing of, we can see the effects of prayerful study of the Word under the teaching of the Holy Spirit. Rev. J. G. Rainsford, D.D., rector of Dundalk, followed with a similar paper. The Bible, he said, was not a book of science as the word was generally understood. But it was a book for all ages and all classes. It wonderfully harmonises with modern science. The Bible was a message from God's heart to our hearts. There were dark places in the Bible, but we need not stay in them, but pass on to plainer. The Bible is like a legal document—a great deal depended on the right interpretation of it. The Rev. A. A. Isaacs (Bath) delivered a short speech on the same subject.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

It is stated that Professor Henry Drummond's health will necessitate his wintering at Cairo.

A new temperance organisation, entitled "The Loyal Order of United Abstainers," has been formed in Glasgow by dissidents from the Good Templars.

A correspondent of the Aberdeen Free Press reports the consolidation of the Free Church Secession movement in the Highlands, and asserts that it will be permanent.

Mr. James Stevenson, of Largs, has given £1000 to the Miners' Mission Fund of the Free Church, a fund started by Dr. Hood Wilson at last Assembly for supplying ordinances in mining villages.

The death is announced at Larbert Free Church Manse of the Rev. P. G. Balfour, the son of Rev. William Balfour, D.D., of Holyrood Free Church. The cause of death was typhoid fever. His ministry was attended with remarkable success, and he was very much esteemed by all who knew him.

The two Aberdeen Presbyterian Synods at their recent meetings held special conferences. The Established Synod discussed the question of Christian Life and Thought, the chief topic being "The Church and Its Creeds." The brethren of the Free Church had a meeting on Home Missions.

The usual annual Christian conference at Dumfries was held last week, and was well attended. Rev. Sir Emilius Laurie, the convener, had gathered around him a number of able speakers. A good many of the addresses dealt with the inspiration and authority of the Bible, and its paramount claims as compared with other sacred books.

A conference was held at Craiglockhart Hydropathic, near Edinburgh, under the auspices of the Christian Life and Work Committee, from October 7 to 9. The purpose of the conference was that ministers, probationers, and elders of the Church of Scotland might meet together for the deepening of the spiritual life. The subject was "Union with Christ."

The resignation of Rev. Mr. Fairweather, of the Free Church, Kinfauns, will be heard of with much regret by many who anticipated a brilliant future for the young minister at the time when he was brought so prominently forward, some three years ago, by his election to Regent-square Church, in London, and his refusal of that charge. Mr. Fairweather's health broke down some months ago, and, acting under medical advice, he has found it necessary to resign his charge, and to seek a warmer climate.

At the usual business meeting of China Inland Missionaries, held in Glasgow on Tuesday, October 8, it was arranged that the weekly Saturday prayer-meeting should in future be held from 4 to 5.30 in the Band of Hope Union Hall, 94, West Regent-street, as being more central than the previous meeting place. Any readers in the neighbourhood who are interested in the spread of the Gospel among the heathen, are heartily invited to join the assembled friends.

Arrangements are being made for the meeting of a Federal Presbyterian Council next month at Dundee. It is to be composed of representatives of the Presbyterian Church of England and of the United Presbyterian and the Free Church of Scotland. Dr. Norman Walker is to deal at the Conference with the question of "Co-operation in Christian Work," and Principal Dykes with "Worship in the Presbyterian Church." Public meetings will be addressed by Dr. Monro Gibson on "Commerce" and by Professor George Adam Smith on "Industrial Questions."

At the annual meeting last week of the Grove-street Institute, Glasgow, many interesting facts were reported. The dispensary is now equipped with every convenience for carrying on the work. Six doctors give their services gratuitously, and attend once or twice a week. The consultations last year numbered 4000, and the doctors paid over 200 visits to patients unable to leave their homes. Very closely allied to the medical department is the Lady Missionaries' Training Home, Burnbank-gardens. During the year several ladies left for the foreign mission field, others rendering valuable help in the consulting room and dispensary, and paid 3481 visits to the homes of the people. All the departments are in a very flourishing condition, and their prospects never brighter than at present.

JERUSALEM.—Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, at Jerusalem, has been very ill. Writing on September 26, he reported much distress among the poor of the Holy City. He said: "I am thankful to say that there is every sign of rain coming soon. On the 23rd inst. we had a few drops which cheered our hearts. The poor have been asking for coppers to enable them to get a little water, but I have had neither money nor water to give. The city has been for some time without water, and a skinful has cost a bishlick (about sixpence in English money)."

THE Y.M.C.A.

In New Zealand the Newcastle Association supports a missionary to seamen, who reports good work.

Sydney, the premier Association of Australasia, holds its own, and is as vigorous, as active, and from all accounts as successful as ever.

The report of the North-Eastern District Union shows that during the past year ten members have gone into the mission field from the district.

Sir George Williams presided, on Thursday evening, over the annual meeting of the Peckham Rye Association, which was very successful.

A social gathering, to commence the work of the winter session, took place on Thursday evening at the Southwark Y.M.C.A. Between fifty and sixty young men attended.

The inaugural reception of the Birkenhead Y.M.C.A. was given on Thursday evening, by the president (Mr. C. J. Procter) and Mrs. Procter. It was one of the most successful ever held in connection with this Association.

The annual business meeting of the Lewes Association was presided over by Mr. Alderman C. R. Kemp. Mr. Hopkins is retiring from the hon. secretaryship, which he has held for many years, and is succeeded by Mr. J. Chandler.

The annual meeting recently held in Melbourne was marked by a spirit of thankfulness and hopefulness. Mention was made of the sore troubles of the past, but satisfaction was rightly expressed at the manifested signs of healthy life and increasing vitality.

At the annual members' meeting of the Derby Association on Wednesday evening, the secretary, Mr. A. K. Yapp, presented a most encouraging report. There is an increase on the year of eighty-nine members, and the work all round has never been in so satisfactory a condition.

The premises of the Clapham Junction Association, the old vestry hall, Battersea Rise, were formally opened by a conversazione on Friday evening. Sir George Williams presided, and was supported by Mr. Percy Thornton, M.P., Mr. F. W. Lawrence (president of the district), Revs. E. G. Gordon, G. M. Claris, J. Toone, and John Felmingham.

A seven days' mission begins on Sunday at the Bayswater Association Rooms, 172, Queen's-road, W., by Mr. Arthur Browett. Prayer is earnestly desired for much blessing. A meeting of members of the Westbourne Grove Association was held on Tuesday evening in the drawing-room of Mrs. Buller, in Porchester-square. An address was given by Mr. W. Hind Smith.

Mr. Alfred Lambert, secretary of the Ipswich Y.M.C.A. writes:—"We believe that the average attendance at our weekly Bible class during the past three months has been the largest ever recorded in the history of our Association. It certainly is a good feature of our work to find that, whilst athletics are taken up with the greatest energy, the Bible class has been so well supported. Many of the best supporters of our athletic clubs are also our best helpers in this Bible class work."

The City of Dublin Y.M.C.A. have issued a very handsome winter syllabus entitled "Around the Camp Fire." Every department of work is pulsating with new life, and no week passes but precious souls are won. Lord Radstock addressed a mass meeting for men on Sunday week. The word was with power, and much blessing followed. Mr. W. R. Lane has been secured to conduct a mission for men only during the Y.M.C.A. week of prayer (November 10 to 17). Much prayer is going up for blessing.

Rev. B. Senior, speaking at a recent conference in Sunderland, said that a fine block of buildings, rooms in which the members can enjoy themselves to their hearts' content, throwing dull care to the winds, a succession of athletic clubs to suit all tastes, plenty of lively meetings for what has been called—rightly or wrongly—spiritual dissipation, all these and more may swell the numbers of meetings held and attendances at them, but without the power of the Holy Spirit the aim of the Y.M.C.A. will not be attained.

The Editor of the "South London Y.M.C.A. Magazine" says:—"It gives me unspeakable joy to record both numerical success and soul triumphs in connection with our summer's work at Clapham. In our Sunday afternoon 'Men's Own,' and our open-air campaign, the efforts of our enthusiastic band of workers have been much blessed of God. As our Y.M.C.A. work during the season has been crowned with greater success than in any preceding summer, we hopefully and prayerfully anticipate a similar result during the winter months."

At the residence of Sir George and Lady Williams, in Russell-square, a number of ladies and gentlemen gathered by invitation on Tuesday evening to meet Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Clark, who are shortly returning to India. Mr. Clark was for nine years honorary secretary of the Bombay City Y.M.C.A., and gave a most interesting account of the progress of the work, and of the prospects of its development under the guidance of Mr. R. D. Pringle, the general secretary sent out nine months since by the English National Council. Mr. Frank Anderson, B.A., of Exeter College, Oxford, who has been appointed by the Council to take up work amongst students in the colleges and universities of the Bombay Presidency, also delivered an address. Lord Kinnaird, Professor Gladstone, and Mr. W. H. Seagram took part in the proceedings. Mr. Henry Conder, president of the Bombay Association, is now visiting this country, but, owing to a family bereavement, was unable to attend the meeting.

SOUTH LONDON ENDEAVOURERS.

A series of meetings have been held at Brunswick Chapel, Great Dover-street, in connection with the Central South London Christian Endeavour Union. On Sunday week special sermons and addresses were preached at Brunswick Chapel, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, Claylands Congregational, Miles-street Free Church, Surrey Chapel, South London Mission, Trinity-street Primitive Methodist, and York-road Congregational.

Monday evening was devoted to a meeting of juvenile Christian Endeavourers, and on Tuesday a large number of Endeavourers assembled for the first annual meeting of the Union. The president, Rev. F. B. Meyer, took the chair. The secretary, Mr. R. Parsons, read a brief report, which stated that there were fourteen societies in the Union, all of which reported good progress. Rev. F. B. Meyer, in vacating the presidential chair, said the evenings he had spent with Christian Endeavourers had been some of the happiest he had ever spent. And why? Because he found the young life in their societies rallying to the Cross of Jesus Christ. His last words to them as their president were, "Never do anything that they would be ashamed of Jesus Christ seeing," and he was sure this Christian Endeavour movement would go forward because the living God was in their midst. Rev. John Fleming accepted office as president of the Union. A stirring address was delivered by Alderman F. F. Belsey, J.P.

OXFORD NOTES.

[From our own Correspondent.]

Once more Oxford is "alive" after the Long Vacation, and the term's work will soon be in full swing. No changes of importance in the religious life have occurred since last term.

The illness of Archdeacon Palmer is a cause of deep regret throughout the city. There is no Churchman more generally known and loved, and no one whose influence is more potent for good. The latest accounts are more favourable, but the danger is still serious. Many prayers are ascending that his life may be spared if it be God's will.

Last week a very valuable and truly helpful meeting of college and branch secretaries of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union was held at Wycliffe Hall. The object was to have conference and prayer on behalf of the work of the coming academical year, especially among freshmen. A very profitable time was spent, and the gathering will assuredly tell on the Christian work of the term.

The sermon to freshmen was preached on Sunday evening at St. Peter-le-Bailey, by Rev. W. E. Burroughs, C.M.S. Central Secretary. Some 400 men were present, and a very solemn and searching time was spent. Mr. Burroughs' message was felt to be full of power, and blessing will be the undoubted result. The number of men present was remarkable considering that the preacher was practically unknown in Oxford.

Preparations are now being made for the forthcoming Covention on October 28 to 31, when several honoured brethren will be present, including Pastor Theodore Monod, who was so greatly used of God at the original meeting in Oxford in 1874.

THE KING OF PORTUGAL AND THE VATICAN.—The Florence papers contain a statement relative to the approaching visit of the King to Rome. It appears that his Majesty's visit to Rome is not viewed favourably by the Vatican, and pressure was brought to bear by the Papal Nuncio on Queen Amelia to prevent it, but the young king wanted to visit his uncle. With a view to getting over the difficulty with the Vatican the Portuguese Ambassador in Rome proposed that a special carriage should convey him to the Vatican. He not only received no reply, but the Papal curia made it known that the great door of the Vatican would remain closed to the King of Portugal. The Italian papers remark, "King Charles was not alarmed at this 'bounce,' inasmuch as there are but few Papists in his kingdom."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Earl of Carlisle, addressing the Yorkshire Band of Hope Union, said the Local Veto had been delayed but not upset.

A female inebriate at Swansea has a record of 279 convictions. At her last appearance the magistrate gave her the option of going to prison or entering the workhouse, and she chose the latter.

The members of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association have unanimously pledged themselves to trade with no shop which has a licence for, or deals in, intoxicating liquors.

Canon Hicks, of Salford, preaching in Pendleton, said drink, gambling and impurity were consuming Salford, and those engaged in Christian work received little help in their work from licensing magistrates.

"Fruits hurts the sale of beer," says the Boston Congregationalist. "A brewer in New York says the abundance of peaches and other fruits at this season diminishes his sales by 400 barrels daily. By all ways fruit culture should be encouraged."

Dr. Norman Kerr told a recent interviewer that drunkenness was increasing at a very rapid rate among women of all classes. A few years ago women seldom entered a public-house. Now they readily do, and we have grown accustomed to the sight of drunken women of all ages in public thoroughfares.

Miss Agnes Slack has been attracting large audiences in Glasgow. On Sunday week she addressed an immense audience of over 4000 people in St. Andrews Hall, under the auspices of the Glasgow Abstainers' Union. On Monday afternoon Miss Slack spoke at a large women's meeting in St. Thomas's Wesleyan Chapel.

Many new branches are being formed of the B.W.T.A. in various places in and near London. Mrs. Aukland has addressed drawing-room and other meetings at Enfield, Tollington Park, Barbican, Highbury, Holloway, Stoke Newington, and Tulse Hill during the month: all enthusiastic and earnest, which promises well for winter work.

The Lewisham Board of Guardians has adopted a petition to the House of Commons deploring the evil effect arising from the sale of intoxicants in the production of pauperism, immorality, insanity and crime, and urging the adoption of measures for the closing of public-houses during the whole of Sunday and earlier on week days, especially on Saturdays.

A Girl's Club has been opened in Woodberry Down by the Stoke Newington "Y" branch B.W.T.A. specially for working girls, to brighten their lives and win them for Christ. A meeting was held on Thursday last in the lecture hall of the Wesleyan Chapel, High-street, Stoke Newington, by the local B.W.T.A. Mr. J. H. Raper, Mrs. Barney, and Miss Philips were the speakers.

The Inebriate Farm Home, to be opened by the B.W.T.A., is already being peopled. A large farm was secured in Surrey, and cottages are in course of erection, some being actually finished. Each cottage will represent a family circle, under the care of a sister. The inmates will be employed in poultry-rearing, fruit culture, bee-keeping, flower growing, and dairy work of all kinds. No patient will be received for less than one year. The charge will be as low as 5s. per week.

The Women's Total Abstinence Union continued its conference at Sheffield last week, when papers dealing with temperance effort were read. The advantage of police-court missions was enforced by several lady speakers. Mrs. Septimus Buss said her experience of thirty-five years as the mother of a family had proved to her that alcohol was distinctly unnecessary as a medicine. In addition to the ordinary gatherings, meetings were addressed in factories, workshops, schools, and other institutions. The meetings were well attended throughout.

The Hants County Band of Hope Union held its autumnal meeting at Christchurch. There are now eighty-six societies affiliated, with a membership of 23,000, and additions are being made weekly. A conference of Band of Hope workers was held in the afternoon, at which an address was given by Rev. E. C. Chorley, on "The Need of Definite Temperance Teaching," illustrated by diagrams. A helpful discussion followed. The Mayor presided over a crowded, enthusiastic meeting in the Town Hall, at which stirring addresses were given by Revs. C. D. Joseph, E. C. Chorley, and Miss Weston.

MR. JOSEPH'S INDEMNITY FUND.—We have already given particulars of the circumstances under which Rev. C. D. Joseph, of Portsmouth, became liable in heavy damages and costs, which friends sought to raise for him. We are glad to hear that not only has the full amount—£700—been subscribed, but a substantial surplus remains, which is partly to be used in presenting Mr. Joseph with a testimonial, and the remainder to be divided among local charities.

PERSONALIA.

Miss James, the directress of the British Syrian Mission, is obliged to resign her post on account of serious and continued illness.

Miss Cooke, Singapore.—We regret to have to record the death of this esteemed Christian worker; an obituary notice will appear in our next issue.

Mr. William Corbridge, of the Rescue and Evangelisation Mission, Sheffield, has been very unwell for two months. His wife would be glad of earnest prayer on his behalf.

Rev. T. G. Selby, author of "The Imperfect Angel," will deliver the Fernley Lecture at the next Wesleyan Conference, which will be held at Liverpool. The subject will be, "The Religion of Modern Fiction."

Rev. Dr. Moulton.—The serious illness of this well-known scholar will excite widespread regret; outside of his own denomination he has many friends. As head of the Leys School, Cambridge, he has made that flourishing institution a centre which has done much for the higher education of the children of Nonconformists.

The Gemerek Pastor.—Rev. W. A. Essery, of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, informs us that Marderos Ef. Kalosdyan, the lately imprisoned pastor, has been permitted to return from Constantinople to Gemerek, where he was very cordially welcomed. He will spend the winter at Cesarea, where his children can attend the schools. It is hoped that the pastor will there find employment, and no longer need the help of Christian friends.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, in order to devote himself more exclusively to work among the masses, and the refutation of the infidelity of the workshop, has resigned his position on the staff of the Evangelisation Society, with which he has been associated for nearly twenty years. Friends in large centres of industry desiring his services should send to his address, 70, King's Cross-road, London, W.C. He has completed an eight days' mission among the brickmakers at Great Wakering, Essex. Rich blessing has crowned the effort.

Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, having completed fifty years of service as elder, has received warm and hearty congratulations and tokens of affection. An interesting gathering took place last week in the Presbyterian College, Queen's-square, when after an address by Sir George Bruce, in which he recapitulated the services which Mr. Matheson had been enabled to render the Church, a life-size portrait of Mr. Matheson, painted by Mr. Michie, A.R.S.A., was unveiled by Mr. Thomas Bell. A congratulatory address, signed by the Moderators on behalf of the two London Presbyteries, was read by Principal Dykes, and Rev. Dr. Thornton read the translation of an address in Chinese from the Presbytery of Swatow.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—A mother, for a son who has joined the Unitarians, that he may be led to leave them and trust in Christ as his Saviour.—For blessing on a mission conducted by Mr. De Burgh Rochford, and held at the National Schoolroom, Georgeham, Braunton.—For a mission to be conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne in the New Hall, Wellington, Shropshire, from October 22 to 30.—For blessing on a mission at St. Cuthbert's, West Hampstead, October 13 to 21, conducted by the Rev. J. T. Butlin, of St. Clement's, Birmingham.—That the efforts of Nath. Soames and Chas. Gilbey be blessed among the godless thousands in Bird Fair during October.—That the Walthamstow Open-air Band be owned of God in the conversion of sinners in the Home of Industry Gospel Hall, every Sunday evening this month.—For blessing on a ten days' mission at Wesleyan Church, Brockley, Oct. 20-30.

SUFFERERS IN TRANS-CAUCASIA.—The journal Nedelja, of Tiflis, gives the following about the Dukhobortza (whose cruel persecution we mentioned in our last issue), who were leading the life of nomads in the Gori district: "The Dukhoboritza lead a blameless Christian life. There are neither poor nor rich amongst them. In each of their farms were kept about eight horses and a dozen oxen and cows; many of the people possessed flocks of sheep. If anyone lost an animal, it was replaced by another from a neighbouring farm. The people begin the day with prayer and song. They eat only bread, potatoes, and vegetables, milk, eggs, and butter. Kwas and water are their drink. They lived in about 800 farms in the settlement of Orlowka, but, being persecuted by the authorities, about 5000 persons emigrated. The reporter of the Nedelja visited a camp of 150 Dukhobortza in the pass of Borshom. No noise was to be heard; neither smoking nor alcohol was indulged in; everything was remarkably quiet, no laments were heard about their lost possessions, and the day closed, as it began, with prayers."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting a mission at Barnard Castle, Durham, which closed on the 11th inst.

Mr. John H. Cook, of the Evangelisation Society, has recently concluded a summer tent mission in Kent. Much blessing has been the result.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, hopes to begin on October 22, a protracted Gospel mission in Louisville, Kentucky, for which great preparations are being made.

Mr. D. L. Moody, after a fruitful period of Gospel work at Kinsman, O., has been evangelising at New Bedford, Mass, and other places in his own State.

Magherafelt.—A seven weeks' series of Gospel services has been held in Magherafelt and the neighbourhood by Miss Wakefield, of Portadown, assisted by Rev. John Elliott and others.

Mr. Thomas Payne has been holding a three days' mission at St. John's Hall, Gloucester. The meetings were well attended, and many testified to having received great help and blessing.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has completed an eight days' United Gospel Temperance Mission in the Corn Exchange, Aylesbury. The meetings have been well attended, the addresses have been interesting, and the Spirit of the Lord has been present.

Orkney Isles.—The Edinburgh Gospel Mission evangelists, Messrs. McGregor and Crawford, have conducted for two weeks special meetings in the Free Church of South Ronaldshay. Much interest has been awakened, and souls have been blessed.

Pontymoile.—Referring to Mr. Richard Weaver's recent mission, Mr. Wintle writes: "The Lord used Mr. Weaver to the conversion of numbers of young people here. We received fifty-three into fellowship last month, fifty of whom were under twenty years of age. There is quite an awakening amongst the young."

Mr. Richard Weaver has concluded a month's mission in Glasgow, and God has wonderfully helped and blessed the work, so that every night sinners have been seeking the Saviour. His own health has been far from good, but he has had help of God, who has given him strength to go on night after night, and to preach three times on Lord's Day. He is this week holding a mission in Octavius-street Chapel, Deptford.

A three weeks' tent mission has just been concluded in Melbourn, Cambs, by Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelisation Society, whose preaching has been greatly appreciated and blessed. Numbers of God's children have testified to the good received, and not a few, we believe, have been led to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. The attendance all through was well sustained, and we thank God for sending this evangelist. R. A. Belsham.

Shrewsbury.—Mr. A. H. Wheeler, Sec. Soldiers' Christian Association, has concluded a successful five days' mission to young men at the Y.M.C.A. Great interest was shown in the meetings, and much blessing resulted. It was especially encouraging to see, by their regular attendance, how much the men from the depôt of the Shropshire Regiment appreciated Mr. Wheeler's addresses, and several of them were led to take a definite stand on the Lord's side. Bible-readings were given, and also an afternoon meeting on behalf of the S.C.A.—G. R. Robertson.

Mr. Henry Thorne has conducted a mission in connection with the Home for Working Girls in London, which has been greatly blessed of God. The services were held at Lincoln House, Baker-street, and at Gordon House, Endsleigh Gardens, N.W., and night after night anxious souls were directed to the Saviour. The superintendents of the Homes report that an earnest spirit of inquiry has been awakened, and that the good work begun by the Mission is still going forward. Mr. and Mrs. Thorne are now engaged in conducting United Mission services amongst the colliers and bootmakers of Hanham, St. George, and Kingswood, near Bristol, a district redolent of previous memories in connection with the devoted labours of Wesley and Whitfield.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—The first quarterly report of the South London branch states that meetings have been held on board ships and in the Sailors' Rest, while visits have been paid to ships in the docks and on the river, to lodging-houses, sailors' homes, and prisons. A very encouraging feature of the work is that the meetings have been attended by great spiritual power, and souls have been won for Christ. The men who have visited the Rest are sailors from various nations; Scandinavians, Germans, French, Dutchmen, Spaniards, and Lascars have here found a hearty welcome. Help is needed for the carrying on of this noble effort, tracts, magazines, and warm comforters for the sailors. Address, Mr. G. R. Hood, the Sailors' Rest, 57, Derrick-street, Rotherhithe.

OBITUARY.

MRS. J. W. KIRTON.

We regret to announce the death, on Saturday, October 5, of Mrs. Kirton, the widow of the late Rev. J. W. Kirton, LL.D., author of "Buy your Own Cherries." Mrs. Kirton, never very robust, had been ailing for some time, and her decease occurred during sleep. The funeral took place at Abney Park Cemetery, and was attended by a number of sympathising friends.

MR. JOHN GROOM, HAMPSTEAD.

With much regret we record the decease of Mr. John Groom, in his 84th year. He resided for many years at Hampstead, but the last four years were spent at Brighton. To large numbers he was known through his tracts and the text cards which he circulated widely. His sympathies were strongly Evangelical and Protestant, and many workers found in him a friend and helper. Through extremely feeble, he persevered with his tract work and correspondence almost to the last. The end was hastened by heart trouble and pneumonia. He passed peacefully away leaving a bright testimony to the sufficiency of the Saviour. The funeral took place at the Brighton cemetery on the 7th inst. H. K.

DR. CLEMENT CLEMANCE, CAMBERWELL.

By the death, at Stamford Hill, of Rev. Clement Clemance, D.D., Congregationalists have lost one of their most highly-esteemed ministers. Dr. Clemance was ordained in 1857 at Teignmouth, but his chief ministry was exercised at Castle Gate Church, Nottingham, and at Camberwell Green, from which he retired a few years ago. In 1874 he filled the chair of Moderator of the Nottinghamshire Congregational Union, and subsequently of the London Congregational Union. He was the author of a large number of works, some of which attained a large circulation. He contributed to several volumes of "The Pulpit Commentary," more especially those on Deuteronomy, the Epistles of St. John, and the Revelation. The closing years of his life were rendered somewhat anxious by the losses which he sustained through the Liberator Building Society. The funeral service takes place on Friday in Stamford Hill Church.

THE BISHOP OF CHICHESTER.

A telegram announces that the Bishop of Chichester died suddenly at Basle, Switzerland, on Monday morning. He had been spending his holidays at Cadenabbia, on Lake Como, and was on his return journey when he died. He was within a few weeks of completing his ninety-third year. Dr. Durnford was the son of a Hampshire clergyman. For many years after leaving the University he led a busy life as rector in the Lancashire town of Middleton. Dr. Durnford accepted the bishopric of Chichester in 1870. As a bishop, he has kept up the character he earned as a parish clergyman, leading an active life among his people, identifying himself with many movements, and taking a special interest in temperance work, middle-class education, and the organisation of women's work. His gifts—never blazoned abroad—to his clergy were really enormous, and he never refused to assist a really deserving case. He lived in the simplest way, and one of the Princesses, on performing some charitable function at Eastbourne, said that she was at a loss which to admire most, the Bishop's "simplicity of life or activity of limb."

MRS. ALEXANDER, LONDONDERRY.

Mrs. Cecil Frances Alexander, who, at the age of seventy-two, died at the Palace, Londonderry, on Saturday evening, after a long illness, will best be known as the author of the famous hymn, "There is a green hill far away," which has been set to music by Dr. Horsley, M. Gounod, and other composers, and has long been a favourite with the young. It was originally written for her collection of "Hymns for Little Children," published in 1848, and it has been popular ever since. Mrs. Alexander, who was a daughter of Major John Humphreys, of Miltown House, country Tyrone, was born in 1823, and the first of her collected publications, "Verses for Holy Seasons," with a preface by Dr. Hook, was issued when she was twenty-three years old. The "Hymns for Little Children" followed two years later, and two years afterwards, that is to say in 1850, Miss Humphreys became the wife of Dr. Alexander, now Bishop of Derry and Raphoe. Then, in 1853, followed her "Narrative Hymns for Village Schools;" in 1854 "Poems on Old Testament Subjects"; in 1858 "Hymns Descriptive and Devotional"; and in 1859 the "Legend of the Golden Prayer." In all Mrs. Alexander wrote nearly 400 hymns, the most successful being those for children, and among them that beautiful hymn "Up in Heaven," which Sir John Stainer has set with such simple melodiousness.

The Book World.

THE ROMANCE OF HOME MISSIONS.

PIONEER WORK IN A GREAT CITY. By John Hunt. (2s. Partridge & Co.) Well-nigh forty years' labours in the poorest and most God-forsaken corners of London have furnished the writer with abundant material for a singularly interesting book. What London slums were when Mr. Hunt commenced work in 1858 will scarcely be credited by those who only know them as they are now. The quiet work of the London City Mission is shown in these graphic chapters to be telling, and that often in the most unexpected quarters. Some of the encounters recorded are certainly startling, but tact, coolness, and faith in God carry the missionary safely though. It is verily the romance of home missions, and ought to awaken fresh interest in the work of the Society whose efforts it so vividly illustrates.

A NEW TESTAMENT HELP.

THE NEW TESTAMENT OF OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST. Translated from the Greek into Current English by Ferrar Fenton. (2s. 6d. upwards. J. S. Dodington, 62, Upper-street, N.). It is some years since Mr. Fenton brought out the Pauline Epistles in the language of to-day. The corresponding section of the present work evinces distinct improvement, and the entire New Testament shows that much care has been expended upon the enterprise. If there is room for difference of judgment among scholars as to details of translation, so also there is room for difference as to what expressions shall be included as "current," or excluded as obsolete or archaic. Hence many who will read Mr. Fenton's version will have their own ideas as to its excellencies and defects; and in our judgment it has both these. On the one hand, idioms have been resolved and their true force made apparent; and, on the other, important words have been rendered so variously at different times as to afford a very confused idea of the Divine teaching. Beyond this there are Oriental idioms still unexplained, and significant niceties of distinction for which one looks in vain. The enterprise, however, was a great one, and we trust the translator will be able in successive editions still to improve the work. Every page is bright with striking renderings, familiar texts being made to yield new meanings and fresh instruction in the free and forcible speech of common life.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

HOME WORDS is an old friend. The new volume contains a story, "Jack of all Trades," by T. S. Millington, and many illustrated sketches and articles. Like its companion serials, conducted by Rev. Charles Bullock, this is filled with wholesome reading, sound in Evangelical purpose. (2s. Home Words Office.)

THE QUIVER makes an admirable volume. The varied contents include portraits and sketches of well-known men and women, accounts of Christian work at home and abroad, articles on the life of the penniless poor, and Scripture lessons for school and home. Then there are several complete stories—some of them short, others in serial. Here is reading for all for a good time to come. (7s. 6d. Cassell & Co.)

STORY BOOKS.

IN THE DAYS OF KING GEORGE. By Lieut.-Col. Percy Groves. (1s. 6d. (Cassell & Co.) A rollicking Franco-Irish tale of military adventure, full of movement and humour.

DOG STORIES FROM "THE SPECTATOR." (5s. T. Fisher Unwin.) Every lover of man's best animal companion, the faithful dog, will read these stories with delight. Some of them will appear rather apocryphal to the sceptically inclined, but in the case of many the experiences of the reader will confirm the accounts given of canine sagacity and intelligence.

A VICTORY WON. By Annie S. Swan. (5s. Hutchinson & Co.) Fifeshire has received much attention of late from popular writers, and Annie Swan is in the fashion in planting the scene of this tale on the coast of the Firth of Forth. The story itself is vigorously told, and carries its solemn lesson with it. We think some of the northern illustrations are considerably idealised.

ALL MEN ARE LIARS. By Joseph Hocking. (3s. 6d. Ward, Lock & Bowdon.) We feel disposed to utter with reference to this cleverly written but ill-tasting narrative the aspiration of a reviewer, expressed a few days since.—"We wish the writer would give us a story about things that are lovely, and of good report." Christian talewrights, at any rate, should feel it incumbent on them to do so in this age of literary degeneracy.

FROM MESSRS. PARTRIDGE & CO.—This firm maintains a good position as providers of story books for young people. Their new shilling series of illustrated narratives, with bright and striking covers, make excellent prizes or additions to Sunday-school libraries. UNDER THE BLOSSOM, by Margaret Haycraft, is a homely tale of fidelity to duty rewarded. ALWAYS HAPPY, by Jennie Chappell, is a true narrative, illustrating work among the blind. JIM'S DISCOVERY, by T. M. Browne, tells of life experience in Southern California. BRAVE BERTIE, by E. C. Kenyon, is an inspiriting tale of youthful heroism. THREE RUNAWAYS, by F. Scarlett Potter, is a diverting account of childish escapades and their consequences. LETTY; or, The Father of the Fatherless. By H. Clement; LOVE'S GOLDEN KEY. By Mary E. Leslie. (9d. each.) A couple of wholesome and readable tales (illustrated) about young folks and for young folks.

THE SERVANT OF CHRIST, by Archdeacon Sinclair, has been issued in a cheaper form. The pages treat, in a frank and useful way, important points in the character and conduct of Christians in the present day. (Elliot Stock).

SALVATION AND SERVICE. By Rev. George Everard. (3s. 6d. Nisbet.) A series of fitting papers on grace and godliness from a pen that has already done yeoman service in the domain of practical Christian life. Most of these talks are addressed to young Christians, but some are of an evangelistic character.

A POPULAR HANDBOOK TO THE MICROSCOPE, by Lewis Wright, is a charming introduction to the study of nature. With scientific precision and untechnical plainness, the author explains some of the marvels which the microscope brings to view, and his book, which is abundantly illustrated, will prove of real service to those who desire to begin investigations in this line. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society).

BIBLICAL CHARACTER SKETCHES. (3s. 6d. Nisbet.) Amongst the authors are Dean Farrar, the Bishop of Ripon, Revs. H. C. G. Moule, James Baillie, F. B. Meyer, James Stalker, Hiles Hitchens, E. A. Stuart, and Thain Davidson, who contribute capital sketches of Old Testament characters. These may be warmly commended, but there are other chapters by other pens hardly to be regarded as safe guides.

LIGHTHOUSES: Their History and Romance. By W. J. Hardy, F.S.A. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) An entrancing book for all who, sailing our rock-bound coast, have watched the gleaming lights which tell of deadly peril. The story of how these beacons were first erected, of the oft-repeated failures, and of the long fight with the pitiless sea, is well told, and admirably illustrated. The volume is alike informative and pleasing.

MORNING SUNLIGHT. By Charlotte Murray. (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) A series of devotional daily readings for a year, bearing on the believer's every-day life and walk, and illustrated by verses from Miss Murray's flowing pen. We welcome heartily this volume, and wish it the general acceptance it well merits. We cannot pretend to have yet read all the year's portions, but those we have read have impressed us as healthful, and likely to be of real spiritual service to many.

DESULTORY RETRACINGS: A Personal and Family Record. By Catherine Jacson (6s. Well, Gardner, Darton & Co.) These retracings were penned for the perusal of friends. They form a volume which many will read with interest. The author comes of the Lancashire family of Formby, and notable persons are mentioned in the course of her reminiscences. Some of her remarks on religion, suggested by the Tractarian movement, which she followed with care, show keen observation and excellent sense.

THE TREASURY OF DAVID. By the late C. H. Spurgeon. Part I. (1s. Passmore & Alabaster.) Mr. Spurgeon's famous exposition of the Book of Psalms needs no introduction to our readers, over 120,000 volumes having already been sold. The cost is, however, to many a serious obstacle, hence the publishers have resolved to bring out the whole series in monthly shilling parts. We doubt not many will avail themselves of the opportunity of securing this work, which is a veritable mine of spiritual wealth, a treasury full of most precious things.

A VISIT TO BASHAN AND ARGOB. By Major Algernon Heber-Percy. (7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Canon Tristram tells us in a prefatory note that this book describes a dash made into a well-nigh unknown and impenetrable region, whose history goes back to the earliest ages, but which is now given over to Bedouin bandits. The existence of a few scattered Druse colonies made it possible for the present party to penetrate the region, and take hasty "snap-shots" of the stones and ruins. The descriptive pages are full of deep interest and Biblical illustration, yet they cannot fail to arouse a longing that ways and means might be found for a more thorough and searching survey of this mysterious region.

LIFE CAMEOS. By Rev. Dr. Campbell, F.E.I.S. (5s. Partridge, London; Religious Tract and Book Society, Edinburgh). Here is a work to fire the imagination and make the blood course more quickly in the veins of every true-born Perthshire man. The writer is certainly an enthusiast, but few will deny that he shows good grounds for his enthusiasm in the romantic character and stirring history of Strathtay. It is not, however, all history and enthusiasm; the purpose of the author is rather by means of these to introduce certain humble and unknown "mothers in Israel," and show how by the grace of God their patient home teaching was the means of sending out noble and useful sons to do good service in the cause of Christ.

THE POETS' BIBLE, edited by Rev. W. Garrett Horder, is an attempt to set forth the great scenes and characters of Holy Scripture, in the words of the poets. The work is in two substantial volumes, and evidently much care has been expended upon its compilation. The Old Testament volume is already in its second edition, and that relating to the New is in its third. Not only is the cream of Biblical poetry gathered into these valuable volumes, but there are frequent references to other poems to be found in the more accessible works of our rich literature. The selections have been made as poetry, so there is a great variety of thought in the pages. Preachers and teachers will find ideas in these volumes, as well as apt verses with which to strengthen and enliven their addresses. (Ward, Lock & Bowden).

TITUS; A COMRADE OF THE CROSS. By F. M. Kingsley. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) No one can read the author's appendix on the purpose of the book, without feeling that it springs from a genuine desire "to preach the Gospel of Jesus: to present his life upon earth in such a way as to give fresh interest to 'the old, old story.'" Since the appearance of "A Prince of the House of David," many attempts, down to "Barabbas" and "Ben-Hur," have been made to lend a realism to the Gospel narratives, which still to us commend themselves best in their own simplicity and dignity. In the present "tale of Christ," his own words are quoted when He is shown to speak. The story is that of a Jewish lad stolen from Caiaphas's family, brought up by a bandit, coming into contact with Jesus, forced to follow Barabbas, caught, condemned, crucified with Jesus, and on the cross confessing and praying to Christ. It is therefore an attempt to make realistic the story of the penitent thief. Mrs. Osman Thomas's graphic full page illustrations lend vividness to the narrative.

THE TEACHING OF JESUS. By Dr. R. F. Horton (3s. 6d. Isbister), is an attempt to popularise a method of New Testament study, which has given birth to a number of well-known works during recent years. Though the book is but a sketch, the style is provokingly pretentious; from the preface, where the author speaks of the "unhappy delusion of the Church that it knows the teaching of Jesus," to the last chapter, in which it is declared that "Jesus permits Himself some obscurity" in his doctrine of the resurrection, this feature is apparent. The Messiahship of Jesus seems to be suspended from a "unique consciousness"; perplexing questions are paraded to no good or useful purpose; and limitations and qualifications abound. One important item in the teaching of Jesus took the form of a promise to his disciples that the Spirit of truth would guide them into all truth. This seems to have escaped Dr. Horton's notice; surely it were sufficient rebuke for a method which openly discounts the Apostolic writings. For instance, with regard to the death of Jesus, Dr. Horton says: "It is a difficult task to isolate the ideas of Jesus, and to think of his death simply from his own point of view. But when we succeed in doing so, we become aware that not even John and Paul fully apprehended his thoughts, while all subsequent interpreters have been hampered by the supposed necessity of approaching his ideas only through the interpretations of these and the other Apostles." Our only remark on this is that though the Apostles had but a limited apprehension, we prefer their interpretation of Christ's words to that of moderns whose boasting so often outruns both knowledge and judgment.

ANNA HINDERER OF YORUBA is the latest issue of the "Excellent Women" series (1d., Religious Tract Society). It is a beautiful story of Christian devotion, told by Mrs. Courtenay.

Excellent sheet almanacs are: THE FIRESIDE (1½d., coloured) and HOME WORDS (1d.). These are both issued from "Home Words" Office. THE PROTESTANT ECHO (1d.) published by A. M. Robinson & Son, Duke-street, Brighton.

GENERAL REMARKS ON THE KINGDOM is a new pamphlet by Silas Henn, whose writings on prophecy are characterised by loyalty to Scripture and great clearness of expression. The pages will be helpful to those who are beginning the study of prophecy (6d. post free. The Author, 4, Himley-road, Dudley, Worcestershire.)

NORTH AFRICA.—A correspondent writes:—May we ask very earnest prayer for the missionaries in Tangier, North Africa? A recent letter from one of them says: "You have simply heard nothing of how bad the cholera is. It broke out among the Moors, but has spread to Jews and Spaniards. Now, on the average, twenty die daily, while at Tetuan, two days' journey from here, they are dying (report says) at the rate of 100 a day. All day long I am out nursing and doctoring cholera patients, and take quite a small dispensary in my basket." Many of the people are starving, and the missionaries are trying to meet somewhat the awful need.

CONSUMPTION, AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.

INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

ONE HUNDREDTH INTERVIEW,
With a Missionary in Ayrshire, relative to SEVERAL "HOPELESS" CASES

Not published before.

This gentleman (who, for special reasons, wishes to be described as above) informed me that he had, in addition to the cases mentioned below, personal knowledge of other patients successfully treated by the same means.

"I first started to recommend Mr. Congreve's treatment for chest diseases" (he told me) "through hearing of the remarkable recovery of a lady in Edinburgh. My own knowledge includes a man living next door to me; two doctors, two years ago, said that he couldn't live three months; but he took Mr. Congreve's medicine, and was able to go back to work again. He is now enjoying fair health. Another case close here—a man, who, at that time, was a miner, but who is now an insurance agent—was quite given up by the doctor. I never saw anyone in such a low state; but, under Mr. Congreve's treatment, he recovered, and is now quite well. In another instance—a man living up the country—a Kilmarnock doctor said the case was hopeless, he couldn't possibly get better. I was sent for to visit him. He was fearfully emaciated and vomiting blood. Humanly speaking, he was dying. After being under treatment three months, he was able to walk a mile. He continued until he quite recovered. That man is now in America, and is enjoying fairly good health."

Besides these, he had known of other cases, which had received great benefit; and, although he could not allow me to publish his name, he is quite willing that anyone interested should be privately referred to him.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT of this SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

BAGSTER'S BIBLES.

FROM 3s. 6d.

SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS (LIMITED), 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

President - LORD KINNAIRD. Treasurer - F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Ten devout, earnest Missionaries—eight French and two English—NOW CARRY A KNOWLEDGE OF THE GLORIOUS GOSPEL TO THE POOR OF PARIS, teaching from room to room, and in public places, defending and circulating the Holy Scriptures. The spiritually dead are aroused, and the superstitious enlightened by the old and pure religion of the Lord Jesus.

Its model is the LONDON CITY MISSION, in constitution and action.

Twelve Pastors, Ministers, and Laymen form its Committee, including PASTOR THEODORE MONOD, and the REV. H. E. NOYES, D.D.

The small and over-pressed French Churches contribute half support for their agents, and their cry to British Christians is "come over and help us."

The home-call of three generous friends leaves us anxiously poor, and the Committee urgently ask for present help. Information will be given, and contributions gladly received by the Hon. Secretary, J. M. WEYLLAND, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, London, N.W.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain as a supplement a copy of "THE CHRISTIAN" SHEET ALMANACK, with nine original illustrations of Old Testament scenes, a text for each day in the year, etc. The price of the issue will be TWOPENCE.

The Times of Saturday last contains a long letter further dwelling on the disorderly and dangerous condition of Hyde Park. The evil is now becoming generally recognised, and we hope that steps will be taken by those in authority, and responsible for the matter, to rectify the licence which has been taking possession of this beautiful park for its own ends.

In personal conversation, and by correspondence, we are continually being assured that our weekly labour is blessed of God and appreciated by our readers. And now, as we are nearing the close of another year, we are going to ask the latter if they will co-operate with us in extending the usefulness of THE CHRISTIAN. Those who feel that it has been a means of grace and help to them, and believe that it would be the same to others, may effectively aid us in increasing its circulation. We shall be glad if any who are willing to do so, will send us their name and address.

All our readers may help us by daily prayer; by introducing the paper to others; by lending their copy, notifying any special article or piece of intelligence which has interested them; by sending a copy weekly to pastors, evangelists, Sunday-school teachers, or other Christian workers, or to Christians who are not workers, to which last class possibly it would be the greatest boon.

We can give the names of pastors and others at home, or of missionaries abroad, who would be thankful to receive copies when read, which must be sent within a week of the date of publication. Our experience, however, has been that the sending on by readers of their own copy is apt to be spasmodic and uncertain. In cases, therefore, where it cannot be done with regularity, it is better to arrange for a weekly copy to be sent direct from the publishers.

It is announced that at the end of the year the congregation which used to be known as George Dawson's, at Birmingham, will be scattered, and the building will pass into other hands. Three ministers have tried in vain to keep the people together. The personal element enters, and must enter largely, into the influences which build up a congregation; but perhaps its effect might, in most cases, be a good deal modified. A congregation held together by the attraction of its separate members to one man is not soundly constituted and built, for when he goes it falls to pieces. The churches which hold on their way from generation to generation prove that there is more enduring power in the preaching of the truth of God than in attraction to a man, be he never so good.

The zeal of young disciples is often both indiscreet and censorious. But what of that? Are they therefore to be despised or rejected? Ought they not rather to be wisely and lovingly influenced by disciples of riper years and experience until their sourness mellows into sweetness? Fruit is never ripe in spring. James and John were not so lovable in their early discipleship, when they desired to be allowed to call down fire from heaven to consume the inhospitable Samaritans, as when they had received the fulness of the Spirit at Pentecost. A wise author has said that a young Christian whose conscience is like "a fire of green logs must be treated as we treat a dull fire: he must be borne with, that is, till his conscience clear itself of bitter, cloudy smoke, and become a pure, genial, warm flame of zeal tempered by charity."

The practice of according great honours to Jesus Christ without accepting Him as He is presented in the Gospels, places the men who do it in a very inconsistent position. The Editor of The Spectator has shown how true this is in the case of Professor Huxley, who professed Agnosticism, and yet who regarded Jesus as "the realised ideal of almost perfect humanity." Mr. Hutton truly remarks that "there never was a more dazzling, misleading will-o'-the-wisp than the attitude of Jesus Christ toward God, if the teaching of Professor Huxley's 'Lay Sermons' is to be regarded as verifiable." For certainly there was nothing of the agnostic about Jesus. The very centre of his perfect life, its secret spring and power, was his constantly avowed oneness with the Father, whom He affirmed He knew. We may be willing to take the flower without the root, but it will perish in our hand. Jesus was the realised ideal of perfect (not "almost perfect") humanity, because "in Him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

There is cause for much sorrow and searching of heart, if Mr. Dean is correct in saying, in The Nineteenth Century, that the prevalent attitude towards religion at Oxford and Cambridge is agnostic, the majority of the undergraduates professing to be without any beliefs at all, many of the younger dons being avowed agnostics, full of jibes and sneers at orthodox religion, while the older dons do not protest. The blame of this is partly laid upon two things—the examination in Paley's "Evidences of Christianity" and compulsory attendance at chapel. For our own part, we think the causes are deeper. The sacerdotal reaction is beginning to tell upon formal faith; living faith will take no harm, though it may be tried; but formal faith, in which there is no sap of personal experience of the grace of Christ, gives way under the pressure. Then again the old permanent root of unbelief in the human heart is there. Men were as unbelieving fifty or a hundred years ago as now. Nevertheless, we should not be satisfied to allow things to remain as they are.

It is not possible to read the story of Khama's life without seeing how much better a Christian he has proved himself to be than almost all the white men he has had to do with except the missionaries. Following the Word of God with the simplicity of a child, he has been kept from superstition, sensuality, intemperance, wrath, revenge, ambition, falsehood, and all uncharitableness. He would not lift his hand against his deceitful and treacherous father; he was forbearance itself to his weak-principled brother; and to the white man who has so often treated him with contempt and treachery he has been magnanimous with the mercy of God. Was there ever a finer reply given to a wrong-doer than his to Mr. Rhodes, when that ruling spirit, having under misapprehension accused him of desertion, had the manliness to withdraw his charge? "If," said Khama, "the words were so spoken, it is enough; I have already forgotten them."

It is this man, who has shown distinguished capacity for rule, who is loved and trusted by his people, who is among us asking that his country may remain under the protection of the British Crown, and not be handed over to the Chartered Company. The present madness for shares in the gold mines of Africa, which will not improbably result in a terrible and far-reaching commercial collapse, should make Christian men determine to do all they can to save "Khama's country" from reckless speculators. Happily, Throgmorton-street, which has been such a scene of excitement, does not represent all the English people. We trust that when the Government gives its decision it will do so in the full light of the fact that the heart and conscience of the nation are with the Christian king.

If Mr. Van Oss, who has carefully studied South Africa on the spot, may be taken for a guide, there is a state of things there which is appalling. The state of the Press is always a good index to morals, and in the Transvaal all the papers, so far as he knows, except two, are paid by and subservient to some clique or other. In the Free State and the Cape and Natal it is much the same. Newspapers, like railways, "are the weapons in a gigantic struggle, full of cunning and intrigue." The Boer Government he regards as corrupt, and the internal politics of the Cape as rotten. It is evident, in view of these evils, that Christians should be, more than ever, unwearying in their efforts to spread the Gospel.

The Primitive Methodist position in London is, we are glad to see, wonderfully better than it was twenty-five years ago. Circuits and mission stations have increased from nine to thirty-six; the ministers from twenty-one to fifty; and the members and adherents from 3700 to 20,000. The increase is attributed partly to the way in which the circuit system has been worked, and partly to the "wise utilisation of waste areas"—by which we suppose is meant that the Gospel has been taken to neglected districts. If so, Primitive Methodism deserves to prosper in London. Any body of Christians will prosper who do this sacred work.

The needs of the heathen world are sometimes so measured by things at home with which we are familiar as to give a vivid impression of their vastness. Rev. John Brown, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, told some of its supporters that the total sum they gave for the evangelisation of a district in India containing 33,000,000 souls was £550. Other societies may also be on the ground, but this is all that is done by one of our largest societies for a population almost equal to that of the United Kingdom. Mr. Brown made another startling comparison when he said that the supply of men was as if you were to put one man in London, another in York, and another in Edinburgh, and were to tell one of these to go now and then to Manchester to supply its spiritual needs. In Bankura alone, with its 2000 villages, the preachers could not get round them "in the lifetime of a missionary—namely, ten years." These and similar facts emphasize the great need for more labourers in the field.

If the report of the condition of the Congo Free State given by "a missionary" (no name is given because of consequences) to a representative of Reuter's Agency be correct, there is a reign of terror and bloodshed which can rival almost any horror the world has ever witnessed. Indeed, there are so many diabolical things laid at the doors of professedly Christian nations, that one begins to think the savages are all white men. The only thing which makes us pause before accepting all that "a missionary" has to say is, that he is plain and emphatic in saying that the natives are deserting the Belgian territory, and making their way to the French sphere of influence. Belgians and Frenchmen do not commonly form so strong a contrast as this indicates, though, of course, a cruel governor in one territory might have his contrast in a humane one in the other. Perhaps further investigation into the Stokes affair may give the needed light.

Rev. William Bonnar states publicly in The Contemporary Review, what we have often heard in private, that the haughty and overbearing treatment of the natives of India by many Englishmen is the greatest danger we have to face in that country. He believes that during the past thirty years the alienation between natives and Englishmen "has widened and deepened very perceptibly, and just in proportion as England and India, have been drawn closer together." "The English officer—civil and military—in India is not in touch, and is altogether out of sympathy, with the native." Here again, the only healing influence is the Gospel; and how much more of it India requires. Our responsibility for that land is tremendous, and ought to give Englishmen great concern.

The French seem to be already losing their self-possession over the success of their expedition to Madagascar. They speak freely of cancelling the "concessions" made to foreigners, of refusing all further "concessions," except to Frenchmen, of levying hostile tariffs, in order to force the trade of the country into their own hands, and of planting French emigrants "who have been a failure in their own country." It would seem also that it a part of the French ideal to make a propaganda of Romanism—probably more as a set-off to English Protestant missions than in any real missionary spirit. It is significant that Catholic missionaries have been busy for years, not only in preaching, but in making maps of the island; the official war map used recently by the expeditionary force having been drawn by a Jesuit. The future may have hard times for the Madagascar Christians. We should pray that "their faith fail not."

Let us hope that for once statistics have proved the very truth, when, according to Major Griffiths, Inspector of Prisons, they have proved that female criminality is rapidly declining. He says that in the last decade there has been a decrease of 41 per cent. in the number of women imprisoned; that also while the population has increased as much as 25 per cent. "According to the gravity of misdeeds and sentences, the decrease is still more surprising." If this be as it seems to be, then we shall see, or ought to see, a corresponding effect upon our juvenile population in the next ten years — juvenile criminality ought almost to have disappeared. Of course it must never be forgotten, that, along with all improvement, there is also some measure of deterioration. But Major Griffiths gives us the net results, so far as the prison register can be a guide to it.

How to Meet Doubt.

By Dr. JAMES STALKER.*

It is not difficult to understand the causes which led to the obscuration of the Baptist's faith. He was a child of the desert, accustomed to free movement in the open air, and in a prison he was like a caged eagle. His reformatory work had been abruptly interrupted in full tide; and the impulses of enthusiasm and activity were rolled back cold upon his heart. Besides, Jesus was a Messiah very different from the one he had anticipated; John expected Him to take to Himself his great power, and reign.

Might it not, for example, have been taken for granted that the Messiah could not allow his own forerunner to languish in prison? If He were king, the Herods as well as the Romans would have to resign their power; and the victims of their jealousy and injustice would march out of confinement. But month after month passed, and Jesus made no sign; it looked as if He had forgotten his friends.

Observe three things:—First, John put his doubts into words. Doubt is most dangerous when it is vague; condense it into definite questions, and immediately the light begins to break. Put it, for example, into John's questions: "Art Thou He that should come? or do we look for another?"

"He that should come"—how much faith is in that! When once the heart is persuaded that there is someone who should come, someone who must come, because He is indispensable, to loose the bands of sin and to unite to God—it is not far from faith in Christ. For, put the other question, "Look we for another?" If Jesus of Nazareth be not the Man of men, where are we to look for Him?

Secondly, John sent directly to Christ. He did not go on devouring his own heart in his cell; nor did he do what would have been worse, grumble to his disciples. Scepticism would be short-lived if we brought our doubts at once to God.

Thirdly, John never thought of withdrawing his condemnation of the conduct of Herod and Herodias. Some have spoken of his doubt as treachery; but this is quite an exaggeration. It would have been treachery if believing himself deceived and neglected, he had made this an excuse for renouncing his testimony, and so obtaining release from prison. Never is religious doubt so dangerous as when it is made an excuse for giving the reins to the flesh. He who, though perplexed in faith, remains pure in deeds, will ultimately fight his way through doubt, and come safely out on the other side. . . . . .

The proof which Jesus submitted of his own claims was an appeal to what He was doing. And this will always be the best evidence of Christianity—when it is able to point to what it can do. Christianity does not, indeed, now miraculously heal deafness, blindness, leprosy, and the like; but, as Jesus promised, it does greater things than these. . . . . It is making men and women new creatures; it is making the brutal wife-beater a tender husband, the drunkard a sober man, the harlot pure, the thief honest. It is transforming savage countries, which have been the abodes of horrid cruelty, into abodes of civilisation, and changing the dregs of society into good citizens and members of churches.

The scepticism of last century is usually supposed to have received its quietus through the publication of Paley's "Evidences" and Butler's "Analogy," but it may be doubted if this be the correct reading of history. I should attribute the restoration of belief in at least an equal degree to the practical labours of Wesley and Whitefield. The church which saves most souls, and does most to sweeten and purify domestic and political life, is the church which is doing most to counterwork scepticism. The best evidence of Christianity is a converted man.

*From The Two St. Johns of the New Testament—Isbister and Co. A thoughtful and interesting study of the lives of "John whom Jesus loved," and John the Baptist. The scattered references to them in the four Gospels are carefully collected, and the whole interwoven with practical lessons of a spiritual and useful type.

THE HILL TRIBES OF INDIA.

Dear Sir,—We are specially working amongst the hill tribes, and to reach these simple, ignorant people we have a choice at present of two ways. One is to go with tents and camp from village to village. This means baggage animals (buffaloes or ponies), as there are no cart-roads in these hills. Baggage and tents mean servants, who cheat the villagers and bully them, and so hinder the Gospel. The other way is to go about amongst them with as small a company as possible, and put up in cowsheds, or such part of their huts as they can afford. This is not healthy, and well-nigh impossible in the hot weather, as those who know what a hillman's hut and surroundings are can bear witness.

We are endeavouring to live among the people now more by means of rest-houses, built ten or fifteen miles apart, built cheaply with a substantial timber frame and walls of bamboo wattle daubed with mud. This is native style somewhat improved. Each rest-house has two rooms with a verandah, and one room is intended for a school-room.

This is no new idea, it was the way in which Ragland, the great itinerant missionary in Madras, worked, and others have adopted it with success I believe. The Church Missionary Society has given funds for two such houses, but this Mandla district, where there are no other missionaries but ourselves, is over 100 miles long by sixty broad, and we want several more badly. Timber and bamboos are plentiful, and labour is cheap, so that £8 10s. will build a house suitable for both rest-house and school.

There will not be much luxury, but there will be freedom from dirt and other discomforts, and we shall be able to move among the people and live among them without great expense to the Missionary Society, or trouble to those to whom we came as messengers of good tidings.—Your faithfully in Christ's service, Edward P. Herbert.

The Ark in Mount Zion.

(2 Sam. vi.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Hark! what a sound, and too divine for hearing,
Stirs on the earth, and trembles in the air!
Is it the thunder of the Lord's appearing?
Is it the music of his people's prayer?
Surely He cometh! and a thousand voices
Shout to the saints, and to the deaf are dumb!
Surely He cometh! and the earth rejoices,
Glad in his coming, who hath sworn, "I come."

F. Myers.

As soon as David had acquired a capital, he was eager to make it the religious, as well as the political, centre of the national life. With this object in view, he resolved to place in a temporary structure hard by his palace, the almost forgotten ark; which, since its return from the land of the Philistines, had found a temporary resting-place in the "city of the woods," some eleven miles south-west of Jerusalem, in the house and under the care of Abinadab.

In all probability, David felt unable to remove the Tabernacle—which, after Saul's slaughter of the priests, had been set up in the high place that was at Gibeon—because Zadok the priest, and his brethren the priests, ministered to it, and maintained the burnt-offering continually upon the altar. An old root of jealousy lay between the families of Zadok and Abiathar; and it was wiser in every way not to bring them together, or to interfere with the religious rites which had been maintained through the broken years of recent history (1 Chron. xvi. 39, etc.). But David's purpose would be sufficiently served by securing the presence of the Ark in the heart of the new city. He would not, however, take any step upon his own initiative; but consulted with the captains of thousands and of hundreds, even with every leader. With their acquiescence he sent abroad everywhere throughout all the land of Israel to gather together the priests, the Levites, and the people, to bring again the sacred emblem.

I.—THE MISTAKE OF THE CART.

It was a great procession that wended its way that day to the little town. In addition to a vast host of priests and Levites, and a great concourse of people, there were 30,000 chosen soldiers, whose presence would be sufficient to protect the assembly from any hostile incursion or surprise.

Probably we owe to this occasion Psalm cxxxii., in which the royal singer records the determination which he had formed in the days of his affliction, that whenever he should be delivered from them, and established in his kingdom, one of his earliest acts would be to find out a place for the Lord, a tabernacle for the mighty one of Jacob. Then follow the magnificent stanzas which refer directly to this event:—

Lo, we heard of it in Ephratah:
We found it in Kirjath-jearim.
We will go into his tabernacles;
We will worship at his footstool.
Arise, O Lord, into thy resting-place,
Thou and the ark of thy strength.

But one fatal mistake marred the events of the day, and postponed the fulfilment of the nation's high hope and resolve. It was strictly ordained in the law of Moses, that Levites alone, specially consecrated to the task, should bear the ark upon their shoulders, not touching it with their hands, lest they should die (Numbers iv. 15; vii. 9). Nothing could be clearer than this specific injunction, or more obvious than the reason for it, in enforcing the sanctity of all that pertained to the service of the Most High. This command had, however, fallen into disuse with much else; and it was arranged that the ark should be carried on a new cart driven by the two sons of Abinadab. This mistake could not be passed over. That the Philistines had used such a cart with impunity, had been permitted because they did it ignorantly; but for Israel to set aside the repeated injunction of the Levitical law, and follow their own caprice, could not be condoned, lest the entire Levitical code should be treated as a dead letter, and sink into desuetude.

The oxen started amid a blast of song and trumpet, and for the first two miles all went well, until they came upon a piece of rough road, on which the oxen stumbled, and the ark shook so violently as to be in danger of being precipitated to the ground. Then Uzzah, the younger son of Abinadab, who perhaps had become too familiar with the sacred emblem, put out his hand to steady it, and instantly fell dead. The effect on the procession was terrific. Horror silenced the song, and panic spread through the awed crowd, as the tidings of the catastrophe spread backward through its ranks. David was greatly dismayed. "He was afraid of God that day, and said, How shall I bring the ark of God home to me?" So he directed that the ark should be deposited in the house of Obed-edom, a Levite, who lived in the vicinity, and there it remained for three months. The terrified crowds then returned to Jerusalem, filled with consternation and dismay.

It has been suggested in some quarters that the breach of Uzzah was a needlessly severe act of God—a too stern treatment of a sin of ignorance. On the other hand, it must be borne in mind how important it was at this juncture to insist on literal obedience to the ancient code. If it had been permitted to man's caprice to set its injunctions at defiance, it is easy to see that the entire system might have fallen into disuse, and its important functions been left unrealised.

II.—THE SHOULDERS OF LIVING MEN.

"The Lord blessed the house of Obed-edom." Josephus states that from the moment the Ark rested beneath his roof, a tide of golden prosperity set in, so that he passed from poverty to wealth; an evident sign that Jehovah had no controversy with those who obeyed the regulations and conditions laid down in the ancient law. In the meanwhile, David searched into the Divine directions for the conveyance of the sacred emblem; for he said: "None ought to carry the ark of the Lord but Levites; for them hath the Lord chosen to carry the ark of God, and to minister unto Him for ever."

Again a vast concourse was gathered. This time, however, the prescribed ritual was minutely observed; and the children of the Levites bare the Ark of God upon their shoulders, with the staves thereon, as Moses commanded, according to the word of the Lord. Then the deep bass of the white-robed choirs, the clash of the cymbals of brass, the sweet strains of the bands of psalteries and harps, the measured march of the captains over thousands, the stately procession of the elders, the shoutings of the teeming crowds of all Israel—together made up such a welcome as was worthy of the occasion, and thrilled the soul of David, responsive as a musical instrument to a master-hand. Clad in a linen ephod, he leapt and danced before the Lord.

So they brought in the ark of the Lord, and set it in its place, in the midst of the tent that David had pitched for it; and David offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the Lord. Then he turned to bless the people in the name of the Lord of Hosts, and distributed to them bread, and wine, and raisins. The one cloud that marred the gladness of the day was the biting speech of Michal, who had no sympathy with her husband's religion. Poor woman! perhaps she was still smarting over the loss of Phaltiel; possibly she was jealous at David's independence of her and her father's house—hence the venom in her speech to the husband whom she had loved, and whose life she had on one occasion saved.

III.—THREE MAJESTIC PSALMS.

Upon this occasion three of the greatest psalms were composed: xv., lxviii., and xxiv. Psalm xv. was evidently written with direct reference to the death of Uzzah, and in answer to the question:

Lord, who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle—
Who shall dwell in thy holy hill?

Psalm lxviii., which was chanted as a processional hymn. It begins with the ancient formula, uttered in the desert march each time the camp was struck:

Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered;
Let them also that hate Him, flee before Him.

As the ark was borne forward, in its majestic progress, the symphony was softly played which told of the ancient days in which He went before his people and marched through the wilderness, whilst the earth trembled, and the heavens dropped at his presence.

As the Levite-bearers drew near the ascent of the road up to the citadel of Zion, the high mountains of Bashan were depicted as regarding its lowlier height with envy; and then, as the august procession swept up the steep, the choristers broke into a strophe of unrivalled grandeur, the full meaning of which could only be fulfilled in the Ascension of the Christ Himself, far above all principality and power, into the presence of his Father:—

Thou hast ascended on high, Thou hast led captivity captive:
Thou hast received gifts for men,
Even the rebellious, that the Lord God might dwell among them.

An enumeration of the constituent parts of that mighty host follows. The singers who went before, and the minstrels that followed after; the damsels that played with timbrels, and the great host of women publishing the tidings; little Benjamin and the princes of Judah; the princes of Zebulun and of Naphtali. Finally, the psalmist anticipates the gathering of distant nations to that sacred spot:

Princes shall come out of Egypt,
Ethiopia shall haste to stretch out her hands unto God.

But Psalm xxiv. is perhaps the master-ode of the three. It begins with a marvellous conception, when we consider the narrowness of ordinary Jewish exclusiveness:

The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof;
The world, and they that dwell therein.

The first half of the psalm answers the question as to the kind of men who may stand before God (3-6). They must be clean in hands, and pure in heart, not lifting their soul to vanity nor swearing deceitfully. No mere ablutions or external ceremonial will meet the case. The requirement of this holy God is the righteousness which He alone can give to those who seek his face.

The second half declares God's willingness to abide with man upon the earth. The low-browed gates, beneath which Melchizedek may have come forth to greet Abraham, seemed all too low to admit the ark borne aloft on the Levites' shoulders; and they were bidden to lift up themselves, and open to the entering king. In thunders of voice and instrument, the white-robed choirs, halting before the closed portals, cried:

Lift up your heads, O ye gates;
And be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors,
And the King of Glory shall come in.

Then from within, a single voice, as though of some startled and suspicious warder, demands:

Who is this King of Glory?

—a question which met with the immediate, emphatic, and mighty response:—

The Lord strong and mighty,
The Lord mighty in battle.

Again the challenge to open. Again the inquiry, and again the magnificent reply, that the King of Glory, for whom admittance was demanded to this ancient city, held once by demons, the nest of every unclean bird—is the Lord of Hosts, to whom all angels, all demons, all the living things in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth are subject. So the ark at last reached its resting-place.

A Quiet Day in West London.

The working churches and Christians of to-day are becoming increasingly conscious of the need of frequent seasons of close dealing with God, in order to success in saving men. It was this feeling, we assume, that prompted the friends of the West London Mission to set aside Friday last in St. Jame's Hall, for devotional meetings, and teaching as to the possibilities of the spiritual life. In some prefatory remarks at the morning meeting, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said that the arrangement to hold the meetings came about in a very providential way; so that they were of God rather than man. There was no spot in the world, probably, where it was more necessary that Christians should come together, with one accord in one place, to seek for Divine blessing and power. Within a mile of the spot where they had assembled, more awful, unspeakable and absolutely diabolical sin took place than anywhere else under heaven. At the very beginning of the day he urged every soul present to a fresh and entire committal of body, soul, and spirit, to Jesus Christ, to be accepted and used by Him. This act was formally joined in through the singing of a suitable hymn. As to that particular medium of spiritual blessing, Mr. Hughes observed that Christians often fail to derive half as much benefit from the singing of hymns as they might do.

REV. MARK GUY PEARSE,

the opening speaker, set forth the threefold purpose of the day's gatherings: (1) to get near to God in prayer; (2) to surrender ourselves afresh to Him more perfectly; and (3) to go forth and live out the blessing we have got. On the first point, Mr. Pearse quoted Matt. v. 23, insisting with great force and solemnity on the impossibility of getting near to God if there is in our heart any prejudice, ill-will, bitterness, strife, an old-standing quarrel, or ill-temper lightly indulged towards another. Before we bring our gift to the altar, we must be reconciled to our brother. This must be done, too, in the spirit of love. "If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." We may have emotion and orthodoxy; we may talk and feel and be thrilled; and yet it is all as nothing without love. In the eye of God we are but a liar and a murderer. God cannot give us the fruits of the Spirit without the congenial atmosphere. As a bit of personal confession, Mr. Pearse said that as he looked back on his Christian life he felt that he had more frequently lost the light of God's countenance and the consciousness of God's presence through the hasty word, the harsh judgment, the prejudice, the ill-temper, than in all other ways put together. The one thing (he said in closing a most searching exhortation) that we want, to gladden the heart of the Lord Jesus Christ and to have in ourselves all that God can give us, is the spirit of simple, gentle, gracious, Christlike, brotherly love.

In a brief time of silent meditation Mr. Price Hughes affectionately invited all or any in the company who had been cherishing unworthy feelings toward any brother or sister, dead or alive, at once and for ever to put them away without reserve, so that they might be able to draw near to God, and receive a personal blessing.

The second speaker was Dr. S. C. Morgan, who gave a pleasing and suggestive exposition of the incident recorded in John xxi., when Jesus met his band of disciples after the resurrection, and called them away from their old occupation to that of being fishers of men. The various points in the narrative were applied to the needs and condition of the church of to-day. On the practical aspect of the question he quoted the words of one who said he had got "the rest of faith," but, thank God, it kept him in perpetual motion for the good of others.

A FORGOTTEN ELEMENT

in the process of sanctification was brought before the gathering by Rev. W. H. Tindall, in the closing address of the morning, based on Eph. v. 25. This element he stated to be a right devotional use of the Holy Scriptures, as a very potent force in the great work of the believer's sanctification. One reason why so many people make such poor Christians is the crowding-out of Bible-study in their daily life and thought. Our Lord's prayer, "Sanctify them through thy truth," is too much forgotten. The law of God laid up in the heart will keep the steps of the outward life. By the study of the Word of God, when it is sweet to the taste, all unwholesome appetites are conquered. The Holy Spirit works in the heart of the believer through the Word, applying and enforcing it. He is the great interpreter of the Bible to the Christian. Known, treasured, loved, and illumined by the Spirit, the Word expels the darkness from the mind, and enfranchises the soul. Pondering over and praying over this Word is a powerful help in the sanctified life. It is also a channel of victory over temptation, as it was with our Lord in the wilderness. As the Sword of the Spirit it is the great instrument of Christian service. Let a purer love for the Word of God and a higher estimate of its worth, be one outcome of all these meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life.

During the meeting there was much prayer made by brethren and sisters for a rich and present blessing.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

In the presence of a still goodlier company the Conference was resumed in the afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. Price Hughes. After song and prayer, the first address was given by

REV. F. B. MEYER.

It is an indubitable fact, he said, that in the lives of many illustrous workers for God, a great change has, at some definite period, taken place, not in their intellectual apprehension of the truth, but in their spiritual experience. He would put to his hearers the question, at the opening of their winter's work, whether or not in their lives, some corresponding visitation of God had come to them. It did not matter much how: the fact itself was the great thing. What might not happen in the religious history of our great city if every soul present before the meeting closed were to receive, some for the first, others, perhaps, for the hundredth time, the enduement of the Holy Ghost as a power for service? We send out students from our colleges year after year, and we ask if they can preach, if they have good articulation and elocution, if they have passed certain examinations; but we never think of asking if they have received the enduement of power. Is it not very much the same with our Sunday-school teachers? And are not many of us in the Gospel ministry in a like condition? Do we as Christian workers know practically what it is to be guided and impelled by the Holy Spirit? If the Spirit be in us and on us He will also be with us, whether we visit a public-house or a house of shame, or stand and preach his Gospel at the street corner. We do not need to ask the gift of the Spirit; He is certainly here. But it is an axiom that if we obey the law of any force, that force will obey us. So, if we would have the power of the Spirit on us and at our disposal, we must study the law of his working. This is a theme on which we need the instruction of Spirit-taught men and women who live much in the presence of God. But one condition is the abnegation of the self-life; another is that we should seek and think much of the glory of Christ; a third is that we should be very careful and watchful in our daily walk; last of all, let there be the definite reception of the Spirit—not through wrestling with Him, but in an instant willing acceptance of his gift of power on us and on our work. Mr. Meyer then led in prayer, and sought, as his wont is, to guide his hearers into a definite act of taking the gift of God and of reckoning on the bestowal and enjoyment of it.

REV. CAMPBELL MORGAN

considered the office of the Holy Spirit as the Sanctifier, basing his thoughts on Matt. v., last verse, "Be ye therefore perfect," and Col. ii. 10, "Ye are complete in Him." Christ's word was spoken, he said, at the close of his sermon on the mount, his ideal of human life, and one infinitely higher than the law of Moses. It is one that is utterly hopeless of attainment on our part, in our own strength, and along the line of our endeavour. But we come to the second passage, "Ye are complete—or filled up—in Him." When Christ died that He might atone for the sin of the world, He also liberated his perfect life in order that it might become a new force in the filling up in the lives of his disciples that which is impossible on their part in the attaining of this ideal life. There are many Christians exactly in the position expressed by the Apostle in Romans vii. 22, 23, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members."

Is there deliverance from this law? The speaker went on to say: I am here to say, not merely as an advocate, but as a witness, that there is deliverance, and that there may come upon every soul that anointing of the Spirit of God, because there may come to every soul this cleansing of the Spirit of God. How am I to have deliverance? Let me tell you two ways in which you will not get it. Paul speaks of what "the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh." The attainment of this ideal will not come through the energy of the flesh, or through any action of my polluted nature. "The carnal mind is enmity against God, and is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be; so then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Where, then, is the way of deliverance? Look at verse 9, "Ye are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." I accept the distinction between the prepositions "in" and "upon." You cannot have the Spirit upon you for service until He is in you for cleansing. What we need is the coming into our life of the Holy Ghost and bringing there as a force all the fulness of Christ.

How or when will the Spirit come? I believe the gate of entrance is to be found in the expression of the Apostle in Galatians, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless, I live." It is in the death and crucifixion of self that the Spirit comes in his cleansing power. What is this crucifixion of self? It has to do with the personal will of each individual. It is more than renunciation; you have been renouncing your sins at every conference you have attended. Without this crucifixion and death of self there can be no coming in of the new life. My responsibility is in the yielding and consenting to that death; in the reckoning of myself to be dead indeed unto sin. Are we all prepared for that? I will not ask anyone glibly to answer that question. I need not dwell on what this may mean for any individual soul; it is a matter between you and your Lord. But are you prepared to consent to this death, in order that you may have the cleansing of the Spirit, and the anointing of the Spirit for service? Then you can say with the Apostle, "I am crucified; nevertheless I live." For this is not a narrow life. The way into it is narrow, but there is no broader life than this cleansed and anointed life. I do not say that when the Spirit comes in and cleanses and fills the soul that He fills up the outline at once, but until the soul is prepared by this cleansing of the Spirit, there cannot be that perfectness and likeness to Christ which is possible for us all. God bring us first to the death of self, and to the incoming of the Spirit as a burning and purifying power. Then we shall delight in that anointing of the Spirit for power, which makes the pulpit no longer something to be dreaded, but something to be hungered for; which makes the Sunday-school not something that we want to resign at every annual meeting, but something we would not give up for the world.

EVENING MEETING.

From six to seven the time was given up to prayer, under the guidance of Rev. W. H. Tindall. It was indeed a live prayer-meeting, brief red-hot petitions going up in quick succession from all parts of the hall. The voices of sisters seemed to predominate, and the great burden of the prayers was for the fulness of the Holy Ghost to be given to all present and that through them blessing might flow forth to the uttermost parts of the earth.

On the resumption of the Conference at seven o'clock, with a great congregation, Mr. Price Hughes briefly and tersely, but admirably recapitulated the chief points of the morning and afternoon addresses. Miss Havergal's consecration hymn—

> Take my life and let it be > Consecrated, Lord, to Thee,

was reverently sung as an act of deliberate and renewed self-surrender to God and to the reception of any further truth He might be pleased to vouchsafe through the speakers of the evening.

DR. R. F. HORTON

said he had felt constrained to refrain from preparing any set argumentative address or exhortation, as that might interfere with the simple act of self-surrender to which we are called. He wished rather to place himself alongside his fellows in that act. From John v., however, he drew attention to the words of Jesus, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." The Jews, he said, were apt to look on God's working as a thing of the past, and we are liable to the same temptation. But God is working to-day as perhaps never before in the history of the Church. As to the verses that follow, if we have any shade of doubt as to the absolute divinity of Jesus Christ, then we can join the Jews in regarding them as blasphemy—nay, as absurdity. "The hour is coming, and now is, that he that hears the voice of the Son of God shall live."

MR. READER HARRIS

directed attention to Acts xix. 2, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" or as some translators would put it, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" A good part of the first section of the address consisted of personal testimony; first as an inquirer, then as a sceptic manufactured by a Church which says the Word of God does not mean what it says; then as an awakened sinner soundly converted, and having received the baptism of the Holy Ghost. His belief was that the failure on the part of many to experience the cleansing and filling of the Spirit arose from a defective new birth. He urged the necessity of a "second blessing." The baptism of the Holy Ghost, he said, means, first the cleansing of the heart from all unrighteousness, then a filling with the Spirit, so that there will be an outflow and an overflow; then a continous cleansing, filling, and overflowing all along. Let there be a turning away from all that God lays his finger upon, and a committing of our life to Christ to be used by Him.

REV. H. PRICE HUGHES

gave the concluding exhortation. He said the specific work of the Holy Ghost in this era is the work of sanctification which He began on the day of Pentecost. In another aspect his distinctive work is to glorify Jesus Christ. He reveals Christ in his Divine power and Godhead. But when He thus glorifies Christ at the same time He makes such a revelation as was not possible before of the loveliness of Christ. So that Paul, taught of the Spirit, could say, "I count all things but refuse, that I may win Christ." Paul's devotion to Christ was not simply devotion to one who was the best of men and the greatest of teachers, but to Christ as God. This has been the master passion of all great souls in the early Church, as, for instance, Ignatius, Polycarp, and others who were privileged to be martyrs for the faith and love of Christ. The all-essential question for us, as it was for Peter, is "Lovest thou Me?" If we love Him intensely and absolutely all else will follow. We shall never be discouraged or defeated. All things are possible to him who thus loves the Lord. And we love Him because He first loved us. Love to Him will grow in our knowledge of Him. Christ prayed with respect to his first disciples "that the love wherewith Thou lovest Me may be in them and I in them." There is nothing more to wish for. Have we ever received, by the gift of the Holy Spirit, this beatific vision of the Christ, the Son of God? Such a vision will transform duty into delight. Let all hearts be opened to the reception of the Spirit, so that this love may be shed abroad in our hearts, and we shall love one another, even as Christ loved us.

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

The monthly workers' meeting, held on Wednesday week, was in some respects an echo of the Quiet Days in the Great Assembly Hall in the preceding week, as much time was spent in earnest waiting on God that He would empower his people afresh, and revive his work in this great city.

Mr. W. F. Archibald gave an address on the fisher lads of the North Sea, describing their isolated and friendless condition, showing how few their opportunities of hearing the Gospel, and telling how the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen had been the means of inducing some 700 Christian ladies to undertake writing letters regularly to these boys. He read a number of touching replies, illustrating how from cabin-boy to skipper whole crews prized and sought after such letters, which had already been made the means of blessing to many. He called for fresh volunteers for the service, which did not make serious inroads on time or means, but yet had been fruitful in result.

Miss Macpherson emphasised the value of letter-writing as a means of individual dealing with souls. The work that at present is specially on her own heart is Bird Fair, where each Lord's Day two bands from the Home of Industry testify amongst the dense masses of sportsmen, loafers, gamblers, street-sellers, and thoughtless lads who frequent this Sunday morning East End saturnalia. God has raised fresh speakers from among the frequenters of the Fair, saving one here and there, and bringing them out to witness for Him among their mates.

One such, being in the meeting, was called forward by Miss Macpherson, and asked to tell his experience. After a brief reference to his own conversion under the archway in Bird Fair, he narrated a recent and somewhat remarkable case in which a prodigal husband was saved, reconciled to his wronged wife—who also was led to accept Christ—and is now giving promise of a useful life.

Some account followed by Mr. and Mrs. St. Dalmas of labour among the aboriginal hill tribes of Northern India.

ALDERSHOT SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.—Begun by the late Mrs. Daniell, thirty-three years ago, and now has branches in Plymouth, Chatham, Colchester, Manchester, London, and Windsor, intended as places of recreation, social enjoyment, and religious influence for soldiers, free from the temptations which so often surround them elsewhere. The mainspring of the whole is the preaching of the Gospel, accompanied by personal dealing with souls. The multiplication of religious and benevolent agencies doubtless accounts for the falling off in numbers attending the meetings during the past year; but this seems only to have afforded opportunity for a very special realisation of the promise, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst." Miss Hanson has charge of the work, and her last report is full of most interesting letters and experiences.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The pressure of work at the headquarters of the prisoners' branch of this Mission does not decrease. Looking in one day last week we found Mr. Wheatley busy amongst eager, wistful applicants—picked up, most of them, at the gate of one or other of the four Metropolitan prisons, where these earnest workers are always on the outlook. Hundreds of men and lads as they pass out receive, morning by morning, a loving message; and the majority of them accept the invitation to breakfast, where they hear earnest words of warning spoken by men thoroughly familiar with their life and temptation. Thus from the prison-gate many find their way to the Brooke-street office in hope of aid in seeking to escape from the meshes of crime. Nor is this hope in vain—for wherever the director perceives a real desire for reformation, he takes care that the right and fitting help, that best suited to the case, is offered.

While thankful for the continued blessing attending these efforts among "men who have gone wrong," the Mission is giving more and more attention to boys; that is, the "first offenders"—lads betrayed into crime, snared and beguiled by vile men who seek to use them for their own purposes. The four Homes are now well filled, large numbers have passed through them, and are now doing well, while others are in course of training. All who know the actual issues of this work on behalf of tempted boys are aware that the results are of the most encouraging nature.

But while this prison-gate and rescue work is going on vigorously, the operations of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, in poor pitiful St. Giles are also in full swing. The great chapel in Little Wild-street was crowded to the doors on Sunday week by the poor of the district, who listen gladly to the Gospel proclaimed. The open-air work, now closing for the season, has been well sustained this year; while the house-to-house visitation and relief work is carried on, chiefly by means of four women workers, or deaconesses, whose unwearying labours among the poor are much valued. A further development, in the direction of a new centre of work at Hastings, is about to be formally inaugurated; but of this more will be heard later on.

Meanwhile this far-reaching and fruitful Mission is sorely hampered by lack of funds. Surely, were its results rightly appreciated, the Lord's people could not permit it to be hindered by want of means. The director is Mr. W. Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.

IN DOUBT.

I am a blind man on a helmless ship,
Without a compass on a stormy sea;
I cannot sink, for God doth hold me up;
I cannot steer, for God is guiding me.

I am a mountaineer in mist and night,
Wildly the wind whirls whistling o'er the wold;
I cannot find the way, for God leads right,
I cannot fall, for God's strong hand doth hold.

I am a friendless wanderer all alone,
Helpless and homeless do I vaguely roam;
I cannot starve, for God will hear me groan,
I am not lost, for God will find a home.

And so I leave the future to his care,
My heart unfathomed, He will show me clear;
And with blind faith I straightly onward dare
The path unknown, and faint not, neither fear.

CABMEN'S SHELTERS.—The Cabmen's Shelter Fund, established twenty years ago, has done excellent service in supplying shelter accommodation, accompanied with good and wholesome food at very moderate prices, to a body of men whose occupation necessitates their exposure to the bitter and inclement weather of our climate at all hours of the day and night. The advantages of these warm and light shelters form strong incentives to sobriety, and there is abundant testimony that their work has conduced to this happy result, intemperance having gradually decreased amongst the cab-driving fraternity in the most marked manner since the formation of the fund Hon. sec., Mr. Walter H. Pioneering in Peru.

By Mrs. H. L. MILNE.

I promised to tell you something about Dr. Wood's and Mr. Milne's visit to Huancayo. Like results might be obtained in any town in Peru, given a few of the same conditions. Huancayo was chosen in this case, being an important town and the seat of a weekly fair, where people come to do business from as far as Cerro Pasco, 126 miles to the north, and from Huanta, 168 miles to the south. It is situated between the two main Cordilleras, and lies something over 100 miles inland from Lima.

Dr. Wood and my husband wanted to inform themselves as to the proportion of the population who speak Spanish as compared with Quichua, the uniformity or diversity of dialect in the speaking of the latter, the density of the population, the relative number who have learned to read, and to what extent local authorities may be expected to allow Bible-sellers the exercise of their legal rights, and the protection they may count upon when assailed by mobs led on by priests and friars. Mr. Milne also wished to recover some Scriptures which had been left there in 1891 by two devoted women, Peruvians, converts of the church in Callao. These earnest workers had had good success, finding easy access into many homes, but after a time the priests succeeded in raising such a storm of opposition that their lives were in danger, and they were ordered by the sub-prefect to leave the town.

Huancayo is at an elevation of 10,000 feet above sea level, and is a health resort for consumptives. In 1876 it had a population of little over 4000, and has not grown since.

held on Sunday, occupies three plazas or public squares, extending about a mile along the main street, and overflowing into several of the cross streets. There would be some ten thousand people present, nine-tenths of them pure Quichua-speaking Indians. They deal in all the products of the country—wheat, barley, maize, sold by weight in great bags of coarse woollen cloth, or in small quantities; vegetables, herbs, drugs, wool and skins of sheep, of llamas, and of vicuna, butchered animals entire or retailed. They also sell dried frogs and the dried flesh of cats as remedies for consumptives. Other articles of commerce are native pottery, bridles, whips, ropes, halters, lassoes, knitted goods, socks, and armlets. The armlets are part of the ancient Inca dress, and are sometimes highly ornamented—boys and men as well as women being occupied in making them. Native hats, made of felt and straw, are sold. Men and women wear exactly the same kind of hat. Coca is also an article of commerce, brought from about Cuzco. Every Indian carries his small bag of coca, drawn through his belt, and constantly chews the leaves. The habit is universal; much more so than smoking among others, for they do not smoke.

One plaza is occupied as a market for live-stock and fodder. One place is devoted to the preparation of food, where small fires in braziers keep boiling large earthen pots of soup or stew, for which there is a constant demand. Dishes are of gourd or wood, or pottery, spoons and ladles of wood. This custom of supplying food in the street prevails everywhere. We see it constantly here in Callao.

I have said enough to show that these Indians are an industrious people, and capable according to the opportunities they have had. They cannot read, and so their condition remains stagnant, is rather in the line of deterioration, as drunkenness is very prevalent among them, women as well as the men.

During the first days of Dr. Wood and Mr. Milne's visit they had many interesting conversations among the people, whom they found accessible and ready to listen to the claims of the Gospel, as is always the case until their MINDS ARE POISONED BY THE PRIESTS.

Mr. Milne soon encountered one of these in the street, who demanded his authority for selling "adulterated" Bibles, and said he would denounce both him and his books in mass, etc. The hotel keeper was interested in the Bible, and the first evening conversed with Dr. Wood until late. Next evening he brought three of his friends who, he said, like himself, wished to hear more about these things. Laying his Bible on the table (one of Scio's translation, the first version published and circulated by the American Bible Society in South America over sixty years ago), he asked if it were not the same as those they were selling. He was told they were substantially and essentially the same, with some differences relatively insignificant, which were explained. Would Dr. Wood explain to them about confession as he believed it. The doctor took the Scio Bible and read Psalm li. as a very ancient model of confession. Another of the men then took a Bible from his pocket (Scio's also, a small edition, with the B. and F. B. Society's imprint), and was pleased to find that psalm in his Bible also. Some explanations were made, and the men appeared deeply interested. Other questions were brought up, Papal infallibility, apostolical succession, etc., but were set aside for more important subjects; the one who asked them confessing he did not believe them anyway. Would Dr. Wood talk to them again the following night, and explain about Peter, the rock, the keys, etc.? Agreed.

That night there were about thirty people present; among others the sub-prefect, who turned out to be an anti-clerical, and had once been a colporteur under Señor Penzotti. They brought in some sixteen Bibles, uniform edition, and handed them round to those nearest the light. They studied the subject from the Scriptures, slow work but sure, and new to all, finding the place by the page. There was much interest; the study lasted until 10 o'clock, and some remained much later for further questioning. Subject given for following night—confession (the second time), and the mass.

All this was, of course, too much to be allowed to continue. A distinguished priest, one who had just secured nomination as a deputy to congress, said,

HE WOULD ANSWER DR. WOOD PUBLICLY.

At the appointed time he failed to appear. His friends went to his house, but he was not in; they went elsewhere, but they could not find him—then back to his house, and insisted on seeing him. Finally the boy said the priest told him to tell them that he was not at home!

Meantime the parish priest, who had been constantly denouncing the visitors in church, had written a petition urging the sub-prefect to put a stop to these meetings, and the sale of these adulterated Bibles, and expel the men from the town. This was signed by about fifty women, members of the Catholic Union of Ladies, of whose "works of piety" I have already spoken, as helping to effect the long detention of the Bibles in the Custom-house here. Several of these ladies belonged to the family of the prefect, with whom Mr. Milne had had pleasant and interesting conversation in their own home some days previously. Some forty of these women besieged the sub-prefect in his own house, urging him to grant their petition. He sent the petition to the hotel for the visitors to read, recommending that the meetings be as private as possible. He felt friendly to them, but was under pressure from the household of his superior, and had received telegrams from the supreme Government at Lima, laying on him the responsibility of any grave consequences that might ensue. Telegrams from the absent prefect recommended their expulsion.

The meeting was held that night with closed doors. Both dining and billiard-rooms of the hotel were occupied. Bibles were again handed round for reference, and the subject of confession again dealt with—remarks based on Psalm li. and Luke xviii. 13. The meeting was orderly, and a profound impression was made. The subject given for next night was The Divinity of Christ, and the meeting formally closed.

As time passed the excitement became more intense, and one evening the sub-prefect sent some policemen to the hotel for a show of vigilance, but there was no order to close. After consultation, the hotel-keeper taking the responsibility for that night, the doors were closed and the meeting proceeded with. Before commencing, Dr. Wood showed that all the proceedings were within the limits of law, spoke of the restrictions on liberty, the emancipation of women from priestcraft, etc. His doctrine was strongly approved. Then he took up given subjects, and talked steadily for two hours. I cannot speak particularly of all the meetings, or of the wide range of subjects treated. The visit lasted three weeks, longer than they had planned for, partly on account of the interest in the meetings and partly to obviate the appearance of having been obliged to go. In the meantime our Bible colporteurs are having fair success.

I believe you have already heard of the expulsion of Messrs. Jarrett and Peters, of the East London Institute, from Cuzco. Five days ago they arrived safely in Lima after a weary journey on horseback of three weeks. It is matter of thankfulness that they are fairly well after such terrible exposure. Surely such barbarous and illegal proceedings may not be repeated with impunity; but they show the amount of bigotry and superstition rampant in Peru.

Callao, Peru, September 16.

THE EXPELLED MISSIONARIES,

Dear Sir,—On August 22 Messrs. Peters and Jarrett were expelled from Cuzco by order of the Supreme Government in Lima. This unlawful and outrageous act, without excuse or justification, by the authorities, fomented by the priests, was not only contrary to the wishes of the educated people and the public press of the city of Cuzco, but contrary to the constitution, to law and to justice. In a letter from the Government, they excuse their action by saying that "there existed a well-founded fear that the said gentlemen might be subjected to some insult." This is all the more contemptible when we know that the press, the thinking people, and University of Cuzco stood by them, and petitioned the Government on their behalf. Protestants here and in Callao are subjected to insult every week, and if that is an excuse for expulsion, then all the missionaries may be banished from Peru, regardless of sacrifice or injustice.

The British Minister, who will be doubtless supported by the Legation of the United Sates, is now laying the matter before the new Government. This we trust will result in more liberty in preaching the Gospel in the interior, or at least in defining our standing more clearly. Let it be known that public Protestant worship is prohibited in Peru, as well as in Ecuador and Bolivia. We are merely tolerated. The expulsion of Messrs. Peters and Jarrett has brought on a crisis. People's eyes are now being opened as never before to the abuses and degradation of Romanism. Some of the newspapers have written strongly against the influence which the priests exercised in this affair. The time is an opportune one, and calls for earnest prayer and attention from Christians in England. God has given us indications that his pillar is moving toward Peru.—Yours in Christ,

A. R. Stark.

CONFERENCE AT NORWOOD.

The second annual Conference on Scripture prophecy concerning the coming of the Lord Jesus and kindred truths, was held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week, in Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood. Throughout the whole series of meetings the large numbers that attended evinced a deep interest in the varied subjects considered.

At the introductory meeting on Tuesday evening (Pastor Fuller Gooch presiding), Revs. James Douglas and J. Gelson Gregson gave very helpful addresses. The former, who took for his subject, "The Practical Aspect of Prophetic Study," expressed a conviction, that while the Scriptures had a greater prophetic meaning and design than was generally recognised, they were not given that we might set up a museum of intellectual curios. They had in view our sanctification, that we should grow up into the likeness of Christ, following Him fully and freely. To be "prepared for the King," Mr. Gregson reminded us, meant an anointing by the Holy Spirit. The Church "needed not more lamps but more light, and a manifestation of the Spirit in the midst of the people."

On Wednesday afternoon General Sir R. Phayre was in the chair. Rev. G. D. Hooper spoke on "Mystery of Babylon," tracing its origin from Babel and its manifestation not only in the Church of Rome, but throughout Christendom. Its characteristic is profession, and not possession. Rev. John Wilkinson called attention to the Jews, their miraculous origin, history, preservation, and destiny, as an unimpeachable witness to the truth of God's written Word. The meeting closed with an address by Mr. Walter B. Sloan, on "Life and Service in the Light of the Lord's Coming." He showed that we need to live continually under God's influence in order to do his will.

Mr. Usher, of Bedford, was chairman at the evening meeting. Pastor Fuller Gooch spoke on the "Mystery of Iniquity; a Word of Warning," showing how the mystery of Satan runs parallel with the mystery of God, the one ending in the manifestation of the Antichrist, while the other culminates in the appearing of the Son of God. His hearers were warned of Satan's aim to corrupt the Church and bring about its downfall; the one condition of safety was an unconditional surrender to the Spirit, who is not only the restrainer of this mystery of curse, but the true source of the Christian's completeness. Dr. McKilliam was glad to have a subject so full of brightness as "A Glimpse of the Millennial Reign, a Word of Hope." We need a personal contact with Christ to fit us to reign with Him, and we look forward with joy to the last touch of the Master's hand to prepare us to share his throne.

At the Thursday afternoon meeting, when Mr. R. C. Morgan took the chair, a suggestive exposition of Isaiah iv. was given by Rev. J. M. Eppstein. A paper specially written for the Conference by Mr. G. H. Pember, on "The Parable of the Tares," was read by Pastor Fuller Gooch; it aroused a considerable amount of interest and comment.

The final meeting was an eminently impressive one. A lucid and exhaustive address on "The Mystery of God" was given by Rev. E. Brewer, connecting "the mystery" with "the blessed hope," and showing the need of heart enlightenment in this, as in all other Scriptures of Truth. Rev. R. Middleton brought the Conference to a close by a pointed and pathetic appeal, in speaking on "The Lord's Coming in Relation to those who Obey Not the Gospel." Christ, he said, would not be deceived by the outward garb; He knows and calls his own by name. The "Lion of the tribe of Judah" has power to overcome the "roaring lion;" and that power may be ours by faith in the Overcomer. H.

RICHARD WEAVER IN DEPTFORD.

Of all the localities that this experienced evangelist has visited, surely none is in greater need of the Gospel than that in which he has just conducted a ten days' mission, surrounded as it is with a teeming working-class population, and within three minutes' walk of one of London's most crowded highways.

Mr. Weaver is not in good health, by any means, and often finds the labour which he puts into his work a strain, but as he warms to his much-loved subject, the enthusiasm and fire of early days are still with him, and one might be tempted to think him as young as ever. Certainly he has lost no force in his manner of presenting the Gospel.

The Deptford meetings (which have been held at Octavius-street Baptist Chapel, of which Rev. D. Honour is the minister) opened on Sunday week with a stirring address on "This is my Friend," and was a very searching and fitting commencement of what has proved to be a time of blessing; it demonstrated clearly to the audience that the preacher was in real earnest, and had come on very solemn and urgent business which demanded thoughtful attention.

The week-night services have been well attended, and it was good to see so many of the hard-working sons and daughters of toil in the house of prayer, listening to the wholesome words of the evangelist and joining in the singing, a specially pleasing feature of the mission has been the unusual number of men present. This, indeed, is a noteworthy characteristic of Mr. Weaver's meetings generally.

His forceful address on "The Prodigal Son" was exceptionally telling, illustrated as it was with thrilling instances of conversion which had come under his own observation, and in which he had been the honoured instrument in God's hands. The recital of the conversion and death of the once celebrated prize-fighter "Bendigo" was a very fitting illustration, and produced a profound impression. Surely the star of hope has risen in the heart of many a poor wanderer as they have listened to this story of the exhibition of God's saving grace.

Last Sunday evening was a memorable time, such as is seldom experienced. It was no easy matter to find seats for all who were present, and truly the word was with power, as the preacher discoursed on the well-known words, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," and urged the Christians present to prove the truth of them by living Christ in their homes, encouraging the unsaved to believe the Gospel, and warning them of the danger in refusing, God's Spirit was working in many hearts through the solemn message.

Many young people have been blessed during the mission, but it has not been confined to them—an old man of seventy-six years found his way into the inquiry-room, and the very same evening his wife was also blessed. The Lord's people worshipping at this centre of Christian activity have received a stimulus through the visit of God's servant, and the heart of the pastor (who is laid aside, and in consequence not able to be present) has been cheered and encouraged by the manifest tokens of the Lord's presence.

A request from some of the railway men of the district had been sent to Mr. Weaver, that he should give the story of his life "From the Coalpit to the Platform." This was done at the close of the mission. Doubtless many who read these lines have heard this thrilling account of his life, both before and after conversion. He does not forget to magnify the grace and power of God in that "He is able to save to the uttermost."

Mr. Weaver has engagements in Scotland for the next two or three months. Will the readers of these lines remember him at the throne of grace, that the Lord may give him bodily strength, and use him mightily among the thousands who flock to hear him? J. P.

STAR HALL CONVENTION.

Our annual convention this year has been singularly blessed. Out of the six which we have been permitted to hold, none has, in our judgment, surpassed it. Perhaps its most marked characteristics were its spiritual liberty and the absence of human attempts to help God out with his work. The Lord did work and did answer the desires of those who waited for Him. Among the many fresh and striking words which He gave his people to speak, may we be allowed to recall a few:—

The Church of all ages is a widowed Church with a dead Christ until her Pentecost has come—the living Christ Himself. Like the ancient prophet with the starving widow, Jesus searches for vessels to hold the holy oil. Then placing them in a row, He fills them all from one cruse. The day of Pentecost is but a successful search for empty vessels. When they are found, then it is fully come! Men and women that hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled. Two dangers surround the saved — activity without the Holy Ghost, and the Holy Ghost without activity. The "life" of Jesus was perhaps the most mighty power about Him. His sermon on the mount could not be understood without a corresponding life to illustrate it. But his mighty acts and unprecedented miracles were not done to amuse the doctors or puzzle the public. They had a signification far beyond the healing of the body. If they only reached to it, strange that so many should still be saying, "He opened my eyes"—"mine that were born blind!" Heredity and hereditary evil of every sort are the studies of our age. Yet what cure has science found for hereditary taint? Can science cure the hereditary drunkard? Is she not dark about how to accomplish that? If Jesus has no Gospel that deals with hereditary ill, and hereditary sin, then there is none to be found. But the Gospel of Jesus reaches every sort of disease, whether eyes of the soul born blind, or eyes of the body.

To Jesus nothing is impossible. "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk" are still the words even to him who has been lame from his youth and crippled by original or inherited sin. The Church is bankrupt but for the capital of the indwelling Christ; without Him truly her windows look out upon Queer-street, though with Him they open wide into the sunshine of Faith-street. Long ago we heard the dismal words, "In the midst of life we are in death"! To-day they are reversed, "In the midst of death we are in life."

But let us not deal with our Gospel as if its words were magical, and so reduce it to a superstition. We read that when Moses set the brazen serpent up, the people had but to look at it and they were saved. Smitten by fiery serpents, it was the medium of deliverance, but when it had become, as long afterwards it became, a veritable idol, it was necessary to break it in pieces. Not unlike this, some of the most precious words—used so often for conveying the message of cleansing and full salvation—become as idols. Even "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin," may be conjured with and trusted to rather than the Lord Himself. Or sometimes our bodies are healed by the Divine power of our Lord, and on this, rather than upon Him, our eyes may afterwards too exclusively be riveted.

To know God is more than to trust Him. Knowledge of Him brings us constantly fresh revelations, shatters mere phraseology and passing forms of thought. How little time we spend with God! If we spent so little with our dearest friend we would not know much about him. Efforts after mere mental apprehension are fatal; God is known through the Spirit. When we know Him we cease to cry, "God help us"—even sacrifice, in the old sense, ceases, all is growth and progress; every day has its own sunshine. Let us have boldness to enter into the holy place through the blood of Jesus The temptation to spurious humility, which keeps so many out, should not hinder us. Say not "I am too low" if God calls you. It is pride, and not humility, that keeps so many back. They look on while the truly humble obey and enter as God calls, inwardly sneering at what they count to be a vain audacity, reckoning their own refusal to go forward as at least better than that. F. OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 27.

"Everyone that is clean shall eat thereof."—Lev. vii. 19.

In verse 18, it is admitted that leaven must be present in this holy feast, inasmuch as it stands for the essential principle of evil, which intrudes into our holiest worship. The self-life is an all-pervasive leaven. We may not be conscious of it, there may be no sufficient recognition of its distastefulness to the holy God, but it follows us even into the Holiest.

The worshipper was not allowed, however, to be knowingly unclean. There must be no stain on the conscience, which he might remove by confession and repentance. If there were, he must be cut off; that is, he must be debarred from all participation in holy rites, and suspended from entering the sacred enclosure of the Tabernacle.

This cutting off answers to the suspension of a believer's communion with God, because of unconfessed sin. The presence of the leaven of the self-life is no barrier to the enjoyment of the Divine fellowship, for we meet God in Jesus. But permitted sin makes such fellowship impossible, because we have not availed ourselves of the gracious arrangements made for the perpetual cleansing of the soul.

How many excommunicate Christians there are. You can easily see that they have been cut off; their joyless faces and powerless prayers, their inability to bear testimony for God—all tell the sad story. If you have been cut off, read your past history to discover the cause. Put away your sin, and seek the blessed cleansing of John xiii.; then come to feast with God, in holy communion, as at a common table.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 28.

"Ye shall not go out."—Lev. viii. 33.

For seven days Aaron and his sons, newly consecrated by the blood and oil, waited together in the Holy Place. They were prohibited from going beyond the door, but fed on the consecrated food till the eighth day summoned them to begin their priestly duties. Similarly we are shut in with our Great Aaron, the High Priest of our profession. We are in Christ in the purposes of God, for we were chosen in Him before the foundation of the world. We are in Him, as Noah was in the ark, and the child is in the home; as the member is in the body and the branch in the vine; as the sponge in the ocean, or the jewel in the sunbeam. We are in Him as a strong enclosure, through which the malice and strength of our foes cannot break, a fortress, a strong tower, a castle keep. We are in Him, as a banqueting-hall, a tabernacle with its shew-bread, an upper room with its descending fire.

It is highly necessary that we should maintain our walk and experience on this blessed elevation. The great enemy of our souls is perpetually tempting us to leave our abiding-place, and to try issues with him in the plains beneath. What is temptation but his subtle solicitation to come out from the secret place of the Most High. Doubtless, the bait is very attractive, but the end is death. Keep the charge of the Lord, and abide day and night in the company of the Great High Priest. "He shall dwell among them."

On what viands do such happy souls feast with Christ? A table is provided before them by the Lord Himself, and they feast on all that pertains to Him in blessed partnership. "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine."

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 29.

"Aaron lifted up his hands towards the people, and blessed them."—Lev. ix. 22.

The eighth day is evidently the type of the bright millennial morning. During the present age we are hidden with Christ in God; the world knoweth us not, as it knew Him not; our hopes, and joys, and aims, are largely secret. But the day is not far distant when He shall be manifested, and then we shall be manifested with Him in glory. That group of priests, following the high priest out from the recesses of the Holy Place, is a picture of the second Advent, when Christ and his own shall come forth to bless the world. When Jesus was parted in the Ascension from his disciples, He was in the act of blessing them; and in that attitude He will return. Who can doubt that all through the intervening ages, those blessed hands have still been outstretched, that heart ever going forth, in blessing.

What a Saviour is ours! In Him, meekness that bears all insult and hatred, and mercy that retaliates on wrong-doing in ministries of love combine. He fulfils his own idea of blessing those that hate, and praying for those that despitefully use. It was said of Archbishop Ussher, that to do him a wrong was to make him your friend for ever.

Let us imitate him in this, and let the going forth of our lives be one incessant stream of benediction to men, until they shall fall on their faces and acknowledge the overwhelming power of love.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30.

"Aaron held his peace."—Lev. x. 3.

His heart must have been rent with paroxysms of grief, as he beheld the bodies of his beloved sons on the floor of the Tabernacle, stretched out in death. He repressed the cry, choked back the sob, staunched the flowing tear, and continued to perform the holy duties with which he was charged. He was no stoic, and tears are not wrong for our dead, but his relationship to God was so overmastering as to still the expressions of nature.

He saw the wrong from God's standpoint.—It was of great importance that the Divine regulations and enactments should be maintained, and that the ministering priests should always prefer God's work and service above their own ideas. Aaron was able to appreciate that position, and saw the sin of which his children were guilty. They had forgotten the voice which said, Sanctify thou Me. Obedience is the foundation of reverence, honour, and service, and if it were relaxed with the priests, how for the people! How careful they should be who bear the vessels of the Lord! With what fear and trembling must they work, who work with God!

He acquiesced in the Divine dealings.—To take the yoke, and meekly bear it: to put the hand on the mouth, and both in the dust—this is rest and peace. Thus we drink his cup.

He felt that his work as priest must take precedence.—It was a solemn and awful thing to be God's anointed priest, and the office must come first, even to the denial of the dues of nature, if that were necessary: so always with us, there must be the subordination of everything to our service and work.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31.

"Whatsoever parteth the hoof and cheweth the cud."—Lev. xi. 3.

The animals, in which these two characteristics met, were reckoned clean, and therefore fit for food. It is certain that the minute particularity of these words has some further reference than the diet of Israel, important though that was, whether for their health, or to accentuate, with every meal, the necessity of their being a separate people. We may gather this lesson, that in our daily experience, we must combine meditation and separation.

Meditation.—The cattle do not simply browse on the pastures, but they lie down to chew the cud. It is not enough to peruse our allotted Scripture portion; we must ruminate upon it, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, and Scripture with Scripture. The Holy Ghost will bring all things to our remembrance.

Separation.—"Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God." The word of God pierces to the dividing asunder. We have not meditated to good purpose unless we have felt its keen edge. Detachment from the world must follow on true attachment to Christ. Love to Naomi will draw Ruth from Moab over the Jordan.

The two must be combined.—The swine divideth the hoof, but cheweth not the cud, and was therefore unclean. A man may profess to love his Bible, but the supreme test is his daily behaviour; whilst, on the other hand, our daily life ought to emanate, not from without, which is Pharisaism, but from within, where the Word is hidden in the heart.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1.

"Two young pigeons."—Lev. xii. 6.

These were the offerings of the poor, of those whose means did not suffice to buy a lamb.

The blood of Christ is within the reach of the poorest and feeblest.—None can say that it is beyond them, that they cannot afford to procure it, that they are too poor. To the poor the Gospel is preached. The Divine call is to those who have no money. Salvation is to him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly. "It is nigh thee."

The faith that apprehends but a part of the Saviour's work saves.—The pigeon may stand for the meagre apprehension of Christ that is the portion of the faltering and timid, but it saves equally with that fuller conception of his saving work, which might be compared to the bullock of the priest. The question is not as to the quantity but the object of faith. Is it fixed on Jesus? All faith directed to Him is genuine. It may but touch his garment's hem, yet it saves.

The beneficence of God's law.—What tender touches there are through this strong ancient code! There is such a one here, framed partly in anticipation of the mother of our Lord, who gladly availed herself of this provision. What a glimpse into our Master's humiliation. He owned the cattle on a thousand hills, yet He so emptied Himself that his parents had to bring the poorest offering the law allowed. He stooped that we might rise; emptied Himself that we might be full; became poor that we might be made rich.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2.

"Behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague."—Lev. xiii. 13.

At first sight this seems a very extraordinary provision. When the leprosy was beginning to show itself, and whilst the marks were hardly distinguishable, the poor patient was treated as unclean; but, when it was fully developed, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, the priest pronounced the leper clean.

As long as we palliate and excuse our sins, and dream that there is much in us which is noble and lovely, we are not fit subjects for God's saving grace. But when we take our place as helpless and undone, without one plea, or one redeeming trait, we are in the position in which the free grace of God can have its blessed way with us.

We must come to an end of ourselves, and fall prostrate, in the very helplessness of our despair, in the very dust at our Saviour's feet. We must confess that from the crown of our head to the sole of our foot we are full of need and sin, then we are nearest Christ.

Would you rise, get down. God's thrones are approached, not by steps up to them, but by steps down to them. It is the publican who beats his breast as chief of sinners that goes down justified to his house. He that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

OVERCOMING FAITH.—Nothing honours our God so much as enduring, overcoming faith, persevering in despite of opposition, in destitution of all outward prospects of relief. It is when "against hope we believe in hope, not staggering at the promise of God through unbelief," that we are "strong in faith, giving glory to God."—Bridges.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

NOVEMBER 3.

SAMUEL THE JUDGE—1 Sam. vii. 5-15.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 12.

THE oppression of Israel by the Philistines, which this incident terminated, had lasted for forty years. It was a bitter experience, by means of which God punished his people for their sinful idolatry, and sought to deliver them from it.

Before this great gathering it is probable that Samuel, though his home was at Ramah, went from place to place, witnessing against idolatry, and preparing the people for a return to the Lord.

The name Ebenezer, i.e., "Stone of help," was given to commemorate the remarkable deliverance this lesson records (Golden Text). The place was near to Mizpah, i.e., "Watchtower" (5), about four miles north-west of Jerusalem. Twenty years earlier, Ebenezer had been the scene of a most humiliating and disastrous defeat. Tell the story of the first battle, when four thousand Israelites were slain (iv. 1, 2); of the superstitious reverence for the ark, and their foolish confidence in it (iv. 3, 4); of the alarm, and the courage of the Philistines (iv. 5-9); of Eli, nearly a hundred years old, waiting at Shiloh for news of the battle, and of his sad death when the disastrous failure was announced to him (iv. 12-18); and of the birth of Ichabod, as a perpetual reminder of the loss of the ark of God (iv. 19-22). Nothing more humiliating could be imagined; and it is remarkable that the place in which He suffered such disastrous defeat, became the scene of their most remarkable victory. The very name Ebenezer should remind us that just where we have suffered our greatest failure God can give us our greatest triumph. In what part of your life have you been most humiliated? There God can be most glorified.

But the triumph must be reached on similar conditions. First, they "lamented after the Lord" (2)—not the ark, as they had done before, but the Lord. To need Him is the first condition of obtaining Him. Next, they put away their strange gods (3-4). There could be no true repentance without this. Repentance is a turning from sin to God. The smallest idol, loved and cherished, prevents our enjoyment of Him. Have you found out your idols? You may discover them in your thoughts, your hearts, your companionships, your books, your pleasures, your gains; be willing to know them, and to forsake them.

Then followed confession (6), all the more valuable because publicly made. It was accompanied by a symbol which expressed both the sincerity of their contrition before God, and the unalterable character of their vows. And fasting was a further indication of sincere grief. To get back to God was more to them than their necessary food.

They were in earnest, yet they needed Samuel to intercede for them (8), and to offer sacrifice on their behalf (9). Our repentance and confession cannot secure the blessing apart from the atonement and intercession of our Great High Priest. With Him to plead for us the merits of his finished work we need never doubt our acceptance.

Having returned to God, it is instructive to note how their deliverance was effected. First, their faith was tried (7). The five great kingdoms of the Philistines were represented in the company which came up against them. What could they do, unarmed, against such a host? Often the first consequence of returning to God is a deeper sense of helplessness and need.

But in their extremity God fought for them (10). In the faces of the Philistines the lightnings flashed with dazzling and terrifying brightness. The roar of God's artillery was heard above them. What could the arms of the Philistines do against such an adversary? How valuable the lesson! Just when the Israelites felt their weakness and helplessness more than ever, then was their victory at hand. Is it not always the case that God fights for us when we have no might?

The victory was no mere transient one, soon to be changed to defeat (13). When God saves, He does it thoroughly. Half measures have no favour with Him. He not only saved them from the Philistines, but gave back to them for a possession the cities they had lost (14).

ORPHAN GIRLS' HOME, CROYDON.—It is now ten years since this place was opened to receive little girls whose homes had been broken up by the death of parents. There are some thirty-five children thus cared for in Burgos House, Sydenham-road North, where Miss Talbot is matron. The work of saving the children carried on in this and similar institutions all over our land, may be commended to all Christians. Miss Smith, Dalkeith Cottage, Wellesley-road, is hon. sec.

For the Young.

WEIGHTS AND WINGS.*

BY REV. A. N. MACKRAY, M.A.

"It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth."—Lam. iii. 27.

WEIGHTS and wings: the youngest of my readers can easily remember these two words, each of them beginning with the double v, which is such a trouble to foreigners. And I shall try to show you how all our weights may become wings. The truth will, perhaps, find readiest entrance into your minds through the fable that tells how the birds came to fly. For at the first they could only run upon the ground like other creatures. But one day God brought two little burdens, and laid them down on either side of every bird according to the size of each. And He said to them (for God can speak to birds as well as to angels and men), "Take up these burdens and carry them for Me." Now the birds that obeyed God's command found that the burdens beside them clung to, and became part of themselves. They could move them about and rise with them, until at last by means of them they mounted aloft, and roamed at will through God's great heaven of blue. The weights became wings. In bearing their burdens, the birds found that their burdens bore them.

Now I don't believe that the youngest little toddler who listens to what I am saying is quite without a burden, or difficulty, or trouble. Haven't some eyes been wet to-day, some hearts sad, some little heads very perplexed? Oh, they don't know children who think that they are without troubles and cares! Brave little weight-carriers I know of, who are "breeding their future wings." I have heard girls, not very young either, singing a rather foolish song about wings, and what they would do with them if they had them. And when we put the wishing cap on our heads we suddenly mount up as on eagles' wings, and we do marvellous things. But it is out of our heavy weights, not our idle wishes, that we gain real wings. Haven't you found this out for yourselves? Learning to write, for example, is not an easy thing. Oh, the weariness of those everlasting strokes and pothooks, the fingers that will get inky, and the copybooks that will get blotted, and the pens that never will go right, even when the sympathetic tongue is following the devious course of each uncertain capital! But now that by letter-writing you can still talk to father and mother when they are from home, and know what your brother is doing in Canada or Australia, have not the weights become wings? How I have pitied people who, having never learned to write even their own names, have had to be content with making a mark like this—X! It is a life-long burden they have to carry, because they had not borne the school yoke in their youth.

Neither is it easy to learn languages. The French verbs are such a bother to the brain; and if the roads of the Romans go straight over hill and dale, their long sentences seem as confused and confusing as the maze at Hampton Court. But when you come to travel on the Continent, or go into an office in the city, or when you can make companions of the wisest and wittiest of the old Greeks and Romans, you will find that the weights have given you wings. I have known lads at school and college who were heavily weighted in the race by what we call adverse circumstances. Some of them lived just one or two degrees above starvation. Oh, it was hard, cruel work! But their difficulties became a Divine discipline. They learned to do without, and that is a way of growing rich in which the poorest may excel. They learned the secret, through prayer and pains, of turning weights into wings.

Look at that boy of twelve or fourteen, sitting on a summer evening in the early years of this century, on the coping of the railing that enclosed Canterbury Cathedral. He has worked hard all day in the shop of a coach-builder. Too poor to purchase drawing materials, he is content with an old slate and pencil; and it was thus equipped that an artist found little Sidney Cooper, night after night, on the coping, sketching the great church, and gave him, to his astonishment and delight, his first bundle of pencils. The boy became a famous landscape painter, and in the story of his life, which he has lately told, his use of the slate for sketching the cathedral is seen to be only the first of many other instances of weights becoming wings. And this is how the veteran artist closes his autobiography: "I feel that I have risen to some distinction, and that I have a name which no gold could purchase nor parchment alienate. I have, moreover, found peace in the better knowledge of my Saviour, and grace which will comfort me for the rest of my life, as well as trust, which will bear me through the dark valley when my time comes, and the blessed assurance that there is a glorious immortality, and that I shall one day see Him as He is."

But it is "when we read the sweet story of old, when Jesus was here among men," that we learn best how weights become wings. We shall never, indeed, know all the burdens that were laid on Him when He gave Himself to do the Father's will and save the world. But He spoke of his sufferings and death for us as his being "lifted up." And if under the burden of our salvation He was lifted up to the cross of shame, was He not also, by the same burden, lifted up to the throne of glory, where He holds the post of honour in the universe of God? You remember how He likened his strong, tender, self-sacrificing, unquenchable love to the wing of the mother bird spread over the helpless brood in the hour of peril. But we shall never put our trust under the shadow of his wings until we really believe that all the heavy, crushing weights He bore for us, as Boy and Man, as Servant, Sufferer, and Saviour, have given Him his wings of pitying, sheltering, saving love, under which He would gather us and all men.

And Jesus is the power to make us like Himself. It is a hard struggle for boys and girls, as well as for grown men and women, to curb the temper, crush down evil thoughts, and hate every wicked way, and be truthful, faithful, pure-hearted, generous, and brave. But if you ask the Saviour to help you, if you join company with Him, and get Him to fill you with his own spirit of trust and love, of purity and patience, of grace and glory, you will find that the burdens you carry are carrying you. And out of the weights you have to bear, as Christian boys and girls, you will acquire good and noble habits that will be as eagles' wings to you in all your future lives.

The birds in the fable that would not carry the weights God in his wise love put down beside them are wingless to-day. Even the kite you fly in the meadow will not mount up steadily without a weight to its tail. To be without a burden is the greatest burden of all. The old prophet was right when he said that it was good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth. You should see the gleam of bright wings in every heavy weight you are called to carry. In the school of Christ the yoke gives ease and the burden grows light. To bear the cross is to wear the crown.

IN A CORNISH VILLAGE.

In a picturesque village in Cornwall the more earnest members of the little Methodist church became uneasy in the spring of last year at the steady decrease in the attendance at the usual Sunday and week-day services, and at the small number who came to the weekly class meetings. Many of the older members had passed away, and the younger members who were growing up were not showing evidence of conversion of heart and dedication to the Master's service. After much prayer, it was decided to hold a series of meetings, the members earnestly seeking God's guidance and blessing, and praying that the Holy Spirit might be poured out upon speaker and hearers, and that many might be gathered in to be earnest and faithful disciples of the Lord Jesus.

As there was no resident minister, the question arose as to asking someone to conduct the services, and two or three of the members, having been struck with the earnestness of a local preacher of another denomination, it was decided to invite him to take this responsible position. This brother, who works in a neighbouring quarry, accepted the invitation, and the meetings were commenced in January of this year. A few people said, "This man is not educated or talented enough to draw the people," but the members who had invited him were looking to God to bless the meetings, and were not depending on the learning or eloquence of man.

The meetings were continued for a fortnight, apparently without result, none having openly decided for Christ. The preacher thought the time had arrived for him to leave them; he had come, he said, with a few sermons prepared, and now, having no more left, he thought it was right for him to return home. The members, who had been praying to God for his blessing, and helping in any way they could, said "No, we believe we are to continne the meetings, and that the blessing will come. You may have no sermons left, but we will continue to pray that the Holy Spirit may give you the right message, and bring it home with power to the hearts of the people." At the meeting held that night, the power of the Holy Ghost was manifested, and several souls were converted, and at the subsequent meetings each night some came out definitely for Christ, till between fifty and sixty souls professed to be turned from darkness unto light, and from the power of Satan unto God. During the day visits were paid to the homes of the people, and they were invited to the meetings, and as the work went on the revival in the chapel became the talk of the whole neighbourhood.

At the conclusion of the services a tea-meeting was held, followed by a testimony meeting, at which many of those who had yielded themselves to Christ during the meetings openly confessed Him. Some of these were young men who worked in neighbouring quarries; and of nearly all it can be said—they are showing by their consistent lives and conversation that they have truly found their Saviour, and are earnest now in his service, taking part in Sunday-school and Band of Hope work, and in the class and prayer meetings. A few have been speaking for the Master as local preachers at neighbouring chapels, going at first under the loving care of an earnest member of the chapel, whose interest in all the young men was truly fatherly and kind, and who rejoiced much in this outpouring which he had prayed for so earnestly. This brother has been suddenly called home, and is sorely missed by the band of workers.

We see how God honoured the believing prayers of his children in this village; should not those of us who, mourning, maybe, the deadness of the congregation with which we are connected, or whose hearts yearn over the many we see around us, living careless, Godless lives, be afresh stimulated to come to our heavenly Father in earnest believing prayer? Eloquence or learning is not essential, but there must be the claiming in the name of the Lord Jesus, in a simple childlike spirit, of the blessings which our loving Father is waiting to bestow. It was not until the brother had got to the end of his own resources that the Holy Spirit used him for the conversion of sinners.

GOSPEL WORK IN SAXONY.

In our laudable zeal for heathen lands we are apt to overlook the fact that whole countries on the European continent are lying in darkness as great, and in spiritual destitution as deep, as can be found in Asia or Africa. The fearful influence of Romanism in its interdicting the Word of God, and supplanting the pure Gospel of Christ by its Mariolatry, and doctrine of sacramental efficacy, is seen and felt when one visits lands like Bohemia and Bavaria, and beholds the condition of the people as to spiritual things. Lutheranism itself, alas, in kingdoms like Saxony, is so formal and dead, and so much under the influence of Sacerdotalism and Sacramentalism, as to render the need of Gospel effort almost as great as in lands entirely dominated by Popery.

This latter statement might be called in question by some who think of Lutheranism simply as represented by the views and work of the Great Reformer. But facts show that the spirit of intolerance and opposition to freedom of religious thought is, in some parts at least, as pronounced, and as ready to persecute, as in Rome itself. Notwithstanding all, God has his faithful witnesses in the most priest-ridden and uncongenial lands, so that there are in Saxony, as well as in different parts of Austria, earnest workers of different sections of the one Church.

Herr Karl Mascher is the pastor of a Mission Church holding Baptist principles, in Dresden, where he has been for some time maintaining, in the midst of great opposition, and under great difficulty, a most clear and consistent testimony to Evangelical truth, in which he has been wonderfully blessed of God. The little church which has hitherto met at his house, where two rooms have been turned into one, was only commenced less than four years ago, yet now numbers 120 persons. They support two colporteurs and two Bible women, and are a company of devoted, simple-minded believers. The fact that though almost entirely of the poorer class, and receiving the German rate of wages, they contributed in the last twelve months over £180 for the support of the Home Mission work, is sufficient proof of their self-denying zeal.

Pastor Mascher has been repeatedly brought before the courts, threatened with imprisonment, and fined for adhering to evangelical principles. He has been forbidden to circulate tracts with the notice of his services stamped upon the back, or in any other way to invite the attendance of outsiders; and is exposed to many difficulties in carrying on the work. He has earnestly sought as far as possible, consistently with obedience to the Lord Jesus, to obey the unrighteous laws under which he and his church, together with other Christians working on Gospel lines in Saxony, are suffering. Their present position is that they are obliged to leave the house where they have been until now meeting, and are proposing to build a hall, the total cost of which will not exceed £800. The ground is secured, and the plans have passed the courts having control of such matters.

The members of the church are loyally supporting him, and doing their utmost, but it is quite out of their power to raise the amount required, apart from substantial outside help such as cannot be obtained in their own land. Pastor Mascher is now in England with his wife, the daughter of Pastor Fuller Gooch, of Norwood, with a view of obtaining such financial help as may be possible from fellow Christians. It is believed that a large number of those identified with Christian work will welcome the opportunity of hearing something of this fellow labourer's efforts, and of having fellowship with him and with those who, like himself, in Saxony, are persecuted for the sake of the truth.

Pastor Gooch, Chatsworth-road, West Norwood, S.E., has recently visited the people, and is able to testify to the great need there is for the testimony they bear, as well as for all the brotherly aid that can be extended to them and their fellow-workers in other parts of Saxony and Bohemia.

INDUSTRIAL MISSIONS AID SOCIETY.

During recent years there has been a growing conviction that industrial missions—for training native converts to labour, and facilitating such labour among them—are calculated to serve an important purpose in the evangelisation of the world. Organisations of German and American birth have afforded valued object-lessons, and from our own land earnest efforts have been put forth, and not without encouraging success. A new agency, inaugurated with much promise, is the Industrial Missions Aid Society, the objects and aims of which were explained on Wednesday last at a meeting in the Council Chamber of Exeter Hall.

The Society aims at associating commercial, manufacturing, agricultural, and other pursuits with the ordinary work of foreign missions, financially separate, but linked in close fellowship. The advantages will be (1) to increase the funds available for missionary purposes; (2) to find employment for native Christians; (3) to provide technical education for native youths; (4) to illustrate the close connection between the Christian life and honest labour. The Society will accordingly be a centre where Christians may hear of useful investments. It is hoped that, with expert assistance, the benefits aimed at will be fully realised.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. T. B. Miller, and an address explanatory of the enterprise was delivered by Mr. H. W. Fry, one of the founders. He described the excellent work of the Basel Missionary Society in India, whose industrial operations have not only been of immense use to the natives of the country, but have also rendered material assistance to the evangelistic work. Some have objected that the undertaking is likely to secularise mission efforts. On the contrary, it is sincerely hoped that it will do something to spiritualise secular work. Offices have been taken at 32, Old Jewry, London, E.C., to which all applications should be addressed. Persons able to render honorary assistance are also invited to communicate with the Society.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson gave a general commendation to the Society's scheme, and expressed a belief that whether success was attained or not would depend entirely upon the wisdom and discretion displayed in the management. He emphasized the importance of training semi-savages in habits of order and steady work, and showed the urgent need of providing employment for those who, on professing the name of Christ, are disowned by their friends, and treated as social outlaws. This must be done on commercial lines, so as to be self-supporting and free from a pauperising tendency.

Rev. G. W. Sawday described industrial work as carried on by himself for seventeen years at Tumkur, in the Mysore Province of India. He held that when, through their Christianity, natives lose their means of livelihood, it is incumbent upon the Mission to take them in hand. After the famine of 1876, the Wesleyan Mission received hundreds of children into orphanages in Mysore, and at length the industrial problem had to be faced. The measures then adopted have resulted in wide-spread good. Whereas twenty-five years ago there was not a Christian artisan in the district, now there are such all over the country, and they not only earn their livelihoods, but show the heathen how Christians should live. Moreover, they are a great help to the work of the Mission, which they have made practically self-supporting.

Dr. Harry Guinness also spoke favourably of the scheme. Referring to Congoland, he said that the condition of things has largely changed during recent years, in the course of which the white man has taught the native to follow many useful arts and occupations.

THE LATE

Mrs. S. A. Pierson.

It is not often that people live, in these ays, well on towards the completion of a entury. But we present to our readers the counterfeit presentment" of one such mother in Israel."

Mrs. Sally Ann Pierson was born on the econd day of February 1802, and died on the hird of March of the present year; conse- uently she had already entered the ninety- ourth year of her age.

She was the mother of seven children, mong whom were two ministers of the Gos- el, Rev. Joseph W. Pierson, an episcopal lergyman who died in Auburn, N.Y., in 1863, nd Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, who, of course, urvives her, and with whose family she had ade her home for some thirty-five years. Ier husband was Stephen H. Pierson, a well- nown merchant of New York, and when in 860 he was struck with paralysis, and be- ame partially helpless, these parents, at the ordial invitation of their son, became inmates f his home. Dr. Pierson's father died in 863, shortly after his son Joseph; and the eloved mother continued to live with this ounger son, Arthur, until she was suddenly alled higher.

Her comfort and happiness were, for all hese years, the regulating law of that home. Vhen, in 1892, at the death of Pastor Charles I. Spurgeon, Dr. Pierson was in charge of he Tabernacle pulpit, and was invited to ontinue his work in London for a longer eriod, the one controlling consideration hich seemed at the time to compel his re- urn to America without further delay was he fact that his aged mother had no other arthly home save in his house, and no one lse but him to care for her in her declining ears. She was already very weary of his ight months' absence, and her yearning for is return seemed to him the call of God to eturn and honour his mother by watching ver her old age.

This "ancient lady" had been, at the time f her departure, more than seventy-five ears engaged in active life. Early brought o the knowledge of Christ, she spent her ong life in his service. Naturally she was ull of vivacity and energy, gifted in conver- ation, and sparkling with humour. Her emory was to the last marvellously ready nd retentive, and she never lost her intense nterest in current events. She read the aily and weekly newspapers, and kept her- elf on the track of the world's progress. She as especially on the alert as to all news rom the mission field, and took an honest ride in the interest which her son was per- itted to kindle by his missionary talks and ooks. She herself was particularly given to ood works and alms deeds, loving to look ersonally into the needs of the poor and ick, and supply their wants by her own irect ministry. As she had a home with er son and was at no expense for ordinary omforts, she used the slender income which as left her for her private use, in promoting he happiness and welfare of those who were ore destitute.

Nothing was more surprising in her old age han the retention of all her faculties. Her yesight alone gave signs of decay, and for the ost part only in the evenings when obliged o depend upon artificial light. Otherwise he showed no signs of her very advanced ears, being as acute of hearing, as erect in erson and posture, and as firm and quick of tep as most women of sixty. Up to within week or two of her death she was a regular attendant at the "Dorcas" Society of the church to which she belonged, happiest when busy with some work for others. Her needles had knit hundreds and thousands of socks and other articles for the use of soldiers and the sick in the hospitals, and of the poor. And it was a pathetic sight at her funeral to see at the head of her coffin her long-used and much-worn Bible, with her gold spectacles, while in her hands were the knitting-needles with a half-finished piece of work, the last on which she had been engaged.

This patriarchal mother and grandmother and great-grandmother lived to see her sons' and daughters' families grown to a tribe which numbered forty-six in all. She had lived under the rule of every President of the United States except George Washington, and besides having two sons in the ministry, her elder daughter was, at her own death, the useful wife of another clergyman in a Philadelphia parish, Rev. John F. Lundy, D.D.

When it pleased God to call this saint of nearly a hundred years, He graciously ordained that she should "not taste of death." She had been ailing for a few days with a slight cold, and had been in bed for the sake of avoiding exposure. On the early Sabbath morning she asked to be "lifted a little higher," to ease her breathing, and on being gently raised up, she dropped her head to one side and was indeed "lifted higher," in the Everlasting Arms. She passed from time to Eternity, making the august exchange of worlds without a struggle or the consciousness of dying. What a privilege! to live to such an age, retaining health and all the faculties scarcely impaired; and then in a moment pass into the presence of the Lord, whom she had three score and ten years before chosen as her Eternal Portion!

WALDENSIAN CHURCH MISSIONS.—In the five districts into which Italy is ecclesiastically divided, this mission has during 1894 received 510 new members into Church fellowship. Keeping in mind the two currents, superstition and infidelity, opposed to each other in appearance, yet resulting from the same cause, one cannot but recognise God's hand in the snatching of these hundreds of souls from the debasing yoke of a gross superstition, or from the withering and mortal delusions of an unbelief which assumes all manner of forms. More than once workers have been called to the bedsides of dying persons whose hearts had been touched by a sermon they had heard, and have left it with the sweet thought that they had accompanied a soul at peace with God to the threshold of eternity, one whose name nevertheless was not entered on the roll of any evangelical church. The Mission is represented in London, among others, by Lieut.-Colonel M. Frobisher, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.

HELPFUL HINTS.

All those who read Mr. C. H. Yatman's little handbook for Christian workers published some time ago will welcome his companion brochure just issued by Messrs. Partridge & Co., "Hints on Prayer, Revival, and Bible Study" (1s.) This American evangelist has the gift of sententious, sparkling, and suggestive utterance; which gift is amply apparent in the pages before us. We give a specimen from each of the three divisions of the book:—

PRAYER.

His four short chapters entitled "Prayer Meetings in Deadtown" ought to be printed in leaflet form, and scattered among Church members by the hundred thousand. On the topic of "How to pray" Mr. Yatman says:—

"I get very impatient over long prayers in prayer meetings. One man covers everything that is wanted and a good deal more, and when the next man prays, it is only a repetition of the same desires, and the people don't like it. Away with those old prayers that everyone knows by heart. There are some men who every week will offer up the same prayer in service. How refreshing it would be to hear one of these get up and say, 'God be merciful to me a sinner,' and then sit down. There would be many a Methodist 'Amen' in that meeting, I feel sure, at least in the heart. Leaders ought to stop those who pray too long. Good meetings have been killed by long prayers.

"Without prayer there will be no power to win souls. Write the names of unconverted ones down in your Bible, and pray them into the kingdom of God. I am saved to-day because of my mother's faith and prayers. Pray for your children, kneeling with them by your side. Learn to hear your own voice in prayer. The first thing when you wake up in the morning, talk to God. Speak with Him before you talk with anyone else. And so the last thing at night."

REVIVALS.

"Trusting on any means, methods, or men, for true revival work will bring no permanent and abiding success. It must be ever and always a looking to God. Good revivals follow the prayers of earnest Christians, and the forcible presentation of the doctrines of sin, repentance, and redemption. No great work is done in any church or city where they make little of the blood of Christ, the awfulness of sin, and the Holy Spirit. Evangelists are good things in their right places, but their place is not to help lazy pastors or lazy people; and yet perhaps it is—maybe they are most needed there. No matter how hard the field or how peculiar the place or people, you can have a glorious revival, and one that will last, by the simple rule of waiting on God till Christians are under conviction for the lost."

THE BIBLE.

"Try reading Bacon or Shakespeare to the soul lost in sin, for the purpose of lifting him out of the slough of despond or the darkness of despair. You who put so much dependence on scholasticism and scholarship, try a bit of it on some wayward boy or fallen girl. You may read till you are blind, and they will be no better. Take the whole Bible, and go to any place or any one you please, open up first at the safety Psalm, the ninety-first; then take Luke xv., and you won't be at the third parable before your hearer will feel a mighty tug at his soul. How I would like to get ten thousand preachers next Sabbath to throw away, for once at least, their well-spun sermons; to go into their pulpits, after a week of prayer: open up the Scriptures at 1 Peter i. 23, and from there, to the end of the chapter, begin to expound and preach. Peter's experience at Pentecost would soon be repeated. That memorable sermon that got three thousand converts was nearly all words of God, not words or thoughts of Peter's."

MR. GEORGE BRAITHWAITE in Japan writes:—"Nearly all the Chinese who were brought to Japan as prisoners of war were opium-smokers. While here, however, the Japanese authorities allowed them no opium. Many of them suffered terribly in consequence for a time, but they recovered, and all resolved to have nothing to do with opium in future."

THE SOUTH LONDON MISSION.

The sixth anniversary of this Mission, which God has so greatly blessed, was held last week in the central home of the Mission—the Southwark Chapel. Special sermons on the Sunday were followed by devotional and other services on the Tuesday. The afternoon meeting was well attended, the chair being taken by Mr. Ezra T. Wilks, F.R.G.S., who thought it would be well if some of the suburban circuits could be in some way attached or affiliated to the Central Missions. The success of these Missions was, he believed, due to the joyful character of the religion taught and practised.

Rev. Thomas Champness said, in the course of a characteristically racy address, that Wesleyans bore a certain responsibility for carrying on the work of God in such a fashion that they should not be ashamed by-and-by to look John Wesley in the face. He proceeded to urge the necessity for a conscious salvation, for a salvation that made men's faces to shine.

Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant spoke of the wonderful revival now in progress. The blessing had been poured out and there had not been room enough in the existing churches to contain it. After indicating tokens of revival in various churches, he urged that under the anointing of the Holy Ghost Methodism should be doing a thousand times as much for the glory of God as she was doing. Let all her local preachers, class-leaders, Sunday-school teachers, and other workers but be filled with power from on high and she would win souls at such a rate she had never known before.

In the evening the large chapel was densely crowded. Mr. Ambrose Pomeroy, J.P., who presided, bore strong testimony, from his experience as a magistrate, to the value of the work the Mission is doing. He prayed that God would bless Messrs. Hopkins and Meakin in their noble work.

Rev. H. T. Meakin, after referring with thankfulness to Mr. Hopkins's recovery, proceeded to speak of some of the discouragements of the work. When the Mission began in 1889 there were 519 members all told. They had lost since then 530 members by removals. If they had had no removals, they would have had an increased membership of 1694. But a good many of these 530 had gone to other churches, and this created a claim for help upon other churches. If the 1694 did represent all the inquirers they had ever had, that alone would show there had been a special presence of God among them. These represented an average of six converted every week. The backsliding of some of the converts was often heartbreaking; but God had given them great and abiding success. He could speak more freely if some people who were there that night were not present, as he could not tell their histories while they were in the meeting. They had class-leaders who had been brought to God in the services. On the ground of success he appealed for sympathy and help. The Town Hall, Locksfields, and Southwark Chapel, were all filled last Sunday. That meant 3000 people sitting under the ministration of the Gospel, where in 1889 there could not have been more than 300 or 400.

Rev. H. Price Hughes mentioned that at his conference in St. James's Hall last Sunday the audience had passed a unanimous resolution against the proposed unrestricted licensing of the Empire. If the chairman of the present meeting were to put a similar resolution, he felt sure that it would be carried. The Chairman asked all who were in favour of such a proposal to rise, and the whole congregation, as far as could be seen, responded, amid applause. Proceeding, Mr. Hughes said he had had during the past year his first opportunity of visiting Locksfields since the mission began there, and he must agree with Mr. Meakin's remark that all true success must be founded on spiritual success. While they were in sympathy with everyone who wished to improve the people's social condition, they recognised that beyond this there was needed the forgiveness of sins.

MR. AITKEN AT HAMPSTEAD.

The last mission taken by Rev. W. H. Aitken before leaving for Canada was at Christ Church, Hampstead. It extended from September 28 to October 14. Assisted by Rev. J. Stephens, Mrs. Crouch, and Miss Foot, the work was most signally blessed. On the three Sundays the congregations were very large, one of the most remarkable gatherings on each Sunday being the special assembly of men.

During the week there were special addresses to young ladies and also to servants. The work among the children and young people, carried on by Mr. Stephens, was very encouraging. It was, however, in the after-meetings towards the end of the visit that the ingathering of souls principally took place. Men and women, rich and poor, stayed in the church that they might be helped in their difficulties and brought in to know the Lord. Many a careless sinner went away rejoicing, and many a backslider was brought back into the way of peace.

The addresses on the spiritual life every morning (except Saturday) were acknowledged by the Christians to have been of the greatest help and comfort. Indeed, it seemed to many as if "Keswick" had come down to Hampstead, and the well-known "tent" had given place to the walls of the church.

The last night of thanksgiving was a time of great gladness and joyful praise from very many hearts. A time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord had been graciously vouchsafed, "and there was great joy in that city." G. F. Head.

A number of Mr. Aitken's friends convened a meeting at the Mildmay Conference Hall, on Tuesday evening last week, for the purpose of commending him and his helpers to God, in view of their mission to Canada and the States. A goodly company assembled, over which Lord Kinnaird presided. Words of brotherly interest and affection were spoken by the Chairman, Canon McCormick, and others, to which Rev. J. Stephens and Mr. Aitken responded. Much prayer was offered for God's blessing on the campaign across the Atlantic.

THE "WELCOME" MISSION, HARROW GREEN, E.—The committee are thankful to announce that the subscriptions received and promised towards the much needed hall now amount to £400. The new structure and the renovation of the old premises—a "converted" public-house, in a very dilapidated condition—will cost about £845, so that barely half of the necessary amount has as yet been raised. Contributions may be sent to our care, or forwarded to the superintendent. F. T. Watt.

INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY.—There seems to be no falling off in the blessed work of being "eyes to the blind," carried on by this long-established society, which, among other Christian gentlemen who take an interest in its management, has Lord Kinnaird as president, and Mr. T. A. Wallis as secretary (27, Red Lion-square, W.C.). In order to relieve the blind poor in every way possible, London is divided into eleven extensive districts, in each of which a visitor is appointed to call upon those blind poor who are on the books of the society, reading the Scriptures to them, giving them friendly advice in their difficulties, and reporting to the society those cases which are of a nature to be relieved from the Samaritan Fund of the society.

DR. PINDOR AND HIS WORK.

As I have had to come to Austria for a time, on account of my son's health, I have been trying to use the time in becoming more intimately acquainted with the different workers and their work. As both yourself and your readers have taken an interest in Rev. Dr. Pindor, of Teschen, a few lines about him may be of use.

Dr. Pindor occupies a most striking position in his country. He is living in the very centre of evangelical life. Teschen is the place where nearly all the young people of Silesia come to be educated. The future schoolmasters and schoolmistresses, as well as the doctors and pastors of the Reformed Church, are nearly all educated here, and spend here from six to twelve of the most important years of their lives. In addition to being able to influence these by his sermons, etc., he is doing much to form the future of the young throughout the province by his writings and translations.

He has been able, through the generosity of the Children's Special Service Mission, to send out 80,000 picture leaflets for the young into different parts of Polish Silesia. At present he is engaged in translating another series of twenty-four of these leaflets, and the same Society have promised to print 10,000 copies of each, and place them at his disposal for gratuitous distribution. With God's blessing this effort may influence nearly the whole country, for, as most of your readers know, the picture leaflets of the C.S.S.M. are welcomed by the old as well as by the young, and are often a means of blessing to the former as well as to the latter.

After he has finished translating the leaflets, Dr. Pindor is going to translate some of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, also for free distribution, Mrs. Spurgeon having undertaken to find the means through the readers of The Sword and Trowel, to defray the expense of printing. Maybe some of your readers are not in favour of such gratuitous distribution of tracts and sermons. If they could only know how great is the poverty of the inhabitants of these lands, and how eager is their desire after something to help them to clearer knowledge in spiritual things, if they could see, as I have seen, how they walk for hours and crowd by thousands to a Christian service, I feel sure that their objections would fall to the ground, and they would count it a joy and a privilege to help in this work.

Dr. Pindor does not confine himself to tracts and single sermons. He has translated Merle-D'Aubigné's "History of the Reformation," Baxter's "Saint's Rest," and other substantial works, the Religious Tract Society having defrayed part of the expense of printing. These books are widely spread and eagerly read, and are likely to live long after he who has sent them forth has passed away. I have written thus to let your readers know a little more about the man whom some of them received and helped so warmly on his visit to England a few years ago. May I also bespeak their prayers on behalf of the Doctor and his work?

Teschen, Silesia, Austria. J. D. Kilburn.

VIGILANCE AND RESCUE WORK continues to be effectively carried on in connection with St. Martin's, Charing Cross. Many details which would be interesting and instructive cannot, for obvious reasons, be openly or fully stated. The indirect influence which such labours exercise is, perhaps, greater than that which is actually known; and there are not wanting instances to show that if it were no more than a protest against the abounding social evil, the work cannot fail to be of great utility. The rescue and preventive work, including supervision and management of the shelter, is under the control of a ladies' committee, and has been the means of placing many girls in various homes. Mr. S. Bourne, Church Vestry, is one of the hon. secs.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—When this movement was inaugurated thirty-five years ago, by the godly and distinguished men who organised its earlier measures, it was regarded as a potent factor in the preservation of the public morals, as well as a practical means of rescue for the wretched victims of social sin unhappily found in such large numbers in our midst. The records of another year's varied efforts (confined neither to midnight nor to meetings), under the management of the secretary, Mr. C. Wilson McCree, 8, Red Lion-square, W.C., show earnest endeavour to faithfully carry out the original trust by striving to stem the tide of immorality which, if left without remedy, or at least check, threatens to overwhelm so many who are unwary, as well as those who are blameworthy, in a most disastrous downward course.

IRISH RAILWAY TALKS.—6.

By GEORGE WILLIAMS.

The huge Galtee Mountains were all aglow with the crimson rays of the setting sun as the 5.45 steamed away from the Limerick Junction for Dublin. Within me, however, shone a better light as I read the German Testament which lay open before me, and in that light my heart was drawn towards the man who shared the carriage with me. He was middle-aged, wore a full black beard, and had joined the train at the Junction.

Observing me looking at him, he pointed towards the engine, and said in a foreign accent "Dublin."

"Yes," I replied, and then added, "Do you speak English?"—"No."

Addressing him in German, I asked, "Do you speak German?"—"Oh, yes, yes," was the prompt reply. Encouraged by me, he then told me that he was from Russia; that he was obliged, through persecution, to leave that country; that his wife and five children were still there, waiting for him to send for them; and that he was prospering so well in Ireland that he would soon be able to fetch them.

Sympathy being the shortest way to the heart, I had him now very friendly; and so telling him I happened to be reading a German book when he entered the carriage, I held out the Testament to him, and invited him to read a little; he replied that though he could speak German, yet he could not read it.

"May I in that case read a little to you?" I asked. "With pleasure," he answered.

Feeling confident that he was a Jew, I at once opened at Romans ii., and commenced to read, "Behold thou art called a Jew and makest thy boast in the law," etc. As I read he became most attentive, and when I reached the Apostle's magnificent, "There is no difference—all have sinned—all are guilty before God," he at once admitted that there was no difference between us. That though he was a Jew and I a Gentile, yet were we both sinners, and therefore both deserving of condemnation.

But the enmity of the natural heart to the Lord Jesus was soon to manifest itself directly He was pointed to as the only Saviour.

Having made clear to him the condemnation in which we both stood, and our utter inability by works of righteousness to clear ourselves from that condemnation, I turned to Hebrews ix. and read that the only one and Divine way for the remission of sin and its judgment was by the shedding of blood. The penalty attached to sin being death, He who would be the sinner's substitute must die—that is, must shed his blood.

"Do you understand me?" "Perfectly."

Immediately I read to him from Hebrews x., that the Messias was the one and all-sufficient Saviour; and I read further from Romans iii., that God accounted and declared righteous the man who believed in Jesus. "Do you still follow me?" "Yes." Upon this I concluded by reading from Romans iv., how God justified Abraham apart from works, declaring him to be a righteous man because he believed God.

Two hours and more had now been spent with the sacred Scriptures, and so, closing the Book, I asked my friend, "What do you think of all this?"

"It is all abominable," was his swift and decided reply.

My heart sank within me, and sank the more because I had been so hopeful; but I remembered that all is darkness in the human soul until the Spirit of God shines into that darkness, and in that comfort I prayed silently that God would be pleased to speak to this dark soul, and say, "Let there be light!"

Resolving to do all I could for my companion, I presently said to him, "I am fond of singing—may I sing?"

"Certainly."

So I walked up and down the carriage for nearly an hour singing in German:

His blood can make the vilest clean,
His blood avails for me.

And the air being very "catchy," and the words simple, I hoped by this means so firmly to fasten the refrain to his ear that he would be unable to put it from him or to forget it. The busy platform of the Dublin terminus was now reached, and with a courteous bow, my fellow-traveller disappeared into the throng.

CONVERTS FROM ROME.

Last Sunday morning, while Señor Farrando, a Spanish priest of high caste, was being received into membership in one of our New York Presbyterian churches, a carriage arrived before the door of Christ's Mission. Its occupant, robed in the order of the Franciscans, sought refuge under the hospitable roof of Father O'Connor. It was no less a person than the distinguished Dr. Anacletus Vanoli, a graduate of the Roman Propaganda, and Missionary Apostolic of Constantinople. On the eve of my departure to England in June I was privileged to greet Father Ferrando on his arrival at Christ's Mission, and on my return was similarly honoured in bidding Father Vanoli welcome.

Thus God is honouring the faith and effort of the Mission founded and fathered by its director, Rev. James A. O'Connor. Both these men are young, cultured, and evidently sincere. Ferrando was educated in Alcoy University, Spain, after which he joined the Capuchin Order, and in the monastery studied for the priesthood. He was duly ordained, elected as Superior of a monastery, and sent on a mission to South America. After varied soul-experiences of struggle he reached New York, and became an inmate of Father O'Connor's Home for unhappy priests. He spent five months there and at Northfield, as a visitor to the Conferences.

He is now at Princeton Seminary in order to prepare himself for the purpose of his life—viz., to preach the faith he once laboured to destroy. Señor Ferrando is connected with wealthy and distinguished Spaniards. He was also a special pet of the Pope, of cardinals, and of bishops, and is possessed of many Vatican secrets. The story of his escape from those who sought his life in Curaçao is a chapter of thrilling incident.

Doctor Vanoli arrived at the Mission from Paris, having there seen a copy of Mr. O'Connor's magazine, The Converted Catholic, which gave him hope of deliverance. His first inquiry of Father O'Connor was, "I want peace for my soul." He is a master of many languages but does not know a word of English. Missionary O'Connor could, however, readily converse with him in French. Hunger of soul revealed itself on his anxious face. With honest unflinching eyes he sought to know the way of life. As we pointed out a few choice passages in a French Bible, such as John iii. 14-16, Acts iv. 12, etc., he read them in a sonorous voice full of emphasis and pathos. It was a touching scene. I have been near to this eager inquirer for three days and am fired anew with a passion for the conversion of such deceived men.

Vanoli is a beautiful refined character, and Father O'Connor has lovingly received him into his family. To me it was pathetic to hear the noble New York missionary, when I knew his treasury was depleted, welcome this wandering penniless Franciscan to eat with him such bread as the bountiful Father will surely provide. At present Vanoli is a prisoner in the Mission. His Oriental robes of office would attract attention on the street, until funds come in answer to prayer, and he be clothed in the garments of an Occidental civilian.

More than a score of priests, representing every nationality, have had Mr. and Mrs. O'Connor's patient, loving care. Many of these are now walking in the Light, while testifying of the grace that brought them to its healing beams.

Father Pollak, the French priest who preached catholicism for five years in China, and who was a beneficiary of Christ's Mission, has completed his medical studies. He is thinking of returning to the people of Confucius, so as to preach Christ in his old fields.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

The long-continued and exceptionally fine season for our 1895 open-air campaign having now come to a close, may we not believingly hope that, according to the diligent use of the beautiful weather we have enjoyed (only three wet Sundays), the incorruptible seed which has been scattered broadcast among many thousands of the population of our mighty city will produce a glorious harvest?

Early in the year the indefatigable secretary, Mr. Frank Cockrom, organised a plan whereby all London, more or less, has been belted by contingents of our forces, who have held open-air meetings on week evenings, and often far into the long summer nights, in almost every district of the metropolis. Thus the Gospel has been proclaimed at Camberwell, Balls Pond, Kilburn, Chelsea Common, Tottenham, King's Cross, Green Lanes, Hounslow, Stoke Newington, Blackheath, Plumstead, Westminster, Millwall, Holloway, Leytonstone, Hampstead Heath, Wandsworth, Clapton, Commercial-road, London Fields, Crouch End, Battersea, Cubitt Town, Hoxton, Willesden, etc., etc. There have been many special stations, notably such spots as Richmond Hill (where Rev. A. E. Foster is a most hearty sympathiser); the tombstone on the mount at St. Mathias Church, Poplar, where we are always kindly welcomed and assisted by Rev. Charles Neil), as also at Whitechapel Church by Rev. Mr. Linton Smith and other clergy. Then there were the Finsbury and other great park gatherings, to say nothing of Epsom Downs on the Derby Day, etc. The harvest truly is great. The measures are very simple, and the workers are weak, but the Great Captain has given the victory on many a field.

Would it not be well for all chapels and churches to have an outside pulpit on all their edifices, and why not in this great London have at some central spot an open-air Areopagus, where on every fine summer evening Londoners and strangers might stroll, as did the Athenians of old, anxious to hear some new thing?

The undenominational status of the Open-Air Mission affords a vantage ground in these days from which it must never be dislodged, and while we find Romanists holding open-air meetings at the same hour, and in the same streets we occupy, it must ever be our plan of attack to unfurl to the breeze as a standard of the Open-Air Mission, "For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all." It was a saying of Mr. Spurgeon, "The best way to shout the Pope down, is to shout Christ up."

The object of this notice is not so much to cite instances of conversion resulting from the work, as to bring the claims of the Mission for co-operation and help prominently before the Christian public. If we are undenominational we have enrolled amongst us members of all the Christian churches of the land. The work is often very difficult, and trying.

Who will help us to gather in
The golden sheaves from the fields of sin?

NAVVY MISSION SOCIETY.—The late James Wicks, a navvy whose Christian life and peaceful end had a remarkable influence amongst his fellow-workmen, made some remarks at a meeting in London, shortly before his death, bearing upon the usefulness of this Society, which has now been in existence seventeen years, and has its headquarters at the Church House, Westminster, S.W. Speaking of some twenty years ago, he said; "For some years on public works I never met with one Christian. I was at a settlement where there were 2000 men, not one of them a Christian; there was a private missionary effort, but I saw little of it. Then we began to hear of the Navvy Mission. I never go on any work now, but I meet with Christians. God has been with the Mission, which has been a fighting one. Let us put our shoulders to it and give it a push."

THE ADULT SCHOOL MOVEMENT.

During the past week there has been held the jubilee celebrations of the Adult School Movement in Birmingham. It is difficult to imagine a more beautiful and impressive sight than that of the great devotional meeting on Sunday week (the actual jubilee day), when the Town Hall was densely packed with thousands of past and present scholars; with their teachers they had come to join in thanksgiving and praise to God for the truth which, by his grace, these adult schools had brought into their lives. Of the silent influences among us which are ever helping towards the reign of righteousness, this movement must be reckoned one of the foremost, and, as one speaker last week remarked, it has probably done more during the past fifty years to preserve purity of civic life and good order, than any police force.

For the most part working silently, nourished by the hearts and lives of those who would be the last to blaze abroad their work, these jubilee meetings have yet revealed not only by the enthusiastic crowds who attended, but by their unanswerable statistics, the enormous hold this movement has gained on the working population as an educational and religious medium. What is its history? Fifty years ago Joseph Sturge, than whom no name is more honoured by Birmingham citizens for a large-hearted philanthropist, was struck with the deplorable scenes of ignorance and godlessness observable in some quarters of the city on Sundays. Life for the poor was then heavily handicapped. Mr. Sturge had already helped largely in the abolition of negro slavery in the British colonies, and he was at the very time engaged in the crusade against corn laws, navigation laws, and other oppressive enactments. But with all this he was mindful of a slavery and of wants close to his doors. It was under his care and that of some of the Birmingham Friends that Severn-street Adult School, the pioneer of the adult school movement throughout England, was started.

From a first attendance of 100, the numbers steadily grew, especially so when the original hour of eight in the evening was changed to half-past seven in the morning. Not only boys, but older men attended from all parts, and these latter were formed into an adult division. The reading and explanation of the Scriptures, and the writing out of verses from them formed the school lesson. Year after year saw fresh developments in the work; classes grew so large that many sub-divisions were necessary, and several branch schools sprang up. After a year or two the men's schools had proved such a blessing that some of the Birmingham women Friends started a school on similar lines for women at the Priory, and this has gone on developing alongside the historic Severn-street Men's School, though the numbers are considerably less than the latter's. The present number of men on the books is about 3500, while the women only count 1000.

Among other offshoots of the Severn-street school, there is now a savings fund of £14,000, lending libraries, a "Christian Society" for worship, with a membership of 1000, and the establishment of eight children's Sunday-schools, with 3000 members, whose teachers—and this is worthy of note—are drawn mainly from the ranks of the adult scholars.

Words fail us to describe the impressive scenes witnessed Sunday after Sunday in these adult schools. To join in the early breakfast for teachers at 7 a.m., followed by the quiet reading and few minutes' solemn hush; then to go to the school-rooms full of scholars of all ages and conditions, some of whom have filled important municipal positions, some from the poorest and hardest of homes; to see these in their hundreds gather round their teachers, taking part in the Bible readings, or writing out verses of Scripture, but all for the time lifted into a purer atmosphere—to witness this is an education in itself. And the secret of it all? Let me quote the reply given to my question by one of the working-men scholars not long since: "The lives of our teachers."

The jubilee meetings extended over the whole of last week. They began on the Saturday with an assembly in Bingley Hall. At this there was an exhibition of scholars' handiwork, industrial processes, and other interesting objects. A meeting was held during the afternoon under the presidency of the veteran teacher, the "father" of Birmingham Friends as he is called, Alderman White. Addresses were given by Mr. J. T. Dorland and Miss H. Cadbury. It is computed that altogether about 12,000 attended this reception. On Sunday the great thanksgiving meeting was held in the Town Hall. Alderman White again presided, and short addresses were given by Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, Bristol, Mr. F. Andrews, headmaster of Ackworth School, Miss Robinson, of Liverpool, Mr. W. Robson, and others. On the platform were well-known friends who had come from all parts of the country to help in keeping the jubilee.

From Monday to Saturday evening meetings of various kinds were held in different schools. Some of these were socials and to welcome old scholars; some were Gospel meetings; at one twenty-five scholars were the speakers, and at others burning problems of the day were discussed. Anti-gambling, temperance, relation of adult schools to social and political questions, social purity, etc., were the subjects, and these were dealt with by speakers such as William Noble, J. T. Dorland, Henry Stanley Newman, Joshua Rowntree, Dr. G. Newman, Walter Robson, etc.

Their addresses were listened to by crowded audiences of scholars, and with the utmost attention. Very straight was the speaking and very plain were the truths forced home. The reception of these and the quick recognition of their value must have greatly cheered the speakers. Throughout their words were marked by a spirit of intense earnestness, coupled with a homely touch of sympathy. They were men speaking to brother men, grateful for the past, hopeful for the future of the schools, and ever mindful in all their success of the beautiful thought of their jubilee hymn—

> And now we meet, not with vain boasting surely,
> To tell of work accomplished, victories won;
> Nay rather let us whisper to our Father
> Sorrow for all that we have left undone.

SOUTH LONDON BLIND.—For many years Mr. J. T. Edmonds, of 155, Brixton-road, S.W., has been the hon. sec. of a useful work carried on under the title of South London Association for Assisting the Blind. Classes are held where the blind members are taught to read the Scriptures in embossed type; portions of the Scriptures and other books in embossed type are lent for home reading; devotional meetings are held, as also are social meetings and recreation classes; members are visited and relieved where necessary; pensions are allowed in urgent cases; loans are granted free of interest; classes for teaching music, and for teaching the blind female members knitting and needlework are also held. Employment for the blind is also sought and provided where possible. Thus much is done to improve the social and religious condition of these sorely afflicted ones.

LIVERPOOL STRANGERS' REST.—Reports sent in by voluntary workers connected with the Rest, 24, Park-street, are very encouraging, and show much earnest Christian ingenuity in ways of spreading the Gospel of Christ among the "strangers" and foreigners who abound in Liverpool. This much needed work has been in progress for nineteen years. It is a matter of regret to the workers that the beloved founder, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, is now so seldom able to take any active part in the work he has so much at heart. On his last visit he was pleased to meet, among others, with a German sailor brought to Christ at one of the meetings, and about to sail to the coast of Africa, taking a number of tracts, also an English and German Testament—a glimpse of the ramifications of godly influence which obviously attend such a work as this. Mr. R. Heber Radcliffe is Hon. Superintendent.

REV. J. McNEILL IN NEWCASTLE.

Learning that Mr. McNeill had returned to this country from his preaching tour in the far East, a number of ministers and influential laymen in Newcastle resolved to invite him to come and conduct a mission in the city. The petition was numerously signed by representatives of all the churches, and was forwarded in due course. Mr. McNeill responded to it very heartily, and began the mission on Sunday, the 6th of this month, by preaching in Blackett-street Presbyterian Church in the morning, and in the Olympia in the afternoon and evening. Extensive preparations had been made for his visit. From the first it was apparent that so far as an attendance at the meetings was concerned the mission was sure to be a success. Vast crowds assembled in the Olympia, which is the largest available hall in the city, at the opening meetings, and as the mission has progressed both the attendance and the interest have gone on increasing.

In addition to the evening meetings it was arranged by the committee that has control of the mission to have special services for business men at midday. For this purpose, the Town Hall, which is situated near the centre of the city, was secured, and intimation was made that on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Mr. McNeill would preach to business men from 12.45 to 1.30 p.m. The experiment has proved very successful. To these services business men have flocked in large numbers. The floor of the hall is reserved for them, and the side elevations for ladies and visitors from the country. Day by day the interest has been deepened and extended. The curious and critical spirit with which some came at first has gradually died away, and has given place to a spirit of earnestness and great sobriety; and no one can look on the faces of the audience without being convinced that the truth of God is leaving its impress on many minds and hearts.

The Olympia, which accommodates about 4000 people, has been crammed almost every night with people of all classes. Many ministers of the Gospel have been present, both on the platform and among the audience, and usually the devotional part of the service has been taken by some of them. A large choir, drawn from various congregations in the city, has conducted the musical part of the services with great efficiency.

One striking feature of the meetings has been the number of men who have been present. On Sunday night last the evening meeting was wholly given up to them, the afternoon meeting being for women only, and it was very impressive to see that large building packed with men eagerly listening to every word that fell from the preacher's lips.

Mr. McNeill speaks with all his old fire and force. His addresses are full of rich Bible truth. His language is fresh, and quaint, and vigorous, and his style racey and clear. His appeals to the conscience are often quite overpowering and his exposure of the deceits of the unregenerate heart are most withering and scorching. As regards spiritual and permanent results, perhaps it would be premature to speak just yet, but many have testified to the benefits they have received, and the hushed stillness of the meetings testifies, we believe, to the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

The midday meetings for business men will be continued this week, but as the Olympia cannot be obtained in the evenings Mr. McNeill has decided to give his evenings to Jarrow and South Shields. He will probably return to Newcastle for another week, but, on November 3 he commences a mission in Sunderland, and towards the end of next month he is to be in Swansea. We would affectionately commend God's servant to the prayers of his fellow Christians. He has been called to a great work, and God has richly endowed with evangelistic gifts, but all true blessing comes through the channel of prayer. We hope that, remembering this, Christians of all denominations will pray that Mr. McNeill may not only get the ear of the public, but that in God's hand he will be the instrument of saving good to vast multitudes.

NESTORIANS OF PERSIA.

On behalf of the committee recently formed to assist the Nestorian Mission, connected with the orphanage of Deacon Abraham and his wife Esther, in Oroomiah, Persia, I would bring before your readers a few facts connected with the history of this interesting people. The name Nestorian was given to them by their enemies as a term of reproach. They speak of themselves as Beni Israel. The Jews residing amongst them acknowledge them as the descendants of the Ten Tribes, converted (the Jews say apostatized) to Christ, as a nation, in the time of Christ and his Apostles. Their history and descent is unbroken, from that time to this. The way they have been preserved in their mountain fastnesses, in the presence of and surrounded by their enemies, and kept a separate people, is one of the most marvellous and romantic chapters of history. Though their spiritual light has become dim, their bitter hostility to Rome and her idolatries will not permit a single Cattoleck to set foot in their independent territories.

Our committee have before them at the present time a most intelligent and well educated young Nestorian, whom they are anxious to send out duly equipped to evangelise among his own people—the mountain tribes of Adiabene—if friends will supply the means. David Mar Yousip is the son of a Nestorian bishop, who coming under the teaching and preaching of the American Presbyterian missionaries in Oroomiah, gave up his prelacy, and became one of their staff of preachers.

Simon and Lazaar, two orphans, brought up by Deacon Abraham, and who afterwards passed through the American College, have also been in England over five years learning the most useful mechanical trades, and are now ready to return to Oroomiah to start workshops in which orphans can be trained, and afterwards fitted for the work as missionaries and colporteurs amongst the Nestorians in Persia, the Medes, and the independent tribes of Kurdistan. Simon and Lazaar are consecrated Christians, and deeply taught in true spiritual knowledge. David Mar Yousip is well known to them, and was a fellow-student with them in the American college. They speak five languages. They are now ready and eager to return to commence their life work. No one who has come in contact with them can help believing that a future of great usefulness lies before them.

The committee require £500 to carry these schemes into practical effect, the hon. sec. and treasurer being Mr. Henry Tasker, Brookside, Andover.

Simon and Lazaar would be glad to receive invitations to speak, in native costumes, on the history and present position of their people.

PORTSMOUTH RESCUE SOCIETY.—The good work continues in this the Home of this society, a conspicuous object in the very centre of the town, inviting the penitent fallen to take advantage of its shelter. Active and earnest labourers devote much energy and time to this important effort, both inside the Home and on the public thoroughfares, at houses in back streets, and at the midnight meetings. It is often found that seeds of God's Word sown in early day, lie under the clods of sin and recklessness; and grace is sought to plant new and living Gospel shoots in these poor souls, with all the care and tenderness needed for such a work. Miss Colebrook superintends the Mission, which is located in Hyde Park-road, Portsmouth.

WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION.—Under the presidency of Archdeacon Taylor, a meeting in connection with this Union was held in Liverpool last week. The Archdeacon was supported by the Revs. Canon Woodward, Dr. Wright, W. L. Gedge, Samuel Schor, and others. Following an address by the Chairman, Mrs. Arbuthnot gave some interesting details regarding the nature and work of the Women's Protestant Union, and emphasised the necessity of all Protestant women joining its ranks. She then dwelt upon the sad inroads which the "Italian Mission" was making in the Established Church, and stated that its influence was used mainly in gaining a hold over the young. She entreated parents to recognise the importance of the work which was being carried on in their midst.

DUBLIN MISSION SCHOOL.

We have at present in the Day Schools 600 children; we give them a breakfast each day, which costs 1d. We want these pennies to be sent by friends, who have loving hearts and open hands. Many of these day scholars are little missionaries in their wretchedly poor homes.

Then there are the Homes: The Birds' Nest is the largest, with its 200 nestlings. These children are fed, and clothed, and taught. We need £8 a year for each. The Girls' Home, where older girls of good character are admitted, and taught to be servants. The Elliott Home for little boys; and The Helping Hand Home for older lads (which has met such a crying need in Dublin), the "Nest by the Sea," in Galway, sheltering about 700 children in all. These all need money.

The funds of each Home are at a low ebb; this we feel to be a call to prayer and a trial of faith; we know our Father will not let any of his little ones perish. Just at this time of need a thought has come, linking this need with the suffering and glory of the martyrs of Ku Cheng. Lena, Mrs. Stewart's faithful Irish nurse, who met her death in seeking to save the baby, was in her childhood an inmate of the Elliott Home for Little Ones, in Dublin. There she learnt to love her Saviour and his wandering sheep in China. From the time she was eight years old she longed to be a missionary. She never shared the foolish pride which despises the place of service. Such professed followers of Christ cannot have much of his mind, for He "took upon Him the form of a servant."

Much might be said of Lena's life in China, and all her helpful loving ways. She had it very much on her heart that servants should take an interest in, and help these Homes. She saved all she could from her wages, and gave liberally to the "Elliott Home" funds.

When in the home country accompanying Mrs. Stewart and the children to England, she wrote and spoke to her friends on this subject. Now she has gone home, and won indeed the martyr's crown. She cannot plead with her human voice for her own loved "Elliott Home" and the others, almost equally loved and certainly equally valued. Is it not a profitable way of disposing of £8 a year, to give it for the education and training of such girls? The Master spoke of requiring his own with usury. Whoever paid for Lena has indeed got good profit for the pounds thus traded with.

We think we ought to have "a Lena Memorial Fund." Any friends sending gifts will please specify the Home they wish to help, as the funds are kept separately. The honorary superintendent is Miss Ellen Smyly, 35, Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

A UNITED TEACHERS' CONFERENCE.

Rev. F. J. Horsfield, of St. Silas, Bristol, has set a good example by inviting all the Sunday-school teachers in his parish—of all denominations—to meet over a cup of tea, to discuss matters of Sunday-school interest. The response was cheering; and amongst those who took part besides the vicar were Methodists and others.

A further gathering of a no less interesting character took place on Sunday afternoon last, when about 500 adults, the members of the men's and women's Bible classes from all the various places of worship in the parish, assembled at the Marsh Bridge, and marched in a body to the church, headed by the vicar, and the leaders of the classes. Here a special service was held, in which each of the leaders took part, either by reading a portion of Scripture, or engaging in prayer, and the vicar gave an address from the words, "When thou awakest it shall talk with thee" (Prov. vi. 22). It was for all a time of richest blessing.

BIRMINGHAM.—A meeting was recently held at the Baptist Church, Stratford-road, Sparkbrook, to promote Christian union and earnest co-operation in evangelising the neighbourhood. There were present ministers representing the Congregational, Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and Bible Christian Churches. The Evangelical council has divided Birmingham and district into eighteen districts, and in each district there are five or six churches of different denominations. This was the first district meeting, and others will follow in every district. The council proposes, early in 1896, to hold a week of special prayer to be followed in February by a mission in each of the eighteen districts.

WORK IN LAMBETH.

The meeting of friends which took place on the evening of Oct. 16, when Pastor W. Williams, of Upton Chapel, was presented with a cheque for nearly £200, showed that he enjoys the sympathy and co-operation of a large number of friends in the district. Especially has this been the case during the season of domestic affliction through which he and his wife have lately passed. Mr. Williams, in acknowledging the gift, made only a slight reference to his trials.

While enjoying peace and prosperity for the eighteen years of Mr. Williams' service, the people have given much attention to aggressive Christian work. Within a comparatively short period a sum of over £1200 has been expended in mission work, in addition to the expenditure of private persons. During the coming winter a trained nurse will be employed to visit the sick and the poor: and this same friend will gather children around her in one of the mission halls to speak to them about the love of God and the evil of sin. Bands of faithful men and women will visit weekly whole neighbourhoods from door to door and from room to room with the Gospel message. These same friends have their Sunday and week night meetings for children and also for adults. A number of ladies meet poor mothers every Monday, and a benevolent society confers blessing on a number of needy people. Girls in the congregation have founded a Help-one-another Society, and make garments for poor children. The chapel is said to be surrounded by a surging sea of poverty, and efforts are made to cope with the sin and misery this entails. Many have come out of the mission schools to become communicants.

PASTOR C. D. CROUCH, WORTHING.

Pastor C. Douglas Crouch, who for twelve years has been pastor of the Baptist church at Worthing, has resigned his office in order to undertake Gospel work in the town on undenominational lines. At a recent gathering of the church and congregation which he is leaving, Mr. Crouch made a statement on his intentions and prospects. He said: "Five years ago I felt I had sufficient reasons for severing my connection with the Baptist Union, and since that time I have become less and less denominational."

With regard to Worthing, Mr. Crouch said:—"Our population numbers nearly 20,000, and of these the Evangelicals are not drawing more than 5000, and the Nonconformists only 1500. There is abundant room for the work to which I am about to devote my energies. My work will be simply to preach Christ's Gospel and teach the great truths of his Word as they are opened up to me. I shall baptize believers as they come forward confessing faith in the Lord Jesus; observe the Lord's Supper every Lord's Day; and teach God's people to wait for his Son from heaven."

Mr. Crouch has arranged to acquire, for the low sum of £1400, a building situate in the main thoroughfare, hitherto known as the Free Church. It can be made capable of seating 600 persons, and will in future be known as the Worthing Tabernacle. Payment is to be completed by the end of the year. The treasurer of the undertaking is Mr. Thomas Mason, Mizpah, Christchurch-road, Worthing.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.—The establishments at Farningham and Swanley have been rendered more complete by the opening on Saturday of the new "Passmore Edwards House" at the latter place. It is the gift of the generous donor whose name it bears, and has been erected at a total cost of £1200. Thirty boys will find a home therein, bringing up the complement at Swanley to two hundred. The new building is intended to receive little boys who were boarded out for want of room in the existing buildings. The committee of management could not, with a debt of £3000 still hanging over the institution, venture on providing for more boys until further external aid is given. At the opening ceremony, Mr. C. R. Ford, chairman of the committee, tendered thanks to Mr. Passmore Edwards, and was followed in brief speeches by Mr. Paine, Mayor of Gravesend, and Alderman Belse ex-Mayor of Rochester. In a few friendly words to the boys, Mr. Passmore Edwards advised them never to be greedy, but always to think of others rather than themselves.

"CEYLON'S GREAT NEED."

Seven years ago, on September 14, 1888, you kindly inserted in your valuable paper an appeal, entitled "Ceylon's Great Need," pleading for women workers in that island on behalf of Christ. In those days, though wives of missionaries were labouring earnestly, there were no single ladies set apart by Church of England societies for work among our heathen sisters in that land. Now we have to thank God for fourteen, who, in connection with both C.M.S. and C.E.Z., are seeking to win the women and girls. The number is now being increased, and within the next few months there will be, God willing, nineteen such labourers in the field.

Very heartily and humbly we bless and praise Him who has so marvellously worked for the glory of his own name; and while we thank Him for what He has done, we would take courage and expect even greater things in the future. The immediate result of our appeal was the opening of the Clarence Memorial School in Kandy, the mountain capital, in June, 1890, under the Church of England Zenana Society. Its object was to bring under Christian influence and instruction the daughters of the Buddhist chiefs of the Kandian country.

Many obstacles stood in the way of the undertaking. Many anticipated failure, as they did not think the proud and exclusive chiefs would entrust their daughters to European care. Few entered with enthusiasm into the new effort; but results have now quelled all doubts. There are at the present time twenty dear children in the school, under the care of ladies who esteem it an untold privilege to be permitted to train them and educate them in Christian truth. Prudence suggests caution in speaking of results; but I may say that the seed seems to be falling into good ground, and that there is abundant reason to be not only hopeful but thankful.

I cannot recall any scene more inspiriting than the examination of these children in Scripture. Few English children of the same age could have competed with them in the faultless repetition of long portions of the Word of God, in their own language and then in English. One sweet little maiden of six repeated, without mistake, Psalms xxiii. and cxxi. Since the school commenced two dear girls have died. There is the confident trust that both are at rest in the arms of the Good Shepherd. The last words uttered by one of them as she crossed the river were—"Oh, how beautiful! God loves me very much. Jesus, O Jesus."

The school has hitherto been carried on in rented premises. A house belonging to a wealthy native gentleman was taken when the work began, and has admirably answered our purposes. But circumstances now render it imperative that the house and land should be purchased. Considerable enlargement of the buildings is necessary, and the Zenana Society could only undertake the requisite expenditure if the ownership of the property were secured to it. It is very probable that if not now secured, the place may very soon pass into other hands, and then great difficulty may ensue. A large increase of rent is already spoken of, which, if enforced, would compel a removal of the school, with probably disastrous results. This must not, we feel, be thought of; and we therefore turn to God's people to ask them to take a share in this blessed work by providing the funds necessary for the purchase of the property. The owner asks a sum which, at the present rate of exchange, will amount to about £800. For this, a good house and other buildings, and several acres of land can be secured. It would be very difficult to find any other place so suitable for its purpose. The terraced walks around it, shaded with trees, not only give shelter to the children at their play, but also afford the privacy which for such a school is indispensable.

The need is urgent, and the time is short, for if the present opportunity were to slip another might not occur. With all my heart I plead with your readers to become fellow-helpers in this effort to win these bright Kandian girls for the Lord, by supplying the means to enable the Zenana Society to secure the property, and so ensure the permanence of the school.

Very gladly will I answer personal communications, and send letters from the school children and others, giving items of encouragement and interest.—Yours sincerely,

Frances M. Ireland Jones.

CHOLERA IN TANGIER.

We hear, with much regret, that Asiatic cholera has broken out in this part of North Africa. In a recent letter to Rev. J. Wilkinson, of Mildmay, Miss Seth-Smith says:—

"The visitation broke out among the Moors, but it has spread to the Jews and Spaniards. At first they died at the rate of fifteen a day; now it is twenty on an average; while at Tetuan, about a day's journey from here, report says they are dying at the rate of 100 a day, and that soldiers are employed day and night to bury them. All day long I am out nursing and doctoring cholera patients. It is sad and depressing work; if one had not so much to do, but could sit down and think over it all, it would make one feel broken hearted. Some cases recover, I am thankful to say, with careful nursing and looking after. Many families are starving, having, in some cases, lost the father and breadwinner, while others can get no work owing to the hotels being closed and many of the shops.

"The awful part of cholera is, being carried off so quickly. Sometimes patients die in twelve hours from the time they are seized. I sat up two nights with one little boy; it was hard work, as I was looking after cases all day as well; but I have been proving all through these weeks that 'his grace is sufficient.' Sometimes, when feeling so tired out that I could only long to go to bed, another call has come, and new strength has been granted for the new task. All meetings and medical missions are closed for the present, so that house-to-house visitation is all that we can do. Many of the better class Jews have fled from Tangier, willing to undergo twenty-one days of quarantine at Gibraltar rather than stay here. Now Gibraltar is closed altogether, and nobody from here is allowed to land there under any consideration."

WILHELMSRO, SWEDEN.

In a recent communication Madame de Ramsay says:—

"Last year has been full of happy work and many blessings. The second home, "The Refuge," begun in 1894, has already twelve inmates of the most pitiable children in creation, the deaf and dumb idiots with epilepsy, and sometimes added to this blind and paralysed. There is no question of anything but nursing, they seldom come to knowing their kind nurses. The oldest home, "The Hope," is progressing too; over twenty teachable epileptics whose performances would astonish many clever, able children. This summer we have had several English visitors from Professor Kellgren's Sanatorium at Sawnaby Jönköping. We have enjoyed the privilege at that place of Bible readings, and services by an English Church minister at home from China for weak health.

SOUTH AMERICA.

At the last meeting of the council of the South American Evangelical Mission, Toronto, it was decided to send Dr. Bremner to the South at the beginning of the New Year. He will be accompanied by one or more young men, as the Lord may open up the way. It is the intention of the council that Dr. Bremner shall establish a home in Buenos Ayres or Monte Video for the reception of missionary candidates, where the language may be learned, and from which, as they are found ready, they will be sent out to different stations in the Republics of Uruguay, Paraguay, Argentine, and Bolivia, or other parts of South America.

At the same meeting applications from several most promising men and women were considered. As the Lord opens the way it is proposed to send all that are suitable to the field. This is a time of opportunity for the South, the "fields are white unto the harvest," and labourers are praying to be sent there.

THE CHILDREN'S MISSION, CAMBERWELL, lately said "Good-bye" to our fellow labourer, George Humphries, whom the Lord has "thrust forth" into the harvest field of South India; and now one of our lady workers, Miss Lottie L. Southgate, has entered upon a course of study and training at Dr. Grattan Guinness's College for Foreign Service. Miss Southgate's labour of love among the poor children of this locality has been much blessed and owned of God. Alfred H. Rok, Hon. Sec.

JOTTINGS FROM AMOY.

The works of the Lord which are great are being sought out in the midst of recent troubles in China, and movements are afoot which may greatly aid in the furtherance of the Gospel.

Mr. R. M. Hobson, related to Morrison, the first Protestant missionary to China, writes most earnestly about the feeling in Shanghai. He says, "Public opinion is much stirred, and hard things formerly said about missionaries are publicly repudiated. As usual the devil is over-reaching himself." He feels sure that definite results will come out of the trouble.

There is a movement in one quarter which has come out of sanctified common sense and great devotion to the good of this country. It aims at getting the two English-speaking countries especially to the front in Pekin, and securing such action as may most peacefully and effectively secure safety for the messengers of Christ. It may be too soon to say how far this movement will succeed. It is deserving all sympathy and earnest prayer, and if carried through will earn for those who work in it the best thanks of all concerned. The late W. C. Burns, so well-known in China, once went to Pekin to negotiate for Christian liberty. Perhaps other brethren may now do the same.

To further call out the prayers of God's people, it may be well to say that those who have a right to speak maintain that nothing done at Pekin will be enough, for the viceroys are local kings who can act and would be upheld by their peoples against the Emperor. It is, indeed, affirmed that they would even value any stern action of the Emperor as a chance of rising against him; therefore, the only possible plan is for Westerners to overawe these bad rulers, by e.g., proving all along the Yang-tse Valley that the bloodthirsty proceedings must and shall be stopped.

AUSTRALIAN MEMS.

The bicycle is becoming a great aid to mission work in our Island Continent. Rev. John McNeil, missioner, recently traversed the gold fields of Western Australia on his machine, doing good work for the Master. It must have been hot and heavy work driving through some of the tracts of sandy country which are so frequently to be met with over there; but he evidently gained the ears, and in some cases the hearts of the seekers after gold, getting them to become seekers after God too. This cheered his heart, and helped him to get through the tough bits.

In some country districts much could be done in this way. In one place I know of in New South Wales four young men ride out on their bicycles some miles to a small settlement, where they carry on a Sunday-school service. One plays the harmonium, which is a great help to the young folks who attend.

The anniversary gatherings of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, recently held in Sydney, were crowded and enthusiastic.

CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION SOCIETY.—A drawing-room meeting was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler, Lordship Park, Stoke Newington, on Wednesday last, Rev. T. Dixon Rutherford presiding. Several of the deaconesses of the society gave most interesting reports of their work among the poor in different parts of London. Addresses were given in commendation of the work, and urging its claims upon those who are in a position to help in good work, by Rev. George Scudamore, Rev. T. C. Udall and others.

LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.—This Society has during the past year, the sixty-ninth of its existence, been quietly working in its unostentatious way for the alleviation of distress among the very aged Christians of this great metropolis. The monthly grants dispensed with unerring regularity by the almoners who have personally visited the old people in their homes, have afforded valuable relief and sustenance to the poor old recipients, the almoners themselves being greatly strengthened by the faith of these old servants of the dear Lord, that He will supply all their need. The Society has 171 pensioners, the average age being seventy-seven years, the eldest being ninety-three years, the youngest sixty-six years. Col. Hamilton Northcote is secretary, and the offices of the Society are at 32, Sackville-street, W.

N. LONDON EVANGELICAL PREACHERS.

"The Discovery and Education of Lay Preachers" was the theme chosen by Rev. Charles Brown, the president for the ensuing six months, for his address to the Preachers' Association of North London at the first meeting of the new session at New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

The men who should not preach were first described—the men who preach from personal vanity and pride, with the object of leaving obscurity for notoriety, or with the idea that preaching is a way to obtain glory. God-sent men are those that are wanted, and for these there is plenty of room—men who have something of Paul's feeling when he exclaimed, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." After such men are discovered, proceeded Mr. Brown, they should be taught to speak with acceptance.

The art of speaking lies in having something to say, and this something must be placed before the people so that they shall listen and understand. To present truth in a dignified way to men should be the earnest aim; dignity did not mean, however, the dignity of collars, ties, and black coats, but the style in speaking which comes of being possessed and mastered by the subject. To lose self-consciousness is hard, but it becomes easy when the glory of Jesus Christ is the end of the sermon. After touching upon various other essentials of the truly effective preacher, and giving many helpful words of counsel and warning, Mr. Brown closed with an exhortation to true earnestness and singleness of purpose.

Mr. J. E. Kirby had previously spoken on "Unction, Naturalness, and Thoughtfulness in the Preacher," and his words came as a fitting prelude to the president's charge to preachers. The reports of the secretaries, Mr. J. Sharpe, of the Fraternal Union, Mr. E. W. Adeney, of the Preaching Supply branch, and Mr. H. Worrall, of the general work, were well received and spoke well for the future.

Last Friday, Professor W. H. Golding began a series of lectures on Literature, and it is hoped that young men engaged in local preaching will avail themselves of the educational and spiritual advantages to be derived from membership in the Association during the coming session.

NORTH LONDON C.E. UNION.

The first annual meeting of this Union was recently held at Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel, the president, Rev. A. Rowland, of Park Chapel, Crouch End, being in the chair. An interesting missionary address was given by Rev. W. Hill, late of Orissa. The secretary's report showed that the first year's work has been successful. The object is to stimulate interest in the Endeavour movement in North London; to bring the societies into closer relation with each other by conferences and correspondence; and to help other churches and missions to form C.E. societies. At he inaugural meeting fifteen societies were enrolled, and there are now twenty-four. The Union started with 741 members; it now has a total of 1231'

The report of the first year of the Union shows that much good work is being done by the young people in churches of various denominations for Chirst and the Church. As pointed out by more than one speaker, this interdenominationalism is doing much, and doubtless will do more, to bring about the desire of many Christians and Christ's prayer, "That they all may be one." Rev. G. Hay Morgan, of Woodberry Down, was elected president of the Union for the ensuing year. After delivering his address, he closed the meeting by conducting a consecration service, at which the members of the various societies answered the roll-call by reciting passages of Scripture or singing a verse of a hymn; while one delegate from a newly-formed society gave his testimony of Christian Endeavour. This solemn and inspiring part of the meeting closed by all unitedly repeating the Mizpah benediction, "The Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from the other."

INSTRUCTING THE DEAF AND DUMB.—The Association for the Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb has a school at 11, Fitzroy-square, London, W., devoted to the education of afflicted children, and the training of their teachers, of which Mr. St. Leger Bunnett is secretary. There are twenty-five boys and nineteen girls in the school, making satisfactory progress, and besides these two males and four female students attending the training college, one of the former coming from Calcutta, and qualifying to become principal of the school there. The public lessons at three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon are very interesting, and it is hoped that friends repeating their visits will bring other persons with them, so as to augment general appreciation of the association's work.

THE WORK OF SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

Sunday last was the day set apart for universal prayer for Sunday-schools, and the day was very generally observed among all the churches, and made an opportunity of holding special meetings at the beginning and close of the day and in the afternoon, to invoke the Divine blessing upon the work of Sunday-school teachers and other Christian workers among the young. In many churches, too, special sermons were preached suitable to the subject upon which the hearts of all Christian people throughout the world would largely have been centred.

Preaching at the Metropolitan Tabernacle in the morning, on Luke ii. 49, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, taking Christ as the perpetual example for all Christian workers, said that Jesus was no loiterer in the vineyard, but took joy and delight in doing his Father's will early and late. He had no office hours. He looked upon his work as real business for God the Father, and Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers generally should take example by Jesus and ever be about the Father's business.

Yes, we must look upon Christian work as real business—God's business, and God forbid that we should think lightly on Sunday-school teaching or Christian work of any kind. We should put forth our very hardest efforts, and give to God our very best work. Christian work is a serious and responsible thing, and it would be well to have a card on the door of every worker's meeting place, bearing the words, "No admittance except on business," and all who meant business should be welcomed, but those who came for other purposes should not be allowed to remain, for their room would be better than their company. It would be well for Christian workers to do a little stocktaking regularly, and see where they stood—whether they were advancing with God's work or going back.

Mr. Spurgeon spoke of the great good done by Sunday-schools, and pointed out that the seed sown there has oftentimes had the effect of turning even old and hardened sinners to Christ through the words of a simple little child. In closing, the preacher made an earnest and eloquent appeal to his hearers to give God's business the springtime of life, and urged them to fit themselves for Christian work while young, and to engage in it with earnestness, never forgetting that it is God's business.

A NEGRO ORPHANAGE.

Rev. D. J. Jenkins, who recently visited England, is the founder of the Jenkins School and Orphanage Institute, 20, Franklin-street, Charlestown, S.C., and pastor of the Pametto-street Church. He commenced his orphanage work some years ago, by taking four destitute little boys to educate and provide for. In 1892, one hundred and thirteen boys were cared for.

The need of the Orphanage, and the good it is doing, so impressed Mr. Joseph Wild, of New York, that he donated one hundred acres of land some miles distant from the institution. This farm is known as the Greenwood Orphan Industrial Farm for the training of boys in agricultural and industrial pursuits. Funds are urgently needed to erect a building where boys and teachers can live, also to carry on the work of supporting, clothing, etc., of 536 children and nine teachers, the number at present depending upon Mr. Jenkins's effort.

Most of the coloured people of the south are too poor to pay any tax, and therefore the municipal authorities do not provide orphanages. The poverty of the negro has the effect of disfranchising him, therefore the only hope lies in the kindness of Christians to help him to elevate himself. From social and religious standpoints, Mr. Jenkins's work is worthy of support.

PASTOR ROHRBACH'S WORK AT BERLIN.

Pastor Julius Rohrbach continues his work in Moabit, Charlottenburg, and Potsdam, with much encouragement but under a heavy burden of anxiety. He writes from 28, Krumme-strasse, Charlottenburg: "The people do what they can to sustain the work, but they are poor, and we have considerable arrears of rent and rates on our halls. The masses around us live in utter indifference; the Prussian State Church assumes more and more a military Imperial character, and soul-saving work is left out.

"We are thankful that some earnest men, like Count Bernstorff, stand out boldly witnessing for Christ and his finished work. The work at Fräulein von Blücher's continues to flourish. May I commend the Lord's work in our hands, which we have been privileged to carry on for fifteen years, to the prayerful sympathy and help of Christian friends in Great Britain?"

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Our Boys and Girls. (1s. Wesleyan S.S. Union.) Our own young folks report this annual volume as "beautiful;" its bright pictures and brief stories seem alike to please and amuse.

The Zenana. Vol. II. (2s. Partridge.) The Zenana Bible and Medical Mission must be congratulated on its bright and readable monthly organ, which is always up to the mark, well illustrated, and never prosy. The annual volume forms an admirable guide to women's work in a large area of India.

Sunshine, volume for 1895. (G. Stoneman.) This illustrated monthly is specially interesting to the girls who will find in story, woodcut, and paragraph much to please and inform. The same publisher sends Simple Stories for Girls and Boys, a little story-book bound in old-fashioned style.

The Sunday at Home Annual contains two serial stories and several short ones; sketches of Sunday in East London; valuable papers on travel in Bashan and Argob; and Scripture studies, sermons, and meditations. Well-known writers contribute to this fully-illustrated monthly, and the annual volume is a veritable library of good reading. Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan writes "Musings in Bible Lands." (7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

The Leisure Hour Annual. (7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The contents are varied and useful, young and old being amply provided for in its pages. There are excellent biographical sketches, with portraits; papers on travel in Argentina, Japan, India, and Africa; studies in science and natural history; and of course serial and short stories. Domestic interests are admirably discussed in a series of articles entitled: "A Committee of the Whole House," by Phyllis Browne.

The Days of Elisha. By H. K. Wood. (1s. Stoneman.) The author is widely known as a helpful expositor of Scripture in a plain and practical fashion bearing on every-day life. Many, therefore, will turn with expectancy to this, his latest issue, nor will they be disappointed, for the lessons it gleans from the prophet's life are at once useful and thoughtful.

The Master's Messages to Women. By Charlotte Skinner. (1s. Partridge & Co.) Womanly and helpful talks on matters concerning daily life. Says the author, and the sentences give the key to the book:—"As the light in an artist's studio, as a guide on mountain heights, as fingers to an instrument, as mother's smile to suffering child, so are the Master's messages to a true woman's life."

S. W. Partridge & Co. send Aileen (by Laura A. Barber. 1s. 6d.) and Sisters in Love (by Jessie M. E. Saxby. 1s. 6d.), well-written stories for our daughters, or for gift-books for girls. The boys are admirably catered for in Duff Darlington (1s. 6d.) and Ted's Trust (1s. 6d.), the first the story of an unsuspected genius, and the second that of an umbrella and a brave boy, wrongfully accused but finally cleared.

Missionary Heroines in Eastern Lands. By Mrs. E. R. Pitman. (1s. 6d. Partridge.) What Mrs. A. M. Ruthquist and Dr. Mary McGeorge did in India in earlier and more trying days, Mrs. Bowen Thompson in Syria, and Miss Whately in Egypt, is here told in simple pleasing style, which should be the means of firing many ardent young spirits with an intense desire to give themselves for similar service among the heathen.

Need and Fulness. By Rev. H. C. G. Moule. (1s. Marshall Bros.) The author's name is sufficient guarantee that this book for the quiet hour is helpful in daily life, stimulative of holy longings, fragrant with the sweetness of Christ and faithful in its presentation of his grace and fulness. Its main theme may be summarised as A New Testament Christian, and how to become one; and it is well fitted to direct the thoughts of inquirers after closer fellowship with God.

The Saint's Rest and Rapture. By Frank H. White. (1d. Partridge.) The third edition of a thoughtful booklet dealing with a point greatly exercising at present the minds of many—Will the Church pass through the great tribulation or not?

The Churchman's "Acrostic" Bible-Searching Almanack for 1896, with Table of Lessons. By B. J. M. M. It is specially suitable for Sunday-schools and Bible classes, being designed to encourage attention. Any profits on the sale will be devoted to the C.M.S. Ku-cheng Memorial Fund. MONEY FOR MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—May I suggest that one half of the money usually expended on organs and music, be, during the next year, expended on foreign missions? Those of us who care most for music are most alive to the snares in connection with church music. —Yours faithfully, J. G. Robertson.

A VETERAN ON REVIVAL.

Dear Sir,—Such meetings as those of last week, show that God is with us of a truth, and his Spirit is working mightily. The present condition of the East End of London and many other parts of England, would fully justify the belief that God is quite ready to uphold any of his servants, who will go forth in faith, launching out into the deep; and this present time might, without any affectation or exaggeration, be truly called the Revival of 1895, though of a different character to that of 1859-60.

The Evangelisation Societies, the Parochial Missions, Foreign Missionary Societies, and others which might quite as reasonably be mentioned, are all that are needed in the way of organisations, if we will but hoist our sails and trust for God's Spirit to fill them.

The intercommunion which Evangelical Christians of all denominations in England and in America delight to manifest in public meetings, is more edifying than all this which we hear about the "Reunion of the Churches."—Yours very truly,

Martin Hope Sutton.

CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Dear Sir,—The letter headed "The Basis of Christian Unity" has led me to the consideration of the three-fold presentation of unity in Eph. iv., There is one body (verse 4); this is the greatest rock-base unity, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail; which subsists in all its integrity and reality as much to-day, in spite of the outward fragmentary aspect of things, as when the truth was first announced.

Then there is the unity of the Spirit, which we are enjoined to endeavour to "keep in the bond of peace" (verse 3)—a unity with which our responsibility is connected, and as to which our failure is so evident.

But there is a third unity spoken of in the chapter, which is less noticed, I think, and that is the unity of the faith (verse 13), which is the ultimate design of all ministry, and for which all gifts were given, "till we all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

What relation does this bear to the state of things so generally deplored, and that which is now so widely desired among Christians?

I cannot but think it is in this direction the path to real unity will be found.—Yours faithfully,

Leicester. Edwin H. Wynne.

PROTESTANTS AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

Sir,—May I correct the statement of a correspondent in your last issue regarding the conduct of the Protestant Brigade? He states that "the cause of truth cannot be served by patrolling the streets with banners emblazoned with Smithfield fires, and filling the air with violent shouts of 'Down with Popery.'" Allow me, as a leader of the Brigade work at Norwich, to say that such conduct was not pursued. We only had one banner, and on that was inscribed a picture of Ridley and Latimer at the stake. Each morning the work was preceded by a prayer meeting in the Railway Mission Hall. From ten until seven o'clock we were busy visiting from house to house, distributing suitable Protestant pamphlets. Each evening, from eight o'clock until nearly eleven, we conducted great and enthusiastic meetings attended by thousands, and on two evenings we were assisted by the vicar of Smithfield Martyrs' Church and the vicar of Yoxford. On the Sunday we held three great meetings. At each and every meeting resolutions were passed unanimously in favour of convent inspection.

The only meeting that at all could give a warrant for your correspondent's remark was Lord Halifax's gathering, at which quite two-thirds of the meeting were Protestants, and even there I received a most enthusiastic ovation from the audience. Certainly after the meeting was over, large crowds assembled in the street, and I addressed them briefly on the subject, but even here, although I did hear the cry, "No Popery," the gathering was most orderly, and was closed with the Doxology.—Yours for the truth, John Kensit.

THE BASIS OF CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Dear Sir,—Since my letter on "Unity" appeared in The Christian of Oct. 10, I have received a letter from one who has for forty years been connected with unbelievers; having himself been a Secularist, his words are so much to the point that I quote them. "I can say that the division among Christians has been one of the greatest arguments used by sceptics against the truth of Christianity, although it is no valid argument." No valid argument for the unbeliever; for the mistakes of Christians make no difference in the fact of the existence of a God; but it is a valid and mighty argument against us as Christians.

Let us connect with this the following words spoken by our Saviour in prayer, and quoted last week. "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me" (John xvii. 21).

We have always had his words to guide us, but we have neglected to follow their teaching, and now, face to face with us stands up this great host of unbelievers, to a large extent of our own making. Our Lord knew how the world would judge, and He made provision for this, but we, as the Church of Christ, have been blind hitherto, and have failed to see our responsibility in the matter.

Can we shut our eyes any longer? Our Saviour said, "Ye are the light of the world." Can this be said of the Church of Christ now in actual experience—as long as our divisions raise up, and keep alive, unbelief in the hearts of multitudes—repelling them from the true Light, instead of being a beacon to guide them to Him?—Yours truly,

(Mrs.) A. M. C. Wilson.

Bank Field, Kendal, October 13.

DEFECTIVE PREACHING.

Sir,—May I be permitted to say a few words with regard to the "Defective Preaching" of the day? As I am only a Sunday-school teacher, I speak more from the hearer's than from the preacher's point of view.

I can sympathise a great deal with both letters recently given in your columns as to the need of realising the peril of the impenitent sinner, and of warning being given. But while I believe in warning being given, I hope that if the old warning of the terrors of hell is to revive in the preaching of to-day, those "terrors" will be awakened in the hearts of the hearers with discretion, and with love for the sinner.

When I was a little girl, I listened to many sermons of this description, and came away trembling, and (without any exaggeration) spent hours of wild childish prayer and tears to the God who would "have no pity." I knew I was a sinner, and I believed that I was as much under God's anger as I believe now only a hardened depraved creature, who knows not repentance, is.

If preachers of this description knew the torture they put into children, and ignorant people, they would be more careful. I believe that my body suffers to this day from the terrors I suffered.

I wanted to know what my sin was, but could not understand. May I suggest that we need to be taught first what sin is? That the sin should be pointed out first, and the sinner made to feel it is sin, before the terrors of hell are presented to him, or the effect may be to cause hardening and unbelief. I think I am right in saying that our Saviour in no case warned of hell, except when he was speaking to the hardened, impenitent religious formalists about Him; and the great sin which He condemned was hardness—an unforgiving spirit (Matt. v. 22), offending a little one (Matt. xviii. 6), religion without natural affection (Mark vii. 11), neglect of widows, the sick and helpless (Matt. xxv. 41), hypocrisy (Matt. xxiii. 33), unfaithfulness in professing Christians (Matt. xxiv. 51). Jesus Christ never terrified one who was trying to learn, with terrors of hell; and only, as I have come to learn more of Him, and of his beauty, do I see my own terrible sinfulness.

But I bear witness that as I grew older, and heard the gentler preaching of the love of God, of the beauty of a Christian life, that did not do alone: I needed the sword of God's Word to pierce my breast, and to have the sins which I would not acknowledge driven home to my heart.

As Christian teachers, do we not need to pause before we use that terrible word "hell," and to see to it that we are imbued with the spirit of Jesus Himself before we dare to? What we need is the great preacher like St. Paul, a prophet; whether he influences a great number as St. Paul did, or only a few; whose spirit being filled with the Spirit of Jesus Christ, can pierce through all shams and unrealities, and point out sin. St. Paul was a plain speaker if ever there was one; yet his converts fell upon his neck weeping, when they knew that they would "see his face no more" on earth.

I say I needed the sword to pierce into my heart before I understood the salvation Christ came to give us; but the sharpest sword after all is this:—"They shall look upon Him whom they have pierced." M. E. True.

AUTUMN.

The summer's golden glory
Has waned to autumn's gloom,
And fading leaves and blossoms
Remind us of the tomb.

All nature seems to languish,
And hasten to decay—
How soon the bloom of springtime
And summer passed away!

But yet amid the dimness
We find a ray of cheer—
Not blackened night is autumn,
But twilight of the year.

So autumn fills the garners
With precious golden store;
Ripened by rain and sunshine
And toil that went before.

And when the fading autumn—
The twilight of our life—
Tells us that toils are over
And hushed the noonday strife;

May we look back with gladness
O'er sunshine and o'er tears,
And gather to the garner
The reaping of bright years.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION FOR IRELAND.

The open-air work in the towns of Cork, Galway, Athlone, Tullamore, and Portarlington has been carried on weekly throughout the summer, almost without any interruption or difficulty. In each place the Gospel has been preached to many hundreds of attentive listeners, to some of whom it was a new story.

During the past three months fresh work has been started in Sligo and Howth. The opposition in Sligo has been very hostile and violent, and the preachers have as yet been unable to obtain a fair hearing, although on one or two days they were enabled to address some two or three hundred attentive listeners for a short time, before the organised mob came on the scene and made further preaching impossible. The opposition in Howth has also been very determined, and a quiet hearing has not yet been obtained. No real violence has, however, been attempted here; the organised opposition consists in continuous blowing of fog-horns, and the use of other instruments of a similar nature to hinder the preaching from being heard. Much increased sympathy towards the work of this mission has been manifested during the year, but the expenses have largely increased, and although virtually without any debt, at this moment funds are much needed to carry on the work and to meet the travelling expenditure, etc., which is very considerable.

R. W. Thompson, Hon. Secretary.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing on mission to be held in the Manchester-street Wesleyan Church, Oldham, from October 19 to 31.—For blessing on the work of the Plymouth Gospel Band.—That Mr. James Wharton, evangelist, may be restored from an attack of erysipelas, and enabled to return to his much-loved work.

THE Y.M.C.A.

STUDENTS IN CALCUTTA.

The Calcutta Y.M.C.A. draw earnest attention to the immense field presented by the students of the University of Calcutta (nearly 10,000 each year), who, after education, spread all over India. Those who attend missionary colleges come of course under Christian teaching, but the majority (in the Government colleges) do not. To win these young men is to go far towards winning India. Hence special effort has been organised amongst them, with Mr. J. Campbell White as secretary. The work needs a proper centre. All of these needs seem to be providentially provided for in a building soon to be sold. The Lady Dufferin Victoria Hospital has been offered at much less than its market value, owing to removal elsewhere. Its position as a centre for student work could not be better; and the buildings, with slight alterations, would meet all needs. There is ample room for a reading-room and library, Bible-classes and committees, evangelistic meetings, a university settlement, and a student's hostel. The entire property can be secured for eight thousand pounds. The Calcutta Committee appeal to Christian men and women to make this work their own by seizing this opportunity.

Newport (Mon.) annual meeting was held on Thursday, with interesting tokens of encouragement.

Mr. Jim Burwick is to hold evangelistic services for railway men in New York State during January and February.

The New York State Union reports that twenty-one Associations in the State are carrying on active extension work, and twelve are warmly interested in foreign missions.

The annual meeting of the Weston-super-Mare Association was held on Tuesday evening, and was addressed by Rev. Henry Dening, of St. Werburgh's, Bristol, and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

At the recent International Y.M.C.A. Railroad Conference at Clifton Forge, Va., Sept. 13-15, the sessions were marked by manifestations of spiritual power, and the influence cannot fail to greatly augment the work among railroad men.

On Monday evening last week a medical lecture to men was given by Dr. Harry Guinness in the Congress Hall, Clapton, under the auspices of the Salvation Army and the Hackney Y.M.C.A. About 4000 men were present, many of whom stood up at the close in order to express their earnest desire to lead a new life.

Representatives from the Associations at Derby, Doncaster, Gainsborough, Hillsborough, Huddersfield, Leeds, Lincoln, Nottingham, Scarborough, Worksop, etc., in the North Midland District Union, met at Sheffield on the 17th inst., for their annual conference. The meetings were characterised by much interest and practical usefulness.

The annual meeting of the Cork Association has been held in their fine new premises. The president (Mr. J. C. Newsom) opened with an encouraging and earnest address. The report showed progress, steady work, and genuine results amongst the young men of Cork. Addresses followed by Dr. E. Hall, Revs. T. H. Murphy, F. Flynn, F. W. Ainley, Mr. D. A. Black, and others.

Five hundred young men responded on Thursday evening to the invitation of Sir George Williams to meet him at a social gathering at Exeter Hall. A telling Gospel address was delivered by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of Notting Hill, and a deep impression was made. Mr. Macgregor is beginning a series of Thursday evening addresses. His subject this evening is "Years marred and mended."

A very delightful gathering took place at the Oxford Y.M.C.A. on October 18. Many of the freshmen at the University were invited, and a very enthusiastic meeting was held. Dr. Fairbairn delivered an impressive address, speaking of the advantages of religious companionship and the nobility of Christian manhood. Revs. F. J. Hazeldine and D. Paine (of Florida), and Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., also spoke. Mr. T. H. Rose acted as host on the occasion.

The latest scheme announced in connection with the Middlesbrough Association is one of interest and importance. Mr. Waynman Dixon has arranged to form a class for Bible students, and to deliver the introductory address on Friday evening, taking for his subject, "The Bible—What is It?" This class will be for free discussion, and will deal with the subject of the origin, history, structure, and literary value of the Bible, including its inspiration and the consideration of what is called the modern "Higher Criticism."

Mr. T. Howard Lloyd presided on Monday week over the annual meeting of the Leicester Y.M.C.A., which was very successful. The report of the secretary, Mr. Alfred Orchin, was a record of multifarious activity, one of the interesting features of which was the Sunday afternoon Gospel meeting for men, maintaining an average attendance of 700. There are 522 association members now on the books. An eloquent and stirring address was delivered by Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.A., M.P., honorary travelling representative of the National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s, and Rev. G. S. S. Saunders also spoke.

The annual conference of the South Wales District Union was held at the rooms of the Cardiff Association on Wednesday, the 16th inst. Mr. John Cory presided in the morning, Mr. J. F. Fawckner in the afternoon, and Mr. R. Bird in the evening, and the proceedings were marked by considerable enthusiasm. A resolution was arrived at, under the terms of which the North and South Wales District Unions will join in the appointment of a Welsh-speaking travelling secretary. This decision is an important one, inasmuch as the progress of the work in the Principality has been much retarded by the bi-lingual difficulty. The reports from delegates were of an encouraging character.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Miss Coles, Hon. Secretary of the Chiswick branch, is leaving for the Foreign Mission field.

The conference for the North of England met recently at Lancaster, and that for the South of England last week at Clifton.

The monthly conferences for secretaries and workers are about to be resumed as usual at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street.

The starting of a new branch in the neighbourhood of High-street, Kensington, is under consideration, and offers of help would be welcomed.

There is scarcely a branch in London that does not collect or work for Foreign Missions. Many branches have a member or support their own missionary in the foreign field.

Miss Graham regrets very much that owing to the death of her mother she has been prevented from fulfilling her October engagements to lecture. The dates are being filled up by other lecturers, and Miss Graham hopes early in November to take up the various courses which have been announced.

The Guildford branch held, a few days ago, their annual meeting, preceded by a tea, to which about eighty-five members sat down. Quite 100 were at the meeting afterwards. Miss Ellis, or Norwood, gave a very earnest helpful address. The following night a meeting was held in the institute room, when an address was given by Miss Bamber, also from Norwood.

The Y.W.C.A., Auckland, N.Z., was started about eight years ago by a few ladies who belonged to the Ladies' Christian Association. This room was pleasantly furnished as a place where young women engaged in shops and factories might enjoy their lunch in comfortable surroundings. Added to this a mothers' meeting and a Dorcas sewing meeting were undertaken, and a weekly Bible meeting for ladies, a Bible class, and a prayer union class. Later on factory visiting was taken up, also a monthly sewing bee for the Niger Mission and destitute children.

Miss H. S. Baldwin recently retired from the Finsbury Institute after about thirty years of faithful service. Her health is much improved, her eyesight largely restored, and she still feels the warmest interest in the institute, where she was much loved and valued. Miss Pirouet has succeeded Miss Baldwin, with Miss Poole as assistant, and there are many indications of God's continued blessing. The workers will be glad of prayer for revival and conversions. A few friends met a short time back at Peckham to pray for the starting of a branch there. It is hoped that the way may soon be opened.

At the last meeting of the London Council, a very encouraging report was given of the editorial department. The magazines, Go Forward for secretaries and workers, and Our Onward Way, for members, so ably edited by Miss Nugent, are increasing in circulation, and numerous testimonies have been received to the spiritual help and blessing which they have been to many. In Scotland several young women traced their conversion to the August Monthly Letter. Unfortunately Miss Nugent was absent from the council through illness. She is, however, better, and hopes soon to be able to take up her work again.

"NOTHING BUT GOOD."—Hon. Charles Denby, U.S. Minister to China, in a despatch to the Secretary of State at Washington dealing with the subject of Christian missions, bears emphatic witness to the high personal character of the missionaries, and the advantage of their work both in China and to foreign countries. While considering the religious benefits of conversion as not falling within his province, Mr. Denby sums up his review of the medical, educational, and benevolent work of missionaries in China by saying, "They do nothing but good."—Our Missions.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A two days' missionary conference was recently held in the Evangelistic Hall, Alexandria. Missionaries from Brazil, Africa, and China addressed the friends present.

A series of children's meetings has been held by Mr. Pratt, of Glasgow, in connection with the Dingwall Y.M.C.A. The lantern was used with great effect, and marked blessing has been the result.

Rev. T. Moore Smith, who has acted as second assistant to Rev. John Robertson in his Glasgow work, is severing his connection with that mission, and is open for a fresh engagement. Mr. Robertson commends him very highly as an able and vigorous preacher and pastor. Mr. Smith's address is, 6, Broompark-drive, Dennistoun, Glasgow.

A valedictory service in connection with the China Inland Mission was held last week in the new Saturday Afternoon Prayer Meeting Room, 94, W. Regent-street, Glasgow, to say farewell to some young men going forth to China next month. There was a fair attendance, amongst them a good number of the students from the Glasgow Bible Training Institute. Mr. G. Graham Brown, Scottish Secretary C.I.M., presided.

IRISH NOTES.

Open-air services are now conducted on Sunday afternoons on the Marina, Cork, without interruption, and are usually attended by about 300 persons, several of whom are Roman Catholics.

A representative meeting was held in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, on Thursday evening week, for the purpose of inaugurating a memorial fund to the late Rev. Robt. Stewart and the other missionaries who were recently murdered in China. Amongst the speakers were Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, Judge Warren, etc., and it was pointed out that mission work in the Fuh-Kien province is mainly carried out in connection with the Church of Ireland.

The open-air services in Sligo have entered on an acute stage. On Sunday week the evangelists, on sallying forth to the usual place of meeting, were met by a howling mob, from which they were rescued with difficulty with their lives by the small force of police present, and were forced back to their lodgings. Afterwards a mock minister was put up to address the rabble, and the burden of his remarks was "Down with Protestantism, but maintain Catholicism." An effigy of Rev. Mr. Harrison, of Arklow, was burned and the ashes kicked about. The respectable inhabitants of the town are indignant at the liberty of speech granted to the defenders of Romanism and denied to the preachers of the Gospel.

PARIS CITY MISSION.—This work of faith, founded on the model of the London City Mission, is a powerful auxiliary to all who are labourers for God in the French capital, with its currents of infidelity and worldliness, spiritual ignorance, superstition, and immorality. The hon. sec for England, Mr. J. M. Weylland, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W., has many a tale to tell of very encouraging "signs following" the labours of the missionary agents, who are deputed to aid evangelical pastors, churches, and societies in bringing the Gospel to bear on this city of pleasure, where so many formidable obstacles have to be encountered. Paris Christians have shown their appreciation of the Mission's value by contributing about £500 of the £1200 which represents last year's income. If increased support were but forthcoming, there is full scope for extended operations.

MEN'S SUNDAY SERVICES.—The remarkable working men's service carried on by Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield at St. Peter's, Dartmouth Park Hill, has now entered on its fourth year. The third anniversary was observed last week. The report shows that the object of this service is to lead men through Christ to a nobler life in God and to prove that Christianity is not a failure. To accomplish this, the character of the service is distinctly a religious one, while at the same time, one in which all can join and thoroughly enjoy. The singing is hearty. A solo, generally with a chorus, such as "Will you meet me at the Fountain?" is sung by a member of the choir, and is always enjoyed. The lesson is read by the committee in turn, every man is provided on entering the church with a short liturgy, which is heartily and reverently rendered. The addresses are varied in character, and homely in style, but always on some Gospel subject as it applies to and meets the need of men in their every-day life. The vicar and Mr. Watts Ditchfield both testify to the abundant results among the men. All manner of social and other helps have grown up around this service, while out of it also has come a women's service for wives and sisters of the members.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our Special Correspondents.]

CAMBRIDGE.

A much blessed mission to University men was held here from October 13-19, inclusive. The missioner was Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot Rice, rector of St. Peter-le-Bailey, Oxford. Mr. Rice certainly has a wonderful power of appealing to the hearts of young men, and at the concluding meeting of the mission fully 100 undergraduates came out boldly for the first time. Mr. Rice has also given short addresses each morning at the daily prayer meeting.

The annual meeting of the Cambridge branch of the C.M.S., preceded by a tea, was held on Thursday last. Dr. Searle, Master of Pembroke, presided, and Rev. Douglas Hooper was the speaker. Referring to the late massacre in China, the latter said the proper revenge to take was to send out more missionaries.

At the Congregational church, on Sunday morning, Dr. Forsyth, the minister, commenced a series of four addresses on "Spiritual Reasons for being a Nonconformist."

The entry at Ridley Hall is exceptionally large this year, being three in excess of last year's entry.

OXFORD.

Archdeacon Palmer fell asleep in Christ on Thursday last, and his funeral took place on Monday amid tokens of universal respect. Not for several years has such a sight been seen as was witnessed at the Cathedral on the occasion of the funeral. City, university, and diocese were represented. The Archdeacon will be very greatly missed in the city and diocese, where his counsels always had the great weight due to his deep piety, clear penetration, and ripe scholarship. Much prayer is ascending that the Bishop may be guided aright in the choice of a successor.

It is but seldom that the University pulpit is occupied on two successive Sundays by such valued men as Canon McCormick, of Highbury, and Dr. Moule, of Cambridge. Dr. Moule preached on Sunday last on the "Peace of God," and very acceptable was the Word to those present. In the evening St. Peter-le-Bailey Church was filled to excess to hear Dr. Moule.

The annual meeting of the Bible Society was held on Monday, in the Examination Schools, when Rev. R. B. de Wolf, formerly of Sheffield, and Rev. E. Lewis, of Bellary, South India, testified to the work of the society from their personal experience in Australasia and India. The Rector of Exeter presided over a most interesting meeting.

Mr. Chavasse, of Wycliffe Hall, is taking "Our Lord's Prayers" as the subject of his Sunday evening Greek Testament readings. It is a pleasure to hear that Wycliffe Hall is full this term.

The Christian work for the term has commenced very promisingly. Definite blessing is known to have resulted from the sermon to Freshmen.

Rev. Ll. Lloyd addressed two missionary meetings last Tuesday before returning to China. The C.M.S. Gleaners' Union has taken firm hold on several Oxford parishes.

A most interesting and valuable series of services was held last week to commemorate the jubilee of Holy Trinity Church. Among the preachers were Bishop Knox, of Coventry, and Revs. W. T. Hollins and E. A. Stuart, of London. The parish is, perhaps, the poorest in Oxford, and is quite hidden away from the ordinary and busy thoroughfares of the city. The work, consequently, is essentially one which concerns the immediate neighbourhood, and very bravely do the clergy and their fellow-workers "hold the fort" of the Gospel there.

Much prayer is asked for the convention of next week (October 28 to 31), that it may be used very widely for blessing and power. Information about the meetings is obtainable from the Convention Secretaries, Y.M.C.A., Oxford.

ROYAL BLIND PENSION SOCIETY.—There is one feature of this Society which commends it to practical Christian philanthropists—everything that is given goes direct to the poor sufferers. Without invidious comparisons between this and other societies which deal with circumstances rendering housing accommodation indispensable, it may be said that the blind are known to be very averse to the idea of being placed in an asylum. They have a strong preference for the advantages and happy incidents of family life. This Society enables many blind folk to find a home with relatives or friends, their small pensions making them all the more welcome. Large-hearted and liberal support has been received during the past year, and although, unhappily, there remains a great number of blind whose destitute condition gives anxiety to the committee, they have been privileged to convey joy and comparative comfort to many of God's afflicted children. Secretary, Mr. W. E. Terry, 235, Southwark Bridge-road, S.E.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Gipsy Smith is holding a special mission in Memorial Chapel, Walter-road, Swansea, for which prayer is desired.

Rev. W. F. Holt, of Birmingham, has concluded a ten days' special mission at the Presbyterian Church, Gloucester. There were signs of special blessing.

Hayling.—Mr. F. W. Walter, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a mission at the Mission Hall here. It has been the means of deepening the spiritual life of believers.

Ireland.—A fortnight's Gospel mission has been conducted in the Methodist Church, Armagh, of which Rev. R. Cole is the pastor, by Mr. Jas. Dixon, of the Belfast City Mission. A similar mission for men has been held in the Men's Christian Institute, by Rev. Mr. Thorpe, of Nottingham, formerly of Cork.

Mr. Edward Wright recently visited the West of England for the purpose of doing evangelistic work, and amongst other places he visited Dartmouth. There he conducted a tent mission for ten days, when a great many people who do not usually attend any place of worship were induced to hear the Gospel faithfully and forcefully proclaimed.

Plashetts, North Tyne.—A three weeks' mission has been held here in the Free Methodist Chapel, conducted by Miss Thompson Carlisle (returned missionary from Japan). God has been working in a wonderful manner. Salvation has come to almost every house in the village. Many miners and their wives have been savingly brought to a knowledge of the truth. D.H.B.

North Bow.—A successful nine days' mission has been conducted in Brookfield Chapel by Mr. James Jermy and other friends. The drooping church has been revived, and souls saved. Mr. John Wooldridge, evangelist, has taken up the work for fourteen days, and we are looking for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. We ask for the prayers of our brethren during the services. F. H.

Mr. A. A. Harmer has closed three weeks' special services at Scape Goat Hill, Pole Moor, and Sunny Bank, Huddersfield. Large crowds have attended the services, and the power of God has been seen and felt. Many have decided for Christ, and the churches have been much refreshed. Mr. Harmer commences on Sunday, October 27, at Abbeydale Chapel, Sheffield, for ten days.

English and French Coasting Mission.—The Good News has returned from Dover, after a fortnight's mission. She was detained by rough weather, but the Lord had purposes of blessing in it. Many testimonies to help and encouragement received through the visit of the ship were given by Christians, and several souls were won for the Master, a few soldiers being among the number.

Rev. Thomas Cook is now preaching in Ceylon through an interpreter, and is finding access to the Mohamedan and heathen sections of population. He is preaching three times a day, and Mrs. Cook is helping her husband by addressing the Tamil women. Considerably over nine thousand names have been taken at the many missions Mr. Cook has conducted since he left England. He hopes to arrive in England about the middle of December.

Rev. J. Manton Smith has been holding a special evangelistic mission at the Gildencroft Hall, Norwich, which lasted from the 5th to the 13th inst. We had services for the young, preaching and song services, and on Lord's Day afternoon a meeting for men only, which was well attended. The closing service was a memorable one: the hall was crowded in every part, and numbers failed to gain admission. We believe great good has been accomplished.

Thomas Bullimore.

Ramsgate.—Rev. J. Grange Bennett (Connexional Evangelist) has held a ten days' mission in connection with the Hardves-street Wesleyan Church. The meetings were well attended, especially that held in the amphitheatre on the second Sunday evening, when about 1500 were present. The Gospel was preached every night with power, and spiritual blessing was the result; believers were quickened, and over 100 persons found their way to the inquiry rooms.

The Weaver Brothers have closed a successful ten days' mission in connection with Langholm Home Mission. The meetings have been well attended, many coming from miles around to hear the Word. From the first meeting the presence of God to save was manifest, and the interest deepened as the mission progressed, souls being saved at every service. Believers have been revived and cheered by seeing many who have long been prayed for, won for Christ. A. Byers, Sec

The Stratford Mizpah Band desire to praise God for blessings received in their work in the open air; souls have been saved, backsliders restored, and many temperance pledges taken. A man was riding from Cambridge on his bicycle on Bank Holiday; when close to Maryland Point, Stratford, his machine broke down. Hearing the sound of singing he came to our meeting, heard God's word, believed it to the salvation of his soul, and at the close of the meeting came to one of the workers to tell him how God had blessed him. J. C. Crawley.

Westminster.—Rev. W. Evans Hurndall and his co-workers at Westminster Chapel have been experiencing the Divine presence and help in the eight days' mission now brought to a successful termination. Quite a wave of blessing is flowing in upon the old historic church. The meetings, which were for the most part held in the Westminster Town Hall, were numerously attended, and during the week many persons voluntarily came forward to inscribe their names and addresses in Mr. Hurndall's mission book in token of their determination to enter upon the Christian life.

Hanley, Staffordshire. — The Nonconformist Council of Hanley has completed a seven days' mission in connection with the various denominations in the town. Three central churches were selected, and missioners appointed to each, namely, Rev. R. Balgarnie, to Bethesda (Methodist New Connexion), Rev. A. MacArthur, of Fleetwood, to Charles-street (Wesleyan), Rev. Dr. Marshall, of London, to the Tabernacle (Congregational). Bible-readings and meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, were held each afternoon, which were well attended. The results of the mission have exceeded the expectations of its promoters.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Thomas Evans, of Mussoorie, is on his way to England from India, on a visit.

Pastor F. E. Crawford, of Allahabad, has returned home, and is open to address missionary or evangelistic meetings. His address is 95, Blake's-road, Peckham-grove, Camberwell.

Mr. W. G. Carr has been holding Bible readings in Belfast. He is now visiting Scotland. Communications regarding future arrangements may be addressed to Mr. D. L. Mackay, 6, Grosvenor-terrace, Princes Park, Liverpool.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe.—We hear with very great regret that our beloved friend, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, is suffering from congestion of the lungs. We are sure that our readers will unite in prayer that he may speedily be restored.

Mr. Walter W. Mowle, one of Mr. Moody's students at the Bible Institute, Chicago, is at present in this country, and would be glad of opportunities to engage in evangelistic or other mission work. His address is 8, Claremont-road, Maida Hill, W.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson hopes to leave England on November 15th, in the s.s. Manora, for Colombo. He will proceed thence to India and will continue his work of last season, holding conventions amongst the English speaking communities in India. He desires prayer on behalf of this effort. Letters to him should be addressed G.P.O., Bombay.

Sir James Stansfeld was the recipient last week of an interesting presentation from women throughout the United Kingdom, on the occasion of his retirement from political life. The greater part of the amount subscribed is, by the desire of Sir James, to be devoted to the promotion of the interests of women. He replied to the presentation in a touching speech, surveying the struggles of past years for moral and social reform.

Pastor Frank H. White.—A correspondent at New York writes that Pastor White is having an anxious time in America. His own health is poor, and his son is still very ill. "They had decided to winter in California, but when ready for departure the son was taken ill with pleurisy. The young man goes to Bermuda. Mr. and Mrs. White hope soon to proceed to Denver, and thence to California. They have given up the idea of an Australian trip."

Mr. John Groom.—To avoid confusion, which seems to have arisen in some minds, we would observe that the Mr. John Groom, of Hampstead, mentioned in our obituary last week, is not Mr. John A. Groom, of the Flower Girls' Mission. A careful perusal of our obituary notice will show that the servant of God who has been called home was in advanced years, his sphere of service being in quite another direction than that of the secretary of the Mission to Flower Girls.

Mrs. Huntley, of Georgetown, Demerara, has lately been on a long journey up the river, spending nearly eight weeks, visiting various mission stations, strengthening aged black brethren and sisters as well as many children in the faith. Unhappily, however, she took ill on the journey with bronchitis and fever, and at many places the people had to come round her hammock to hear her words and receive little books and papers. Miss Fanny King (her adopted daughter) has also been ill several times lately; never having thoroughly got over the influenza. She has been ordered home to England for a change, but at present the way is not clear.

CONSUMPTION.

THE GRAND OLD MEDICINE OF NEARLY 70 YEARS

has maintained its position as the first medicine in all Chest Complaints.

As a preventative of mischief, it should be taken at the first appearance of Cough or Cold. As a safeguard against Influenza, and in subsequent weakness of the lungs, it has been used with wonderful results.

Ministers and Public Speakers have declared it to be invaluable for hoarseness, and "Splendid for the Voice."

So, also, in Asthma, it has been the means of wonderful relief.

But the renown of this celebrated medicine in all these cases has been eclipsed by its success in cases of

PHTHISIS PULMONALIS, or CONSUMPTION, Aptly called the "Scourge of England."

Interviews with patients, new and old, by Mr. Congreve's Commissioner, are published every alternate week in most of the weekly journals.

Mr. Congreve's book on Consumption and Chest Diseases may be had post free for one shilling, from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

CORPULENCY.

INCREASING POPULARITY OF

AN EFFECTUAL CURE.

Many of our readers are doubtless familiar with the nature of the extraordinary revolution in the cure of obesity which, within recent years, has been wrought by the original researches of that now eminent expert, Mr. F. Cecil Russell, of Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C. It is evident that the certainty, the rapidity, and the agreeable surroundings of his curative process have been recognised, in a very large degree, among ladies and gentlemen belonging to the highest social circles. Keen observers who have an opportunity of judging inform us, through the pages of Society papers and otherwise, that, owing to the general employment of Mr. Russell's treatment, extreme obesity is becoming as much a thing of the past at fashionable gatherings as intoxication; and, no doubt, it will soon be regarded as nearly as disgraceful. The issue of an eighteenth edition of the author's singularly convicting little text-book, "Corpulency and the Cure," however, serves to remind us that the popularity of the system has now reached spheres far remote from those of West-End fashion. The book of 256 pages may be had, post free, by sending six penny stamps to Mr. Russell's offices, as above; and it is worth the careful attention of those who wish to free themselves of a burden of fat—not merely because it is unseemly and adds enormously to the apparent age of the sufferer—but because extreme obesity terribly interferes with the energy necessary in these days of competition to make one's way in the world, or even to earn a very modest competency. A large proportion of the letters of Mr. Russell's grateful correspondents refer to their delight at being enabled—within a very brief period and without any irksome conditions implying semi-starvation—to attack their accustomed tasks with pleasure instead of wearied disgust, through being reduced to their normal weight. The popularity of the system is also largely due, doubtless, to the English hatred of mystery, which is utterly swept aside by Mr. Russell. He fully explains his modus operandi, and supplies the recipe for his preparation.

Notes and Comments.

A SUBSCRIBER of long standing writes :—

I have for many years supplied, through local booksellers (thus avoiding expense of postage) THE CHRISTIAN every week. Most of the recipients are unable conveniently to afford the cost, but, strange to say, others who can well afford to pay for them, would not buy but will receive them with thanks and gladly read them. Occasionally I get a hundred or two from the office for meetings. Some few are sent from the office to foreign parts at my charge.

We heartily thank the writer, and other friends who have responded to our "Notes" in last week's issue, and have expressed their willingness to help us in extending the circulation and usefulness of this paper. We are sure many more will gladly avail themselves of this opportunity, and, therefore, we repeat that we will be glad to communicate with anyone wishing for information as to ways of helping.

We may mention here that we will send a specimen copy to any name and address that may be supplied to us as that of a probable subscriber; and we will forward to any Sunday-school superintendent, teacher, secretary of Christian Endeavour Society, or any accredited officer of a church or a society, a parcel of specimen copies for careful distribution. In applying, friends are requested to state how many copies they can actually use.

The number of cheap vicious periodicals increases, and those who once were ashamed to be seen buying them and reading them in the train, are losing their modesty under the corrupting influence of the suggestive letterpress and more than suggestive illustrations.

"God will do his best [?] for us." This assertion has lately come into vogue; but every formula not expressly found in Scripture must be weighed in the balances of the sanctuary before it is accepted as current coin of the realm of God. God is the absolutely good. "There is but One Good—GOD." There is no comparison in God. There are certain adjectives which do not admit of comparison. There is no such word as "truer" or "straighter." A true statement cannot be truer; a straight line cannot be straighter. "Best" supposes something not so good. God cannot do anything which is not so good as anything else He could do. He can only do the absolutely good; for He is the good. He cannot deny Himself. He can only, at all times, and under all circumstances, do the absolutely good, than which there is no better, beyond which there is no best.

Teachers of holiness—all teachers sent from God are such—should be on their guard against loose, catchy, inexact statements. "Hold fast the pattern of wholesome words." "See that thou make all things according to the pattern shown thee in the mount." If you have not seen the pattern in the mount, do not presume to teach others to rear the Tent-of-Meeting with God. "We preach that we do know, and testify that we have seen."

We may call something "holiness teaching" which is neither God's teaching nor God's holiness. No pattern of words is sound, or wholesome, or holy, which is not in exact and accurate accordance with the Word of God. We can claim attention for nothing as the Gospel of God, whether in its elementary or its ultimate stages, which we cannot substantiate by the Scriptures of truth. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth." "Sanctify (set apart, consecrate) them in the truth; the Word that is Thine is truth."

"In a rude 'wattle-and-daub church' at Epworth Station, in Mashonaland, the first five converts won by Methodism were recently baptized. The small and humble beginning occasioned much joy and thankfulness. The station, which is under the care of a native evangelist, forms a great contrast to surrounding heathen stations. The example of the evangelist appears to be as potent as anything else in impressing the heathen."

So our contributor; but why this form of speech, "won by Methodism"? Is Methodism one thing and Christianity another? If Jonathan had been of a like spirit, he would presumably have said, "Come up after me, for the Lord hath delivered them into the hand of the tribe of Benjamin." But he was of a larger heart, and said, "into the hand of Israel." Why should we restrict ourselves to a segment when we may represent the circle? Why go forth in the name of an ism when we may go in the name of the Israel of God? Why shut thyself up in one room when "thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth"?

Four missionaries may go to the heathen in the name of four denominations, and tell the heathen :—No. 1, "I am of Paul"; No. 2, "I am of Apollos"; No. 3, "I am of Cephas"; No. 4, "I am of Christ." And the heathen may ask, "Was Paul crucified for us? Do you mean to baptize us in the name of Paul?"

If the brewers and the publicans thought a a few weeks ago that their trade would have a time of repose from the attacks of temperance reformers, they must be undeceived by now. On every hand there are signs that something positive and effective will be attempted. The old demand for local veto is not withdrawn, as the meetings of the United Kingdom Alliance showed. Neither is the demand for Sunday closing and the abolition of grocers' licences. At any and every vulnerable point the reformers are ready to deliver an assault. The various temperance parties are also beginning to take counsel with each other, to see whether some united plan of action cannot be devised. The Church of England Temperance Society never had such an opportunity as the present for justifying its existence by moving its friends both inside and outside the Government to do something effective in the way of removing from our country the reproach of being "publican ridden."

It is a pleasure to learn from Mr. Edward W. Blyden, of Liberia, that the interior tribes of Northern Africa are as yet free from the devastating traffic in strong drink. The Coast tribes, it seems, use all the drink themselves. He informs us that in the interior the natives have reached a degree of civilisation not suspected by the outside world, most of the tribes having fixed habitations, being cultivators of their lands, manufacturing their own cotton dresses, and working in iron and gold. The longer they are safe from the rum and gunpowder of the white man the better. We shall, in the name of humanity, have to face this question of whether the white trader is to be allowed to kill nations off for the sake of gain. To put down the slave traffic, while allowing this worse traffic to go on and sometimes opening the way for it, is sheer hypocrisy.

The reflections which are suggested by the enormous armaments of Europe are humiliating and painful. The facts of the situation were again and again referred to at the meetings of the Peace Society at Birmingham, and were summed up by Dr. Darby in one sentence: "In the nineteenth century of the Christian era the unchristian nations of the world are making the preparations for war the serious business of their national life." Twice as much is now spent on armies by the nations of Europe as was spent a quarter of a century ago. In six years the war budgets have increased at the rate of 23 per cent. In Europe there are close on four millions of men in the armies which are on a peace (!) footing; there are close on twenty-two millions if on a war footing. The madness of all this waste of men and treasure is equalled only by its wickedness, and the sinful passions which are the root of the folly. "Whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?"

All the same, the Peace Society was justified in congratulating the friends of peace upon the frequency with which the principle of arbitration has been applied to the settlement of international disputes. The men of war have a dread of setting these enormous armaments in motion, for no one can foresee which country would be ruined; and there is steadily growing up a desire to submit disputes to arbitration rather than to arms. Arbitration may have its limits, but the more it is used the greater will its influence and effectiveness become.

To be true to God in all things may sometimes make a Christian appear as if he were working for his own ends, but in the long run his unselfishness will be made manifest. When John Knox informed Mary Queen of Scots that subjects had a right to resist sovereigns who imposed unrighteous laws, she at once turned his words against him. "Well, then," she said, "I perceive my subjects shall obey you and not me." "God forbid," replied Knox, "that ever I take upon me to command anyone to obey me, or yet to set subjects at liberty to do what pleaseth them. But my travail is that both princes and subjects obey God." That is the grand object to aim at in all relations of life, that parents and children, masters and servants, rulers and ruled, do obey God. He who obeys God is on the winning side, because God's will is sure to prevail. If we seek to be right with God we need not be anxious as to anything else.

It seems an extraordinary thing that the railway companies of our country should have an agreement among themselves not to grant any reduction in their fares to ladies and gentlemen attending religious conferences. Yet they will grant reduced fares to football clubs, horse-racers, and all that class of persons. Why the distinction? The policy is bad for the companies, and not good for the country.

A SWEET SINGER.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. ALEXANDER.

They sang a new song (Rev. v. 9-14).

Sweet singer! who will sing for thee
In accents like thine own?
Thy ransomed soul by faith we see
Before the Father's throne.
And hear thy voice new praise outpour
To Him whom angel hosts adore.

Sweet singer! thou art gone, but still
Thy melody remains,
We dream of Calvary's "green hill,"*
Where Jesus "bore our pains,"
And claim the power in that dear Name†
Of Him who suffered scorn and shame.

Sweet singer! on our list'ning ears
Thy tender teachings fall;
We say when bird or flower appears,
"The good God made them all."‡
Each lovely form, each glimpse of light
But shadow forth a land more bright.

Sweet singer! in that realm of bliss
Thou dost not need our praise,
But though thy answering smile we miss
Through dim and lovely days,
We trust the Lord will bid thee wait
To greet us at the golden gate.

Sweet singer! though our hearts must grieve
Our spirits peace shall find,
And would that we might also leave
Like memories behind,
So, when we meet before the throne
Our humbler work the Lord may own.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.—The records of the various training Homes and branches of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution continue to afford evidences of what may be done, under God's blessing, by earnest and persistent effort for the rescue and permanent reformation of fallen women. The preventive department of this blessed work, now in its thirty-ninth year, also very specially commends itself to the heart and judgment of the Christian Church, and to society generally, for included in these efforts are the cases of many poor friendless girls who have been saved in time, and spared the peril and pain of loss of virtue and respectability, while destitute and in moral peril. The late Mr. E. W. Thomas, of revered memory, has a worthy successor in the present secretary, Mr. William J. Taylor, who directs this now, happily, extensive enterprise of mercy from its headquarters, 200, Euston-road, N.W.

A Spirit-filled Church.*

By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

If the Spirit dwells in the body of Christ, and is left free to work his own will, He will quicken the whole body. Members will have a new care one for another, suffering and rejoicing together. There will be a holy jealousy for the welfare and happiness of all who belong to the mystical body, and an earnest and loving co-operation in all holy work. All schism, whether manifest in inward estrangement or in outward separation, becomes impossible where the Spirit of Love prevails; all heresy becomes impossible so far as the Spirit of Truth indwells; and all apathy and inactivity in the face of a dying world will give way to sympathetic activity when and so far as the Spirit of Life thrills the body; even as all ignorance of God and superstitious worship of forms flee like owls of the night when the Spirit of Light shines in his Divine splendour. In a word, all needs of the Church are met so surely and speedily as the Holy Ghost, who still abides in the Church as God's only earthly temple, resumes by the consent and co-operation of disciples his normal control, actively guiding into all truth and duty.

The question we are raising is immensely practical. Upon its answer everything hangs which concerns the power of the Church for God. Let us suppose that a wave of Divine revival should sweep over the land, and that a prayerful spirit of candid self-search should be its result; that pastors, church officers, church members, should unite to purge the courts of God of all idols of the world; that the service of song in the house of the Lord should be put into consecrated hands, with a holy jealousy for spiritual praise rather than artistic and æsthetic music; that preaching should become a simple declaration of God's testimony in Holy Ghost power; that secular men, however wealthy, cultured, influential, should be displaced in all church offices by disciples who, being filled with the Holy Spirit, could discern his mind and obey his leading; that all worldly methods of raising money for the Lord's work should be abandoned, and voluntary, self-denying offerings, consecrated by prayer, should take their place; that the lost art of prayer in the closet, and in the assemblies of saints, should be restored to its true place, and nothing should be done or attempted without waiting on God until his mind were made known—in a word, let us suppose that our whole church life were resolutely remodelled after the pattern showed us in the holy mount; dare any of us doubt that God would work signs and wonders of grace not less convincing in their way than those wrought in the days of which Pentecost was the glorious dawn?

God's name is "I AM" (Exod. iii. 14)—mystic name, indeed; yet whatever else it means, it can mean no less than this: one everlasting, unchanging NOW. He is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8). What He was, He is; what He has done, He can do, will do, does; whether or not his being and doing are seen or known by us. Like the sun, his shining is perpetual. We may get into the dark, but the light is essentially undimmed. We may shut out the light, but it is struggling to reach us behind the shutters. The Church of God may pass into eclipse behind the world's shadow, but the sun is still as radiant and glorious. There is in God "no variableness, neither shadow of turning." His past deeds, however wonderful, are the promise, prophecy, and proof of what He wills to do and waits to do when our conditions make it possible. And to charge, direct or indirectly, our failures or declensions upon Him is to charge Him with being a liar, a false promiser, a capricious, changeable, untrustworthy God. Our doubts are denials, and our unbelief is indirect blasphemy, if not apostasy.

Joy in the Lord.

By Mr. GEORGE MULLER, BRISTOL.

Scripture is full of exhortations to rejoice in the LORD, not in our temporal mercies, nor even in our moral or spiritual attainments, nor in our service for the Lord. Grateful indeed should we be for all of these, but they are not the source of our joy; it is in the Lord Himself that we are bidden to rejoice.

"How may we obtain this joy? We naturally dread God because of our sin, and it is well when we see ourselves as sinners needing a Saviour. By trusting Christ for salvation we obtain new spiritual life, obtaining forgiveness and being justified through his atoning work. Being thus made children of God we are made happy; God is no longer dreaded; we are able at last to look into our Father's face, and in Him we are to rejoice.

2. Rejoice in the Lord ALWAY, at all times, in all circumstances. Is this possible when in great pain? We cannot rejoice in the pain, but in what we have in God, and in the knowledge that when the pain has done its work, He will remove it. These things are for our profit, and our eyes must be continually upon the Lord, whose love is unchangeable, and who loves us as He loves his only Son. Thus we can afford to rejoice in spite of present sorrow. Remember that we are on our way to heaven, where we shall see the precious one who shed his blood for us, and, looking at all the blessings bestowed upon us, let us rejoice in Him at all times.

3. How can we realise the joy of the Lord always? (a) We must not depend on ourselves, but in God the Holy Ghost, acknowledging daily that we have no power of our own to resist evil, and laying hold upon the power of God. (b) We must make it our business daily to read the Scriptures. The thousands of books published year by year create a danger lest the Word of God be neglected. But the Bible is the one book from which to derive our spiritual food. Let us be careful that by our acts, if not by words, we do not imply that we can do without it. Then, too, we must ask the Holy Spirit to teach us, and not only read but ponder and meditate upon it. Otherwise it is only like water running through a pipe.

This will affect our service for Him. It is not so much the amount of work we do, but the spirit in which it is done. The world looks to see what sort of persons we are, and how we appear under trial and sorrow. We should, therefore, let them see that the joy of the Lord is our strength. It is our privilege to be in Him habitually happy. Do we all, as his children, live up to it?

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW recently held its annual convention at Louisville, Kentucky. The order, which is associated with the Protestant Episcopal Church, was organised in Chicago on St. Andrew's Day of 1883. Its purposes are strictly religious, and it was formed in recognition of the fact that every Christian man is pledged to devote his life to the extension of the kingdom of Christ on earth. The membership is about 15,000.

Mocking God.

One of the most startling sentences in the whole Bible is that in which we are warned against mocking God. The very conception of such a thing makes one's flesh creep; and the possibility that we ourselves may be guilty of it is an added horror. Figure to yourself a man with distended nostrils, curled lip, and leering face, and you have the image employed by the Apostle when he speaks of mocking God. But "God is not mocked." That a man may assume such a moral attitude towards God is a revelation of the abyss of sin into which human nature has fallen.

But the most staggering thing is that this awful warning is addressed to professing Christians. We are scarcely astonished to read that the abandoned Herod mocked his Lord on the morning of the crucifixion; and from Roman soldiers we hardly look for anything else than ribald mockery. But that men who in some way know God, and who have made promises to Him, and who, before the world, have allied themselves with his cause—that these should ever mock God, is a matter to bring us to humble and searching confession.

What was the occasion of this solemn warning? In the estimation of many people a most commonplace thing. The apostle foresaw the danger of the rank and file of the church shelving their responsibility in the matter of sustaining God's work. This responsibility was to "share with" him that taught, in all good; to be incessant in labour; to use all opportunities of doing good. They might either respond to their opportunity or refuse it. In either case they would be sowing. If they responded to their opportunity they would be "sowing to the Spirit"; if they refused it they would be "sowing to the flesh." And in either case they would reap: the sowing to the flesh would yield corruption; the sowing to the Spirit life everlasting. Let them not deceive themselves, for they could not deceive God. Really to sow one kind of seed while professing to sow another kind, was making sport of God.

And so in this light we may solemnly say that any professing Christian who nominally belongs wholly to God, yet whose life is a compromise between God and self, is guilty of the sin of mocking God. With this measure of the sanctuary, let us proceed to examine some of our ways.

It is a notorious fact that many of our great missionary societies are crying out loudly both for money and for workers. New fields of work are opening themselves to our view, and yet they cannot be occupied by the servants of the Cross for these two reasons. On the other hand there is an enormous amount of idle money reposing in Christian coffers. I say idle money deliberately, for I am not speaking of what is necessary for business purposes, or for daily life. No cause gains by extreme statements, but will anybody who knows anything at all about the matter, deny this assertion? Let some of the recently proved wills of deceased Christians be accepted as part proof. In one recent case a vast sum of money was left, one hundredth part of which only is willed to the work of God. Again, we have a number of idle people in the country—people who have more than sufficient to live upon, who have practically no ties, yet who remain at home in idleness, while voices call to them for the light. Let us say if—with this need, with these Christian professions,- and the inadequate response which is made to God's call—some of us are not guilty of mocking God? We need this measure of the sanctuary also to be applied to our personal inner lives before God. Are none of us guilty of offering prayers which it would not be convenient for us to have answered? Have we never fervently asked that God's will might be done in us, and then upon the occasion of the first reverse, rebelled against Him? Have we not also solemnly made awful dedications of ourselves to God, and afterwards, regretting our zeal, have withdrawn the offering? What is all this but making sport of God?

The same rule will show us some of our crookednesses in our dealings with men. We preachers need to be very careful lest we gather from the temples of idols "strange fire," which we would impose upon men as having come from the Divine altar. This is really mocking God, for it labels foreign stuff with his sacred mark.

To profess to love God while we hate our brother; to bring offerings to Him while the family quarrel remains unadjusted; to talk eloquently of charity and not to practise it—is undoubtedly "mocking God."

The truth is, that God is not real to the majority of men; if He were, men dare not treat Him as they do. To most, He is like an Oriental monarch whose kingdom is far away, and whose will is not of much consequence to Westerns. The grandiloquent talk of our time about Man has left no room for the realisation of God. But men will have to face Him sooner or later; would God it were sooner!

And we Christians need to know God better. If we bear the Name of Christ, it is that we may manifest his spirit too; the label only is mockery. Let our great and continual cry be, that we ourselves and all who profess the sacred Name, may go all lengths with God, as indeed we ought to do, and that none of us may sport with Him.

SCRIPTURE READERS IN IRELAND.

The claims of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland were very heartily advocated at the recent Clifton Conference.

Rev. Dr. Spence, of Belfast, who attended as an Irish deputation, said that the readers were directed to pay particular attention to the aged, the sick, and the poor of all denominations. Some of the agents were stationed in particular districts, and others carried on itinerating work, chiefly in the south and west, and in places largely Roman Catholic. They avoided controversy except in so far as setting forth the fulness and freeness of the Gospel of Christ brought them into conflict with sin and error. They went in and out quietly and lovingly in the Master's Spirit, and with the Master's message of good news for perishing sinners. Withhold the Bible, God's instrument of enlightenment and salvation, and in another generation Ireland may be as infidel as it has been Roman. Give Ireland the Gospel, put the pure Word of God in her hands, and get it into contact with her conscience and heart, and the next generation shall see her regenerated and free. Her trouble sprang from the blight of superstition and ignorance of the true God and Jesus Christ, the only remedy for which was the unadultered Word of God. On this faith the Scripture Readers' Society has acted with blessed results for over seventy years, and on this faith it still acts and intends to act.

Warm words of endorsement of the Society's operations were also spoken by Rev. J. Dunne, vicar of Leake; Rev. F. Jansen, vicar of Newton Solney, and Rev. James Ormiston, of Bristol. The secretary is Capt. J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

THE CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.

At this busy season many a busy and invalided worker is saying, in effect, "How many there are to whom I want to write, if only I could have letters provided, and ready for sending!" This need the Christmas Letter Mission undertakes to supply.

Besides the varied letters adapted for general distribution, entitled, "General Use (or 'G. U.') Letters," others are specially issued for the sick, for members of Bible and communicant classes, mothers (suitable for mothers' meetings), servants, nurses, the aged, children (profusely illustrated, and suitable for schools and teachers' gifts), infants, railway-men, postmen, policemen, cabmen, tram and omnibus drivers, lads and boys, etc. All the letters are bright with anecdotes, cuts, or Christmas borderings. Special envelopes, bearing the inscription, "A Christmas Letter for You," are issued, and Christmas and New Year's cards of exceptionally-attractive design and cheapness.

Thus the C.L. Mission is enabled to strengthen established work with seasonable appropriateness, and, at a time of special pressure, to furnish bright and attractive missives, needing only a signature, and, if desired, a few added lines, to constitute each letter a personal and individual greeting. Many a story of souls won for Christ, and of lives changed by means of Spirit-guided power accompanying this simple agency, brightens the records of the Christmas Letter Mission. Letters to the blind, in Moon and Braille type, have for some years been issued by the Mission.

Of a distribution of the "General Use" letters, a north-country secretary writes:—"A friend went to some of the ferrymen, scavengers, etc. She said that, though she was interested in the Mission before, she had little idea how these great rough men looked out for their letters; they literally beamed on her! They were going to be sent to their boys. One man, with tears, said, 'You know my boy always liked to have one: and, though he is far away, and I may never see him again, a letter may do him good. It may remind him of what you used to say to him about his soul.' One driver said, 'You remember I refused once to have a Christmas letter; but I did not know what I was doing, for they are the very best little thing I know of now! I like that "Peace on earth."' Many more thank me for the letters, and several speak of blessing received."

For clergymen, visitors, Sunday-school teachers and others anxious, in town or country, to utilise the scheme for their respective spheres, no formalities of enlistment are needed. A line to the printers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson, and Viney, 1, Creed-lane, E.C., will secure a complete catalogue, with report and list of secretaries, by return of post. Three stamps sent to the same will procure a "specimen," 1s. 6d. a "sample" packet. The report tells of the home-call of many oldest friends, and there is at present urgent need of help and co-operation.

City missionaries plead for nine thousand letters for the London tramcar, cab, and omnibus drivers, by whom the letters are eagerly prized. For hospitals, infirmaries, and workhouses, friends are needed who will organise supplies. County secretaries in all parts of the kingdom, and secretaries for India and other lands, send in requests for additional helpers. Invalids debarred from active employment may, through this channel, and by procuring, folding, and sending out the letters and cards, find unlimited openings for proclaiming the good news of Christmas.

Offers for co-operation and donations in aid will be thankfully received by Miss E. S. Elliott, Hon Sec. and Treas., 66, Mildmay-park, London, N., who will furnish full information.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN HUNGARY.—The Hungarian House of Magnates at its sitting on Monday deliberated for the fourth time on the Freedom of Worship Bill, and by 118 against 112 votes adopted the provision whereby it is rendered permissible to leave or join any communion, or to make declaration of not professing any particular creed. The House then passed by 120 to 113 votes the clause permitting conversion to Judaism, thus removing the last obstacle to Liberal legislation dealing with ecclesiastical affairs.—Reuter.

"WELL THAT IT WAS IN THY HEART."

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(2 Samuel vii.; 2 Chronicles vi. 8.)

With the assistance of Hiram, King of Tyre, a palace of cedar had been erected for David on Mount Zion. It was a remarkable contrast to the shelter of Adullam's cave, or even to any house he might have occupied during his stay at Hebron. It was a great contrast also to the temporary structure which served as a house for the ark. One day the impulse suddenly came to David to realise a purpose, the germ-thought of which had probably been long in his heart. Calling Nathan the prophet, now mentioned for the first time, he announced to him his intention of building a house for God. For the moment, the prophet cordially assented to the proposal; but in the quiet of the night, when he was more able to ascertain the thought of God, the word of the Lord came to him, and bade him stay the king from taking further steps in that direction.

The next day he broke the news to David with the utmost delicacy and gentleness. Indeed, in the account of his interview with the king, it is difficult to detect the sentence which contains the direct negative. The impression of the whole is that the offer was refused; but the refusal was wrapped up in so many assurances of blessing, in so much promise and benediction, that the king was hardly sensible of disappointment amid the rush of intense and overwhelming gladness which Nathan's words aroused. "Wilt thou build a house for God?—He will build thee an house."

I.—A CONCEPTION OF A NOBLE PURPOSE.

It was a great thought that came to David. It was in part suggested by the exigencies of the situation. After the ark had come to its new home, Asaph and others had been appointed to celebrate, and thank, and praise the Lord, and minister before Him (1 Chron. xvi. 4-37); and it is supposed that, at this period, the twenty-four courses of priests were appointed, an arrangement which lasted to the time of our Lord. It is also supposed that the Levites were now organised—twenty-four thousand to help the priests, four thousand as musicians and singers, four thousand as guards and watchmen; whilst the remainder were scattered throughout the land to teach the law, execute justice, and perform other public offices. An immense body of men was thus gathering around the ark and palace, for whom it was necessary to find suitable head quarters; and this no doubt partly urged David towards the fulfilment of his purpose. But surely there was a deeper reason; to show his love for God, to establish some monument of his reverence, devotion, and lasting gratitude.

It is thus, especially in young life, that great conceptions visit the soul; ideals of surpassing beauty cast a light forward upon the future; resolves of service for God and mar brace the soul as the air from the glaciers does the dwellers in the plains; and all life assumes a nobler aspect, and is set to a higher key. Secretly that lad resolves to be a preacher, missionary, or philanthropist; and that girl to be queen in an ideal home, or to go far hence to the zenanas of India. "I will do this great thing for God," the young heart says to itself, altogether heedless of sacrifice, tears, blood. The bugle-notes of lofty purpose ring out gladly, summoning the soul to noble exploit; and it is saved from the low levels which satisfy others by the immortal hope that has already gone forward to occupy the future.

Young people, never surrender your ideal, nor act unworthily of it, nor disobey the heavenly vision. Above all, when you come to the house of cedar, and God has given you rest, be more than ever careful to gird yourselves, and arise to realise the purpose that visited you when you kept your father's sheep.

II.—THE IDEAL IS NOT ALWAYS REALISED.

There is no definite "No" spoken by God's gentle lips. He presses his promises and blessings upon us, and leads us forward in a golden haze of love, which conceals his negative. Like David, we cannot point out the word or moment of refusal, we are lovingly carried forward from sentence to sentence in life's long speech of Divine care and bounty; and it is only in moments of review that we find that our purpose is not destined to work itself out just as we thought.

The plant is conscious of a great possibility throbbing within it; but somehow the days pass, and it does not come to a flower. The picture which is to gain immortality is always to be painted; the book which is to elucidate the problem of the ages is always to be written; the immortal song is always to be sung. The young man is kept at his desk in the counting-house instead of going to the pulpit; the girl becomes a withered woman, cherishing a faded flower; the king hands on to his son the building of the house.

III.—GOD EXPLAINS HIS REASONS AFTERWARDS.

What we know not now, we shall know hereafter. Years after David said to Solomon his son, not born at this time, "The word of the Lord came to me, saying, Thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars; thou shalt not build a house unto my Name" (1 Chron. xxii. 8). The blood-stained hand might not raise the temple of peace. It would have wounded David needlessly to have been told this at the time. It was enough to wrap up the Divine "No" in a promise of infinite blessing; but, as the years passed, the reason for God's refusal grew clear and distinct before him. Meanwhile, David possessed his soul in patience, and said to himself: God has a reason: I cannot understand it; but it is well.

Some day we shall understand that God has a reason in every "No" which He speaks through the slow movement of life. He would reveal it to us if we could bear it; but it is better not to pry into the mystery of his providence. He answers our question with another—"If I will that he tarry, what is that to thee?" But the time will come, probably in this life—certainly in the next—when the word of the Lord will come to us; and from the eminence of the years we shall descry why He led us as He did.

IV.—AN UNREALISED CONCEPTION MAY YET BE FRAUGHT WITH IMMENSE BLESSING.

Solomon completes the story:—"The Lord said unto David my father, Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house for my Name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart." David was a better man because he had given expression to the noble purpose. Its gleam left a permanent glow on his life. The rejected candidate to the missionary society stands upon a higher moral platform than those who were never touched by the glow of missionary enthusiasm. That a plant should have dreamt in some dark night of the possibility of flowering into matchless beauty, stamps it as belonging to a higher family than the moss that clings around the stump. "Thou didst well that it was in thine heart."

The martyrs in the apocalyptic vision behold a day when their wrongs will be avenged; but they are told to wait, since God's time had not come; in the meanwhile, white robes are given them. Their ideal was not yet, but it purified them, and bound them closer to the Christ.

God will credit us with what we would have been if we might. He that has the missionary's heart, though he be tied to an office-stool, is reckoned as one of that noble band; the woman at Zarephath, who did nothing more than share her last meal with the prophet, shall have a prophet's reward; the soul that thrills with the loftiest impulses, which the cares of the widowed mother or dependent relatives stay in fulfilment, will be surprised one day to find itself credited with the harvest which would have been reaped, had those seed-germs been cast on more propitious soil. In the glory David will find himself credited with the building of the temple on Mount Zion.

V.—DO THE NEXT THING.

The energy which David would have expected in building the temple wrought itself out in gathering the materials for its construction. "I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God . . . " (1 Chron. xxix. 2, etc.). If you cannot have what you hoped, do not sit down in despair and allow the energies of your life to run to waste; but arise, and gird yourself to help others to achieve. If you may not build, you may gather materials for him that shall. If you may not go down the mine, you can hold the ropes.

There is a fact in nature known as the law of the conservation of force. The force of the accumulating velocity of the falling stone passes into heat, of which some is retained by the stone, the rest passes into the atmosphere. No true ideals are fruitless: somehow they help the world of men. No tears are wept, no prayers uttered, no conceptions honestly entertained, in vain.

Somehow God makes up to us. He stooped over David's life in blessing. The promise made through Nathan was threefold: (1) That David's house should reign for ever; (2) that David's seed should build the temple; (3) that the kingdom of Israel should be made sure. As we read the glowing words, we feel that they could only be realised in Him whom Peter declares David foresaw. There is only One of the sons of men whose reign can be permanent, and his kingdom without end, who can bring rest to the weary sons of men, and build the true temple of God (Acts ii. 30). But how great the honour that He should be David's Son!

Then David the king went in and sat before the Lord, and he said, "Who am I, O Lord God . ." (2 Sam. vii. 18). We have no words to characterise the exuberant outflow of his soul in that transcendent hour. There was no complaint that the purpose of his heart was thwarted, amid the successive billows of glory that swept over his soul. Does God withhold the less, and not give the greater? Does He refuse the offer we make, and not bestow some heavenly gift that enriches for evermore? Dare to trust Him: sit before Him; and let his assurances comfort thee. Claim that He should do as He has said, and know that not one good thing shall fail: "For brass He will bring gold; for iron, silver; for wood, brass; and for stones, iron. The sun shall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory."

BAAKLEEN, LEBANON.—In an Occasional Paper, addressed to friends of the "John Wilson and Alexander Melville Memorial Schools," we read:—"It has been great joy year by year to note, even at a distance, the development of Christian agency at Baakleen. Every English Christian in the East is supposed to have our Master's gift of healing; and from the re-beginning of the school-work in 1883, when Miss Smith and her coadjutors made it their home, the healing art has been practised more or less, till now over 1600 patients are annually attended to. From miles around people come for relief, and opportunities abound for nurses, dispensers, and lady workers to speak to them the words of life while waiting for their turns to see the doctor. Two Arabic Sunday services, and one in English, are held at the house, and there are other meetings. Miss Smith much wishes for £1000, wherewith to endow what will be really a Cottage Hospital. She says, "I may say, without exaggeration, that were the dispensary closed, it would be felt throughout at least the half of Syria." Communications regarding the work, may be addressed to Miss E. Wilson Melville, Deaf and Dumb School, Llandaff.

THE PARABLE OF THE TARES.*

BY MR. G. H. PEMBER, M.A.

The Early Growth of Corruption.

There is a very prevalent fallacy that the nominal Church of Christ in its earlier days preserved intact, or nearly so, the teaching of the Apostles; and, therefore, that we ought implicitly to follow the interpretation, and receive the doctrines and principles, of the so-called "Fathers" of that time. And certainly, at first sight, the idea seems sufficiently reasonable; were there no considerations to influence our judgment in another direction, we should be compelled to admit its probability. In ordinary circumstances, those who heard the voice of the Apostles with their own ears, or lived in Apostolic or sub-apostolic times, would be more likely than others to have received the revelation of Jesus Christ in its purity, to have imbibed Apostolic principles, and to have been well-instructed in Apostolic interpretation.

Nevertheless, plausible as this suggestion may seem, we shall do well to pause before we accept it. For there are many considerations which point to a very different conclusion. And of these I will mention five, which will, probably, be found sufficient to dissipate all thought of exceptional purity in the early Church.

In the first place, let us remember that Christianity was utterly opposed to the pride and natural feelings of man. It bade him to become poor in spirit, to understand that in himself he was altogether evil, and that, if he were saved, it could only be through the merits of Another; it warned him that he must not seek great things for himself, no, nor even yield to the body's craving for indulgence or sloth, and that he must wait for his good things until the present age has passed away. On every side, in short, it deprived him of all that he naturally loved and clung to. And, such being the case, does it not seem likely that many even of those who felt the power of God's Word would, half unconsciously it may be, strive to retain some of their pleasant things, and would, consequently, be only too ready to listen to such plausible, but corrupting, teachers as would help them to do so.

Then, again, we must not forget the influence, incessant and ubiquitous, of Satan with his angels and demons—those determined foes of the real Church, able to blind men to the truth, to allure them away from that which is good, and to suggest modes of evading God's commands and of stifling conscience; quick also to present the temptations of carnal life in their most attractive forms.

Thirdly, the whole world was at the time steeped in Paganism, lying in the arms of the Wicked One, and accustomed to blend religion with all the pleasing lusts of the eyes and of the flesh, and to make it in every way subservient to the pride of life. Let us, then, try to conceive the prejudices formed by such an education, and stimulated by all the natural propensities of mankind, and by the never-wearying influences of the Tempter, and we shall have little difficulty in admitting that, in very many cases, the impression made by Christianity must have been, indeed, weak and blurred.

In the fourth place, the Lord Jesus Himself, so far from giving hope that his Church would increase and remain pure upon earth, declared that but few only would find the narrow way and enter in at the strait gate; that those who should receive the Kingdom would be but a little flock. Since, therefore, the nominal Church soon numbered millions, we are compelled to regard the greater part of her members as either deceivers or deceived; and thence to infer a fearful corruption of the visible body—an inference which is most certainly corroborated by the ecclesiastical history of the first four or five centuries. The Lord spoke, too, of various kinds of corrupters, of false Christs, false prophets, and wolves in sheep's clothing. And, finally, in his parables, He taught that, wherever the Word of God should be preached with effect, error would be immediately introduced by Satan, and must continue to thrive until the end of the age.

Lastly, the Epistles of the New Testament convey to us the historical fact that the predictions of the Lord were being fulfilled, and that the tide of corruption had already set in, even while the Apostles themselves were still alive. For almost all their letters allude to apostasy and false teaching in the Churches to which they were addressed. Nay, Paul declares that the very Mystery of Lawlessness had begun to work when he wrote to the Thessalonians, and that it should go on working, without interruption, until the Lawless One himself should be revealed, the man who is to be consumed by the breath of Christ's mouth and destroyed by the manifestation of his presence. There would thus be no time of purity for the visible Church upon earth from its commencement to its end.

All other writings of the first centuries may be made to tell the same sad story of spreading error and apostasy; and we soon find the nominal Church so changed in its constitution, its government, its aims, and its teachings, as to have lost all correspondence with the Scriptural ideal.

If, then, we be seeking for the truth, antiquity will fail us; there is no sure guidance to be obtained from the visible Church even in its earlier days. To the Law and to the Testimony! The Word of God, which amid all the changes of human thought and feeling abideth the same for ever, is alone able to reveal to us his will, and the way of salvation.

We are now to consider in detail a portion of that Word which warns us, perhaps more powerfully than any other passage, of the evil elements which would be found in the Church from the first sowing of the seed until the very day of the great Harvest—I mean the Parable of the Tares. And may the Spirit of the Lord so guide our meditations upon it that we may find instruction for our help in the present times of peril.

Now, you are doubtless aware that the Gospel of Matthew, which is emphatically the prophetic or dispensational Gospel, leads us gradually through the unbelief of the Jews to their rejection by the Lord of Glory; and that the crisis is narrated in the latter half of the twelfth chapter, being marked by the parable of the returning spirit of uncleanness, and confirmed by the incident which immediately follows. From that time the Kingdom of the Heavens is no longer said to be within reach; its immediate possession is never again offered to Israel. The chosen people had lost their opportunity; the long interval of discipline, foretold by Moses and explained to Daniel in the revelation of the Seventy Sevens, had been proved to be necessary; and, as we may see in the thirteenth chapter, the Lord proceeded forthwith to speak of another people, who should be his witnesses during the time of delay.

In the seven parables He foretold the history of this new testifying body, the Church, and indicated that it would never be seen alone upon earth, but always intermingled with, and often completely surrounded and hidden by, those who had neither part nor lot with it. To the end of the age it would appear outwardly, at the best, as a mixed multitude. And so, faults, and failures, and wrong teachings, and misdoings, and self-seekings, and worldly ambitions, would be ever prominent. In short, the system, or visible body, would utterly fail; but, during the whole time of its existence, the Lord would be drawing out of it the real Church, his own elect, and would be preparing them for a glorious destiny; for the time of their separation from evil should come at last; and when Christ, their Life, should appear, then should they also appear with Him in glory.

"THE CHRISTIAN" ALMANAC, 1896.

In a few weeks we shall be turning over another leaf in the book of time. We anticipate the opening of the fresh year by issuing, as a supplement to our present number, "The Christian" Almanac for 1896. We trust it may prove a helpful companion and monitor to all those of our readers who shall be privileged to enter upon and pass through the days that as yet lie hidden in the coming year. Whatever else these days may bring, they are certain to find us in circumstances where we shall need the guidance or comfort, the courage or counsel, that may be gained, by prayerful meditation, from the carefully-selected daily texts of Scripture.

The pictorial part of the Almanac again furnishes telling and suggestive lessons from ancient sacred lore, represented to the eye in careful artistic form. The pictures almost carry their own commentary on their face; but a sentence or two in elucidation of each may prove serviceable to some readers. Taking them in consecutive order, we remark that the first scene connected with Nebuchadnezzar's dream should have its special message in these latter days of much and increasing prophetic study. Maybe, if we had the clearer faith and the simpler life of the young Hebrew prince we should be granted some of his gift of vision as to the unrevealed secrets of history. The second picture carries us, not forward so much as back, to a memorable period in the experience of the Jewish people, when their desire to build a house for the united worship of Jehovah was on the eve of being realised. Yet, it may carry our thoughts onward, in gladsome anticipation, to the time when the spiritual building of God's elect shall be completed, and the topstone shall be laid with hallowed songs of rejoicing and praise to the Great Builder. Picture three may fittingly remind those who sigh and cry, like Nehemiah of old, for the condition of the Church, and who desire its breaches to be repaired; that the King to whom they come with their petition is mightier than any earthly monarch, however absolute; and that He is perfect in wisdom, love, and power.

Many a tried and suffering saint, passing through the furnace of affliction, will gather comfort from the assurance conveyed by picture four, that the trial of their faith, and their patient endurance, will work for them an exceeding and eternal weight of glory. No thoughtful reader can miss the lesson for to-day of the centre picture, "Nehemiah and the Sabbath-breakers." Never was there greater need, surely, to testify boldly and plainly, like the ancient prophet, against the pleasure-loving and God-forgetting spirit that threatens, even in Christian England, to secularise and degrade the Day of Rest and holy service. Zechariah's prophetic vision of the man with the measuring line, in picture six, may perhaps be variously interpreted; but it must, at any rate, speak of God's minute and specific care over his Church, and of his promise, "I will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her."

The story of Haman is one that has often repeated itself in history, since the day when a righteous Nemesis overtook the treacherous son of Agag, and he was hanged on the gallows that he had prepared for another. The principles on which God's righteous kingdom is based are eternal, though their public vindication is not always so manifest as in this tragic narrative. In picture eight we have another vivid glimpse of the anxious and faithful watchman, Nehemiah; successors are not unneeded to-day. While it may be difficult to discover a modern counterpart for the scene depicted in the closing picture, we can truly say that no passage in the Old Testament could have a clearer application to God's watchmen of to-day than the message that came to the prophet Ezekiel at the close of his week of sorrowful humiliation. May God send to his Zion, in these latter days, men as willing to wait on God for their orders, and as faithful in the performance of his command when it is [illegible] revealed.

We doubt not this series of speaking illustrations will suggest many profitable thoughts and lessons, besides those we have roughly sketched.

COLLEGE LIFE.—I.

By CUTHBERT McEVOY, B.A.,
Classical Tutor of Regent's Park, New, and Hackney Colleges.

I.—ON THE THRESHOLD.

You enter college to fit yourself for the ministry. You are to be a quickening influence in society—in the words of Jesus Christ, the salt of the earth. In due time the responsibility will be yours of being recognised in a special way as representatives of the Christian conscience on all matters that go to make up life. On matters spiritual, and political, and social, and literary, and artistic—on all these, if Christianity is to have its full effect, ministers of Christ must pronounce what they believe to be Christ's verdict. You will have to arrest the decay of society by fostering in yourself and stimulating in others all those tendencies which by a practised and consecrated intelligence you perceive promote a vigorous life. Judgment, patience, and self-discipline are necessary in order to discriminate wisely and to prevent a rash support of mere chicanery on the one hand, and a hasty condemnation of real good on the other.

For the proper exercise of these qualities there is needed an alertness of mind and an eagerness of interest to seize on new subject matter for assimilation or rejection; otherwise the judgment will be no more than a rusty weapon in your armoury, and patience and self-discipline will never be put to the test by a continual and sober balancing of facts. For I have known students with capacities for judgment and patience who have never harboured a spark of this Divine eagerness; but, shrouded in perpetual hebetude of interest, they have deadened their class, deadened their teacher, added a deadening influence to their college, and at last gone forth upon their life-work of deadening a congregation. Such men in the pulpit are like rubble in the wells of truth.

From the day that you enter college your quickening duties have begun. By your spiritual life, by your method, by your diligence, by your interests, by your social gifts, by your example in all things you contribute a plus or minus quantity to the college life. You cannot help contributing. You are as much part of the college as the hand is part of the body: if the hand has lost a finger the whole body suffers; though you are perfect in all other virtues, if in one you are defective by reason of that one deficiency the college is maimed.

The necessities of college life often force you to suspend the exercise, but never to quench the beginning, of your sympathies. Your experience has, perhaps, been very limited: you have lived a valley life, shut in by high mountains which you have never scaled. College life is to give you a chance of climbing—a chance of strengthening your limbs upon the steeps; it points out many flowers by the way which you have never seen before; it indicates a further horizon than you have ever yet known; but always it says until the end, "Not yet." Your sympathies are to be awakened. The land of promise is clearly shown. But the time for possession is not yet come.

The time will come and all too soon when your powers of sympathy, however varied, will be called into vigorous use. Mouth to your mouth, eyes to your eyes, hands to your hands, the dead world must be revivified. New sympathies are to be cultivated. They are like new languages. Their acquisition affords us instantly possibilities of closest communion with a whole race of men whom we could not otherwise understand. The unsympathetic will exchange unintelligible signs with their fellows and turn from them convinced that their wants can never be comprehended and their feelings never appreciated. All knowledge should be looked upon as opening new channels of communication with our kind and on that account be eagerly embraced.

There has been, and in some quarters still is, an idea that wide knowledge and broad sympathies estrange the mind from interest in the central figure of Jesus Christ, and give pre-eminence to what is less; through this malefica superstitio a thousand doors have been shut against Christ where but for them he would long since have entered in. The salt must be intermingled with that it is to purify, not held aloof.

Lastly, if college-life is entered on in a proper spirit it must, sooner or later, create a deep sense of humility, and an increasing desire to do our work well. For as we proceed we recognise that it is but an infinitesimally small corner of the continent of knowledge on which we are engaged, that of all knowable things we know very few, and even those only superficially. And while the prospect opens around us in wider distances at every step, and we perceive that the most we can do will not be much, we are filled with a strong desire to do our little well for fear it may be nothing; and the peace of the great view enters the soul, and our work is characterised by work's best qualities of intensity and calm.

If, then, by your college life your powers of thinking have been strengthened; if your sympathies have been extended and deepened; if you have comprehended something of the principle of membership one of another, and of what that principle involves—in proportion as you have achieved these results, in so far you have attained some of the chief ends of college life.

STRIPES AND STARS.

Lines found under the pillow of an American soldier.

I lay me down to sleep
With little thought of care,
Whether my waking find
Me here or there.

A loving burdened head,
That only asks to rest,
Unquestioning upon
A loving breast.

My good right hand forgets
Its active cunning now;
To march the weary march
I know not how.

I am not eager, bold,
Nor strong—all that is past,
I'm ready not to do,
At last, at last.

My half-day's work is done,
And this is all my part—
I give a patient God
My patient heart;

And grasp his banner still,
Though all its blue be dim;
These stripes no less than stars
Lead after Him.

MADAGASCAR.—Mrs. Peill, wife of Rev. J. Peill, L.M.S. missionary, writing from Vatomandry, on September 20, says:—"I have been at this wicked coast town for three months and a half, and may yet have as long time to practise patience. It would have been intolerable but for the blessed privilege of holding forth the Word of Life to the few that are willing to listen. The natives are very dark-minded, belonging to one of the most drunken and licentious tribes in the island. Rev. T. T. Matthews is here with his wife, and preaches in the Hova church every Sunday."

THE POLYTECHNIC LANTERN SERVICES were commenced last Sunday at the Princess's Theatre, and were conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix. Long before the time of opening a stream of people, marshalled by the constables on duty, extended for a long distance down Oxford-street. The crowd was so great that it was necessary to open one door only. This large theatre was filled within a few minutes, and thousands had to be turned away from the doors. The subject of Mr. Nix's address was taken from the Acts of the Apostles, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." The interest of the vast congregation was sustained through the whole of the proceedings. Arrangements have been made for these services to be continued through the winter.

CONFERENCE HALL, STRANGEWAYS.

MISSIONARY DAY.

The fourth annual Missionary Day was held on Tuesday, October 22, and proved, like its predecessors, full of interest and blessing. It began at 9 a.m. with a missionary breakfast, attended by a large number of clergymen and ministers. At the close Dr. Maclaren gave an earnest and striking address, enforcing the old truth that the missionary spirit is the spirit of Christ, and that those brought into loving union with Him cannot but be missionaries either at home or abroad. This was followed at 10.30 by a very earnest prayer-meeting; one of the features of the day was the spirit of prayer which pervaded it from beginning to end.

At the opening meeting in the Conference Hall the address was given by the Bishop of Carlisle. He said the Acts of the Apostles were being renewed in our own day. They wanted to look all over the world, and to remember that it was in the heart of God that his Gospel should be known to all men, wherever they might be. The bishop was followed by Rev. John Wilkinson, of Mildmay, who told of the wonderful openings the Lord is making for the New Testament amongst the Jews all over the world. Miss Roberts, lately returned from China, and Dr. Bruce, of Persia, closed the forenoon meeting with accounts of work which had come under their own eyes.

In the afternoon Mrs. Grimké told how she had been led to begin her work of distributing text cards, and how greatly God had blessed it. Rev. Egerton R. Young, from North America, gave an account of work amongst the Red Indians, which thrilled the audience. Mr. Montague Beauchamp, of the China Inland Mission, also spoke earnestly.

The six o'clock meeting was to take leave of Miss Eleanor Dodson, M.D., who is being sent forth as a medical missionary from the Strangeways Conference Hall to North India. Miss Dodson, who spoke with much earnest simplicity, explained that she was going to the North India School of Medicine at Ludhiana, a comparatively new undertaking, but one which filled a long-felt want. It was attached to no particular missionary society, but had the support and sympathy of all, its object being to train qualified native assistants for medical missionary work amongst the women of India. Miss Dodson was commended in prayer by Prebendary Macdonald. She sails on Oct. 31st.

Later in the evening the hall was crowded, becoming at its close a consecration meeting, where God's presence and power were much realised. Amongst those who spoke were Mr. C. T. Studd and Mr. F. W. Crossley. We doubt not seed was sown which will bear fruit in the near future. Already handsome contributions have been sent to the missions represented on the day. L. K. S.

QUIET DAYS IN EAST LONDON.—Mr. Albert Head reports that £196 3s. were contributed at the recent meetings in the Great Assembly Hall, Oct. 10. and subsequently; the expenses up to date total £101 18s. 2d. The balance will be distributed amongst the following workers in the East End;—Mr. F. N. Charrington, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Miss Macpherson, Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Geo. Holland, Mr. Wilkinson (Jews), and Miss Okell (Girls' Home).

BOURNEMOUTH.—The quarterly meeting of the Missionary Prayer Union was held at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Sunday, October 20. The report of the secretary showed a slight falling off in the number of members, owing to removals from the town. The amount to be sent up to the Baptist Missionary Society will be nearly £25, which includes special donations towards a medicine chest for Mr. Hale, the missionary supported by the Union in Agra. Pastor Wainwright read a letter from Mr. Hale, which told of workers laid low through sickness, of the mercy of God in restoring others to health, and steady progress in the work, and of bright hopes for the future. At the close of the evening service, a clergyman handed to the pastor a donation on behalf of the medicine-chest.

SALVATION ARMY RESCUE WORK.

We extract the following from the report in last week's War Cry of an interview with Mrs. Harding, who superintends the Army rescue work in the Piccadilly region :—

"Some people seem to think, Mrs. Harding, that rescue work is comparatively useless, for they say that for every dozen girls taken off the Piccadilly streets, there are as many waiting to take their place."

"I wish they were 'waiting.' If it were a question of this dozen or that, we might hesitate; but look you, as long as Self rules men, there is no 'waiting' about it. The dozen referred to may die in the gutter for all they care, but they will move earth and heaven to bring others into the market. If this were not so, why don't half of them keep at home with their wives?"

"What is your idea about this Piccadilly Vice Market, Major? Why has this particular spot been chosen for hell's carnival?"

"The chief attraction would be found in the proximity to the theatres, music-halls and clubs. As everyone knows, quite a number of ballet-girls find their way to the Piccadilly streets every year; in fact, the men make a practice of visiting the music-halls and theatres for the express purpose of enticing the last young girl who has come to London fresh from the country.

"At first these girls are well paid, and life opens to them like a summer's day, but it is not long before they are made to 'reap the whirlwind.' First one man casts them off, and then another, until they are compelled to take to the streets, and are completely at the mercy of the landlady, who does not scruple to turn them into the streets without decent clothes if their rent is not paid. Sometimes people wonder what the girls do with all the money their sin brings in, but it all goes to the publican, landlady, and dressmakers. 'The lust of the eye' plays a large part in the inferno, and the girl who loses her fine clothes has lost half her capital.

"Gilded sin always commands the highest price. Men hate to see the effects of sin in their victims. They are the death's heads at their feasts. So the paint pot is called into requisition, and art is used to cover up the serpent's trails."

"You have been several years storming this stronghold of Satan; do you feel that any impression has been made on the people you are seeking to help?"

"Decidedly! The women have been convinced that we love them and seek their good, many have responded to our efforts and are to-day living honest lives, but even those who have not the moral courage to leave their sin, respect us, and show it by the way they take our part against the men.

"Then there is great improvement among the police, who content themselves now with moving us on indiscriminately here and there. We come across one with a special gift for moving the wheat, but as a rule they are impartial in their favours."

"How would you classify the girls you meet with on Piccadilly?"

"Something like this :—Actresses, ballet girls, barmaids, shop assistants, governesses, and a sprinkling of servant girls. In time, however, they all sink to the same level, and the quantity they drink has much to do with the rapidity with which they reach the gutter."

"Still, Mrs. Harding, don't you feel very discouraged about these girls?"

"Not one bit; but I'll tell you what I do feel discouraged about, and that is the men. No conscience, no heart, and no shame. Let me give you an instance of this. Only the other night a City gentleman touched me on the shoulder at one o'clock in the morning on Piccadilly streets and said in an oily voice, 'I thought I would like to give you a little encouragement by telling you how a lady I was with last night took your part when something was said against you.'

"Only think of it? 'Encourage me,' I said, 'I wonder you dare use such a word when your very presence on these streets is in itself a discouragement. What about your influence, what are you doing with that? How are you going to meet the lives you have ruined by your viciousness?'"

"He slunk away like the sorry creature that he was. Yes, that's the discouragement—men are such cowards.

"Where are the rescued men to-day I want to know? Why don't they go to their brethren? When a woman gets rescued she invariably goes straight away like the woman of old and says, 'Come, see a Man who has saved me, and can save you, too,' but not so with the men."

Instances of cruel deception and heartless betrayal might be heaped up in evidence of Mrs. Harding's verdict with regard to society men, but space forbids. If folks would only be at the trouble of doing a little personal inspection of the work, the valley of indecision would soon be left behind, and money and influence be devoted to the cause of Christ.

DR. BAEDEKER IN RUSSIA.

By God's gracious help I have once again accomplished my journey through the Eastern part of Russia as far as to the Siberian frontier, and through the Southern part as far as to the Persian frontier; and it has been my privilege whilst carrying the light of the Gospel into the prisons, to come in touch with many of our banished brethren, the Stundists, and to minister to them spiritual consolation and material relief. They bear their sufferings nobly, in patient submission to Him who ruleth over all, and without a murmur against the authorities who have the rule over them.

At Gerüsi, near the Persian frontier, a little town about 5500 feet above the level of the sea, surrounded by high mountains, some forty to fifty families are kept in banishment, under close supervision. The native population of the place consists of Tartars and Armenians, whose languages our brethren do not understand, and who can show them no sympathy. The country in the immediate neighbourhood is stony and barren, the native population find employment at other distant places, but the Stundists are not allowed to leave the place. Thus they are condemned to idleness, and unless supplies were sent to them they would not be able to live. The Government makes a small allowance to those who are poor, but it is not sufficient to live on. To some of these banished brethren the question has been asked whether they wish to emigrate, as on the condition that they will never return to Russia passports would be given them. But of all whom I have come in contact with, only two have expressed a wish to leave Russia for good; the others will rather suffer a while, feeling assured that liberty will eventually be granted to the Gospel and its ministry. Their prayers for the Emperor and his Government are unceasing and fervent. But, as in every time of persecution in the history of the Church, a sifting as well as a confirming effect is seen. Some who have been drawn to follow a human leader, and who are not personally fixed on the Rock of Ages, are swept away, and some have returned to the Greek Church, whilst others have been more established in their faith and stand immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. The persecution of Stundists has not ceased, and their sufferings call for real sympathy in prayer and material support from all members of the Body of Christ.

There are in the Russian Empire many sects who have separated themselves from the Greek Church on various grounds, in many cases not at all Scriptural grounds, and often the whole are thrown together and treated alike. The so-called Stundists are Christians who base their position on the Word of God, many of them being by conviction Baptists, others meeting like Open Brethren, again others like Friends, but all take the Word for their guide; whereas the Duchabores, Tolstoyists, Chlisti, and various other sects are the followers of men who have themselves no solid basis in the Word of God. Many Duchabores whom I met in prison refused to accept the New Testament offered; they profess to be led by the Spirit, saying "the letter killeth." They refuse to obey all authority, yet they willingly submit to the ruling of their leader.

Russia is yet virgin soil for the Gospel; the seed sown in various ways springs up, and brings an abundant harvest. It is the Word of God that cannot fail to bring forth much fruit. In this vast empire things move and develop slowly but surely. It is my very great joy to be allowed to drop the seed in God's furrows, and to let Him give rain and sunshine to make it fruitful, and by and by to let the Lord of the harvest rejoice over the sheaves brought in. Just now the gracious Lord (Oh, how He loveth the people!) gives me opportunities to sow the precious seed amongst the dear Lettish people, and the sight of crowded gatherings and intensely eager faces is a joy which only heaven itself can excel. My route lies still northward—Dorpat, Reval, Helsingfors, St. Petersburg. It is always an act of self-denial to turn away from hungry people, and to go to another city, yet the Word ministered will do its certain work by the Holy Spirit, independently of man's help. It is an act of self-denial also to leave the fields that are white for the harvest and to return to a land which is over-abundantly supplied with labourers. Oh, that many of my brethren were ambitious to carry the Gospel into the dark—yea, into the very darkest places of the earth, where sin abounds. England and Scotland might bring forth a far more abundant harvest if the land were allowed to have its Sabbath, and not seed sown upon seed, and the soil trodden hard by the very feet of the sowers.

Pray for Russia, pray for the Czar, pray for the people, and "give ye them to eat."—Yours ever sincerely, F. W. Baedeker.

WESSON RIO HARBOUR WORK.

Already Mr. Oscar Schmidt, who left this country in August last as superintendent of the above Mission, has been some time at work in the great port of Rio de Janeiro. Of late the work has been confined to the Bethel ship purchased some time back by two members of the committee.

Friends of this good work may be interested to learn that, besides other repairs, the Bethel ship requires a new boat (there being only a flat-bottomed one at present), an anchor, etc., and also an awning. These are all necessaries to enable the good work among the sailors to be carried on. The Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, have kindly assisted in this matter.

SERMON-LANE MISSION.—This centre of manifold activities, originating in sympathetic Christian care for the spiritual and bodily necessities of the neighbouring poor and their children, continues to afford scope for the efforts of its superintendent, Mr. W. Harry Dawe (54, Liverpool-road, Islington, N.), and the band of zealous and united helpers, whom he has gathered around him. It is encouraging to find that the work has the sympathy and co-operation of surrounding churches. There is abundant reason to hope that steadily but surely the influence of the Divine word is spreading in this needy district, through the varied social and spiritual agencies maintained by the Mission. In theory, the Church of Christ knows no distinctions, but in practice social circles are found everywhere, and it is, therefore, no great wonder if the poor gather where they feel least the inequality of earthly position.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 3.

"Shall let go the Living Bird into the Open Field."—Lev. xiv. 7.

That is thou, O trembling soul. Thine iniquities have come between thee and freedom, like the bars of a cage to a bird caught from its native woods and imprisoned. See the quickly-palpitating breast, beaten against the bars, pining for the open field—is not that an apt symbol of thy yearning for deliverance from the tyranny and thrall of sin?

We are made free from the penalty of sin through the blood of Jesus.—One of the birds was killed in an earthen vessel over running water—here is symbolised the precious death of thy Saviour, in the earthen vessel of his human nature, and in connection with the living power of the Holy Spirit, which bore it forth into all the world. We have been dipped into the crimson tide and are freed, as the leper was from the taint of his disease. He might go freely among men, and into the holy tabernacle, and we may mingle with the saints, and enter the very presence-chamber of God.

We are made free from the power of sin through the grace of the risen Saviour.—He has passed into the resurrection life, and we in Him. We are made free from the thraldom of evil by identification with the risen Lord; and the Holy Spirit, coming into our hearts from Jesus, makes us possessors of the privileges which are ours in Christ. (Rom. viii. 3, 4). Fly, happy soul, to thy nest in the heart of God.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 4.

"He that Toucheth...shall be Unclean."—Lev. xv. 7.

There were doubtless great sanitary reasons for many of these enactments. This is one of the greatest sanitary codes in existence. God made religious duty enforce regulations which promoted the physical health and well-being of his people. But there were deeper reasons yet. The whole of these arrangements were contrived to teach profound lessons to us all of the nature and evil of sin.

The unclean soul spreads uncleanness.—Whatever the ceremonially unclean touched, used, or sat on, was polluted. Even those who came into contact with him were defiled. How wary all true Israelites must have been of their associates, lest they should contract pollution! Let us adopt similar precautions, and not voluntarily associate with the unholy or unclean. And if our business calls us into their daily company, let us seek cleansing for ourselves as we leave it, so that any adhering germs of evil may be removed.

The urgent demand for holiness.—The natural processes of life are not necessarily clean, because they are natural. The foul heart may vitiate the most natural functions. We must bring the thought of God into the simplest, the commonest, and the most secret acts. Nothing is outside his jurisdiction. His grace, and blood, and cleansing, are always requisite, and ever ready. Amidst and after every act, incident, and episode of life, we should be quiet before God, considering if we have aught to confess, and asking to be ever kept from staining our white robes.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 5.

"Unto a solitary Land."—Lev. xvi. 22.

This chapter is full of Christ in his most precious death for men. Its various aspects are set forth under these diverse sacrifices, as light reflected from the many facets of a diamond. We think now only of the live goat which was led away into the wilderness. We see in it:—

Christ made sin.—With both hands Aaron, in symbol, transferred all the iniquities, sins, and transgressions of the people to the head of the goat, which became so identified with them that it was accounted an unclean thing, and even he who led it away must needs wash his clothes and bathe. This is what the apostle means when he says that Jesus was made sin for us. Our sins met in Him; were assumed by Him; He stood before God as though, in some mysterious sense, they were his own.

Christ bearing sin away.—As the goat went away, the eyes of the people followed it, and they were taught to believe that sin was no longer reckoned to them. Aaron put off his linen garments and arrayed himself in festal robes, and came forth to bless the congregation. What rejoicing must have broken from the crowds! So Jesus has borne away the sin of the world into a land of forgetfulness. God has blotted the sins of his people from the record of his memory. "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more."

Christ's loneliness.—He was alone in his mediatorial work. None could bear Him company. Loved ones might stand beside his cross, or in after ages suffer, as He did, deaths of martyrdom; but none could do what He did as the sacrifice for sin. Ah, how lonely He was! Even the Father seemed to have forsaken Him! Before the universe, in that dread hour, the Saviour stood in awful, unapproachable solitude!

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 6.

"The Life of the Flesh is in the Blood."—Lev. xvii. 11.

There is probably a deeper truth in these words than man has ever fathomed. The R.V. marg. translates life, soul. Why that reverence for blood; that horror when it is unrighteously shed and gurgles forth; the perpetual reference of Scripture to the blood of Christ? Probably the answer to such questions would be given, if we perfectly understood the affirmation of this remarkable verse.

When Jesus gave his blood, He gave his life, the life of his holy soul.—We are accustomed often to speak about the blood of Christ, by which we mean the life of Jesus, shed forth for us substitutionally and sacrificially. The sinner takes this blood, this life, in his hands, and presents it to God as his plea. Does the broken law require satisfaction, homage, acknowledgment? Here it is in this priceless, pure, and sinless blood, never infected by pollution, never heated by passion. Let this shed life atone for thee! "God be propitious (because of the sacrifice on the altar) to me the sinner."

When we are bidden drink his blood, it is of his life that we partake.—At the table of our Lord we symbolically drink of his blood; in doing this we accept his death, and give up our self-life to the cross.

"Therefore shall ye keep my Charge."—Lev. xviii. 30.

Literal obedience was God's perpetual demand of his chosen people. Why should we claim to be exonerated from an equally exact obedience to the commands of Jesus? And yet how few of us do exactly as He has bidden? Let us take some tests.

The Lord's Supper is a case in point. In the present day there are many who, from year's end to year's end, never go to the Table, though Jesus said that his disciples were to do it in remembrance of Him.

Baptism is another. Christians shelter themselves under the excuse that it is not essential, and therefore may be omitted. But what do they mean by essential? It is not essential to salvation, because that has been achieved by our Lord; but it may be essential to show that we love Him, that we have a genuine faith, that we are ready to take Him as King. Surely a soldier is not freed from obeying the command of his officer because he cannot see it to be essential?

Going to law is another. If there is one thing clearer than others, it is the reiterated charge of the New Testament that we should rather suffer wrong than avenge ourselves. Yet how many professing Christians will this day issue a County Court summons against defaulters.

Forgiveness is another. But there are hundreds of Christ's professing followers who are at feud with their relatives or fellow-members.

Let us remember the imperative tone of these words, and ask God to work in us to will and to do of his good pleasure.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8.

"I am the Lord your God."—Lev. xix. 3.

This is the refrain of the entire chapter; count how many times it recurs. Evidently the thought of God should ring out in our lives, as a perpetual chime.

Sometimes as an inspiration to duty. We should seek to be holy because He is holy. "Imitators of God." Or as a remonstrance against yielding to temptation. Lo, God is in this place, his pure eye is upon me, how can I do this great wickedness? Or as an incentive to liberality. We can afford to be generous to the poor and hireling, because we are children of so great and rich a parent. Or as a reason for mercy or gentle kindness. How can we act otherwise than lovingly, when his love encompasses us with its persuasive bands.

Thus the perpetual consciousness of God becomes the source of holy and happy living. But how may it become ours? We may make many resolutions only to break them. We forget after our most definite purposing. There is no help but in the Holy Spirit, whose office it is to bring all things to our remembrance.

In the morning let the thought of God's presence with you in your secret closet sink well into your heart. Wait till his presence is made real to you, and you cry, Lo, God is here. Then entrust yourself to the Holy Spirit, asking Him to keep you in the current of the love and thought of God. Reckon on Him to do so. Thus we shall live in his fear and love all the day long.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9.

"I have separated you from the Peoples, that ye should be Mine.—Lev. xx. 26.

"Separate me Barnabas and Saul," said the Holy Ghost. And in after days Paul spoke of himself as being separated unto the Gospel of God. It is a mistake to make the act of separation our own resolve and deed. We shall inevitably drop back unless God has come into the question, and has set us apart for Himself.

We are needed for a specific purpose. God can bless men only through men. As once he used the Jews to be the medium of communicating his truth to men, so now He is eager to use his Church, if only she will allow Him to deliver her from the taint of sin and the world, and to procure her for a peculiar possession unto Himself.

We are required to satisfy God's heart. He needs love for love. Throughout the world He seeks for those who can afford Him pleasure, as his enclosed gardens, his sealed fountains, his peculiar treasure.

This separation is effected by the Holy Ghost, and is referred to in the word "sealing." He hath sealed us unto the day of redemption.

What an honour is this. To be for God Himself: to do his errands, to fulfil his behests and give Him pleasure! Rejoice greatly when God says, "Thou art mine." We also can respond humbly and say, "Thou also art mine."

Let us be glad, if we know that the oil of separation has come on our heads, and let us walk worthily of our high calling, separated to the Holy Ghost!

NOVEMBER 10.

Saul Chosen King—1 Sam. x. 17-27.

Golden Text, Psalm xcvii. 1.

Our lesson takes us again to Mizpah, a hill near Ramah, where Samuel abode, and situated some four or five miles from Jerusalem. At Mizpah, Samuel had assembled the people some twenty years before (vii. 5), on the occasion of their repentance and return to God. The memory of that gathering, and of the victory at Ebenezer which followed, must have been present to the people now. They are gathered "unto the Lord" (17), for Samuel desires that their sin in demanding a king shall be fully understood. The true character of all our actions is only understood when they are brought into the light of God's presence.

Samuel's conduct in calling this assembly is most noble and heroic. The demand for a king was a gross insult to him, and an expression of basest ingratitude. As God's prophet he had devoted himself to their interests, and had laid down the lines upon which their glorious destiny was to be realised. It was no easy thing to find himself, when an old man, set aside, and to have the work committed into other hands. Yet he completely surrenders his own feeling, and gives himself to the work of carrying out the wishes of the people. He was too great a man to think only of his own personal ambition.

The occasion of this assembly was to elect the king (17-25). Three things are in these verses: 1. The sinfulness of the people's demand. They have asked what they believe will be to their advantage. They saw that Samuel was growing old, and that his sons were not qualifying to succeed him (viii. 1-5); there were continual jealousies and strifes among the tribes, which it was thought a central government would heal; they were threatened with an invasion from the Ammonites beyond Jordan (xii. 12); and they were unlike other nations (viii. 19, 20). Were not these sufficient reasons for obtaining their desire? We are not true judges of what is best for us. To give us every foolish thing we desire would be the greatest possible unkindness. Samuel's message shows that their apparently innocent demands means a rejection of God (18, 19). Their whole history was a record of God's works of power on their behalf. Had He ever failed them? Had the nations, whom they desired to imitate, been able to withstand Him? They could have no better King than God. Yet they were forsaking Him for an arm of flesh!

2. The Election (19-21).—Already their king was chosen by God; for though the people had rejected Him, He would not reject them. By a remarkable chain of providential incidents He had brought Samuel and Saul together at Zuph (ix. 5), near the tomb of Rachel, about a mile north of Bethlehem. The act of anointing had already taken place (x. 1). When the lot is taken the result falls upon the same person, for "the disposal of the lot is of the Lord."

3. The Proclamation of the King (22-25).—Tell the story of Saul's modesty in concealing himself among the stuff (21); of the people's renewed enquiry, and the Lord's reply (22); of the discovery of the king, and his commanding appearance (23), and of the enthusiastic acclamations of the people (24). Up to this point the character of Saul seems to promise well for his future reign. How much better his career would have been if he had maintained to the end the modesty which was so conspicuous in him now!

The conclusion of the assembly showed that there was a division among the people (26, 27). Saul returned to his home at Gibeah, in the tribe of Benjamin, four miles north of Jerusalem, and about two miles from Ramah. With him he took the nucleus of his army, "the host" (R.V.), whose hearts had been touched by God, and who were loyal to their king. But all were not so. A few were "sons of Belial"—of worthlessness, who treated him with contempt. Possibly they disliked the tribe to which he belonged, and did not care to follow a king of whose previous prowess they had heard nothing. Saul's treatment of their opposition seemed to denote his faith in God. He never answered them. God had put him in the position of king God should vindicate him.

These two classes represent the followers and rejectors of Another and a Greater King. True followers have had their hearts touched by the power of God, and are united as a band with the one purpose of having Jesus acknowledged as King. Rejectors despise Him because they see no beauty in Him, and know not his power to save (Mark vi. 3). To which do we belong?

THE BOTTLE OF WINE.

I want to tell you about something that happened last Christmas, and which will help us all to realise better what is the use of signing the pledge or joining the Band of Hope. I know some of you think that it does not signify much; but little Janie W—— found that it did.

She is the daughter of a poor blacksmith who lives near my home, and her mother died last year; so Janie became a comfort to her father, and learned to keep house cleverly. When Christmas drew near, John W—— went to pay his account at the grocer's, and the shopkeeper was so pleased at getting his money promptly and honestly that he gave John a present of a bottle of wine. The blacksmith did not care much for spirits, but he carried home the bottle, and placed it in the cupboard. Some days later John returned to his house after a hard spell of work, and called to his little girl, who generally met him at the door; but no Janie answered. The fire had gone out, and everything looked dreary and deserted.

Poor John searched the kitchen all in vain, and then turned to go upstairs, wondering where the child could be. Then a cry of horror came from his lips, for there lay Janie senseless and helpless, her breathing heavy, her limbs quite powerless.

The father lifted her in his arms, and carried her to bed; he poured water on her forehead, and tried every means to restore her to life.

By this time his sons had come in, and he was just going to send for the doctor when Janie's eyes opened and her lips moved.

"Thank God!" cried John, "she won't die now. What happened to you, my darling?"

Janie could not speak for some moments, but at last she whispered, "The bottle, father, the bottle poisoned me!"

John drew back with a shudder; his little girl had been intoxicated, not ill!

She had found the wine when preparing supper, and tasted it, as children will taste anything strange. Then, being thirsty, she took a good drink, and soon lost consciousness.

"I'll never let another drop of liquor into my house as long as I live!" cried John, and I hope he has kept his word. No wonder he was shocked at seeing what real poison alcohol is, by its effects on his child.

Now I want you to notice some things about Janie's state when John found her. First, she could not come to her father, even though he called her. Did you ever see a drunken man or woman yet who was on the way to our Heavenly Father? Does not every step towards the public-house and every glass of liquor bear such people further away from Him, and nearer to the great enemy of us all, who loves to see men drown themselves in destruction and perdition?

Second, she could not hear her father. I have read of a man who was in a house on fire, and might have escaped, but, though his friend called again and again, he never heard; he was quite drunk, and perished in the flames. Do you remember little Samuel, who caught the sound of God's voice so quickly as he lay on his bed, and said, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth?" I am sure when people deaden their ears by drink they cannot hear the voice of our Lord, and, what is still sadder, they do not care to listen to it. Satan has caught them in his net, and though you may break through its fine meshes easily in youth, you will find them grow stronger and stronger, like great ropes at last, if you do not free yourselves, at once and for ever, from the habit of taking spirits, which fastens the first knot.

Third, Janie could not see her father. God says, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved all the ends of the earth," but those who become slaves to drink bend their eyes downward, not upward. Their steps are so unsteady that they have to watch their feet, and they shuffle along, with stooping back and hanging head, until they fall down helpless, and sink into stupor. Jesus says, "The light—or lamp—of the body is the eye"; if we put out that lamp "how great is the darkness" (Matt. vi. 22, 23). Dear children, do not risk the step which may lead to foolishness, deafness, blindness. Let your ears be open to hear what words of love our Father will speak, and your eyes bright and clear, gazing right up towards heaven, that happy home into which no unclean thing can enter (Rev. xxi. 27; Eph. v. 18).

I think Janie learned by her experience how dangerous it is to meddle with poison. Will you not take the warning which her story ought to convey?

OUR VILLAGE CHILDREN.

A meeting for praise and thanksgiving to God, in connection with the Caravan Mission to the Children of the Villages, was held in the Wesleyan Centenary Hall in Bishopsgate-street last Saturday afternoon, presided over by Mr. T. B. Bishop, the secretary of the C.S.S.M. An enthusiastic audience listened for two hours to accounts from the caravan workers of the Lord's work among the young people and children of the outlying villages.

Two vans have been working in the villages for the summer months, and have been much used of God. Mr. Cutting, who is in charge of van No. 1, has this year taken up the work, and has met with much success in the harvest field. He gave an interesting account of the journey of his van in Suffolk and Norfolk. Many interesting instances of blessing and accounts of the Lord's goodness in the awakening and salvation of precious souls were related. Further details were added by Mr. J. Bird and Mr. Mont. Goodman, who had paid visits at different times to the van to assist in the work.

Mr. S. J. Hewlett, the originator of the work, followed with an account of the voyage of van No. 2 through Cambridge, Bedfordshire, Buckingham, and Oxfordshire villages. Often they met with opposition and want of sympathy; at other times they received a hearty welcome. Mr. Spiers and Mr. Wm. Perkins also spoke of their experience with the vans, and of the joy of the work. Mr. Geo. Goodman spoke of the work of correspondence in London. Nearly 500 children are being corresponded with by about 150 writers in London and elsewhere.

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN.—At a meeting last week of the council for the Rabbi Lichtenstein Fund, the secretary, Mr. David Baron, stated that during his mission tour in the spring the Rabbi accompanied him to Leipzig, and spoke several times at the conference on Jewish missions. From Leipzig he paid brief visits to Dresden and Frankfort, where he addressed large meetings. July and August were spent by him in Transylvania, receiving visits from Jews and local rabbis. Since returning to Buda-Pest the Rabbi has written that he continues to receive letters of inquiry from educated Jews in all parts of the world. Mr. Baron reported that 1000 copies of the second annual statement of the council have been printed, of which many are already in circulation. Friends desiring "the statement" can have it on application to Mr. Baron, at 23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

CONFERENCE OF WOMEN WORKERS.

The annual conference of women workers was held in the Nottingham Mechanics' Hall last week, and many subjects deeply affecting the welfare of women were earnestly discussed. Lady Laura Ridding, in the opening address on Tuesday, justified the holding of the conference.

A discussion on "The State Regulations affecting Women's Work" elicited great difference of opinion. On the one hand the restrictions imposed upon female labour by the recent Factory Bill were regarded as a merciful protection of the poor and helpless against overtime and the tyranny of unscrupulous employers. The opponents of the measure maintained that it was necessary that women should do home work, and work overtime to keep themselves and their families from starvation. Drink, early marriages, and large families were given as some of the causes of the misery and poverty that lead to the terrible overwork of women.

Lady Battersea contributed an interesting paper on temperance work in grouped villages, which she has carried on for years in her Buckinghamshire home. The advantages of federation were insisted upon. Pleasant entertainments, good temperance literature, and—above all—self-denial on the part of individuals were considered the best safeguards against intemperance.

"What a lady can do in a country village" was the subject of a paper read by Mrs. Wodehouse, who enumerated all the work which a lady "single-handed" in a village might successfully carry on. Her culture and accomplishments so far from being thrown away in such places were doubly valuable.

In classes and mothers' meetings, singing and music were always helpful and appreciated, and reading aloud brought a new element into the lives of the weary mothers who listened. The lady should superintend a lending library, get situations for the girls of her village, endeavour to teach them something of cookery, dressmaking, and sick nursing; in fact, make herself the true friend and example to all with whom she was brought in contact. Hon. Emily Kinnaird spoke of the success of home study; when girls lived in isolated places, and could not attend evening classes, questions were sent round and prizes offered, and all classes joined equally in the movement.

Rural district nursing gave rise to an animated discussion. Mrs. Edward Clements and Lady Baker related their methods of work, which were to divide groups of villages into districts for which a nurse would be provided. The inhabitants paid yearly subscriptions, varying according to their means.

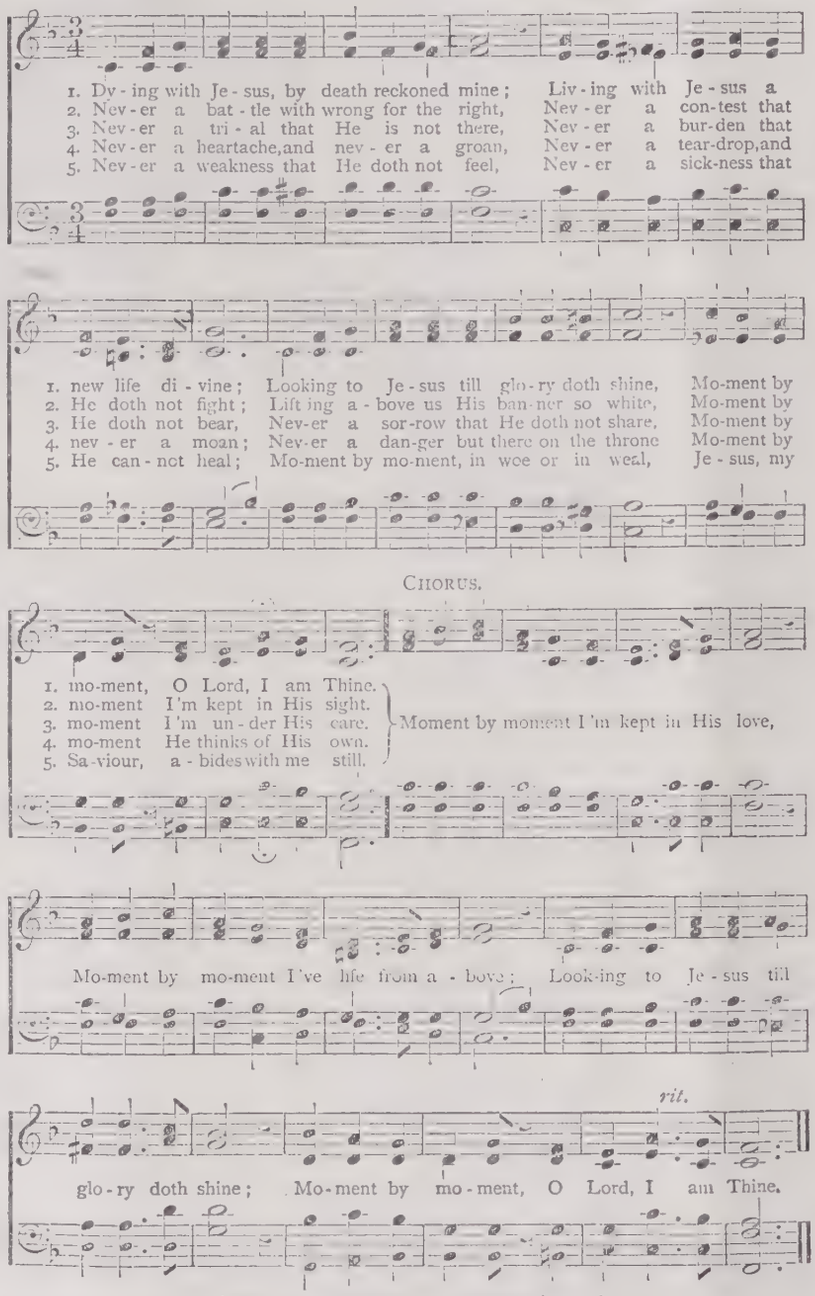
Miss Clifford presided when the subject of placing out children by guardians was considered. As the average girl went to domestic service, that employment naturally formed the main topic of discussion, scarcely with satisfactory result. It was admitted that service had become unpopular with girls, who resent the regular hours and restraints necessary in a respectable household. A suggestion was made that mistresses or head-servants should be paid for teaching an untrained girl her duties.

On Thursday Mrs. Percy Bunting, Mrs. Philip, and Mrs. Hallowes read papers on the Amendment of the Criminal Law, and the causes which lead girls astray. The mothers present were earnestly entreated to train their boys to purity as well as their girls, and all women were exhorted to withhold the hand of friendship from any man of immoral life.

The young ladies' meeting was addressed by the Duchess of Bedford, who sympathetically spoke to the girls present on making St. Paul's "Ever follow that which is good" their motto. The whole being must be vivified by the Divine forces, if we are rightly to understand, or faithfully carry out, the simplest of the claims that God makes upon us.

Hon. Sarah Lyttelton gave some very excellent advice to young girls as to the regulation of their home life in that transition period between leaving school and marrying, on taking up some independent work. Occupation was a good background for life, as it made vexatious trifles appear in their proper proportion, instead of becoming exaggerated.

Miss Christabel Coleridge, in "The Responsibility of Refinement," deplored the existence of class distinctions, which are such a hindrance to united action in good works. If people of the cultured class would only regard the attempt of others to imitate them as a compliment instead of resenting it, there would be less pushing, as there would be nothing to push. Refinement was as much a talent as education, wealth, or any other gift, and we are equally bound to share it with others.



"The Morals of Money-spending" formed the subject of a paper read by Mrs. A. T. Lyttelton. She stated that neither from an economic nor a Christian point of view could riches be regarded as an evil, although wealth without responsibility was a decided evil. The great difficulty in spending is to draw the line between lawful expenditure and luxury. What would be justifiable in one person would be wrong in another with smaller means. Any enjoyment which made a person better able for work was worth spending money on. In the matter of giving to others it was a duty to discriminate; that lazy giving to anyone who asks is nothing less than a sin against society.

Mrs. Creighton, who was re-elected president for the coming year, summed up the work done at the conference, which was brought to a close by a meeting of rescue workers on Friday morning and a meeting of Poor Law Guardians in the afternoon.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

At the invitation of the president, Sir George Williams, a number of friends assembled at the Y.M.C.A. parlour, Aldersgate-street, on Thursday last to inaugurate this society's jubilee. Sir George spoke very highly of the society's work. As it would attain its jubilee in January next, it had been resolved to raise a fund of £5000 with which to clear off the heavy debt on the splendid new headquarters in Ratcliff Highway, and to extend the society's work and usefulness.

Rev. G. J. Hill followed with a brief and interesting account of the society's history and work. Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Maynard told of frequent visits made to the headquarters, as also to some of the coast stations, and never without seeing spiritual power and blessing attending the work. Admiral Grant, C.B., gave testimony to the same effect, adding that in a recent interview with Miss Agnes Weston, that lady, referring to a visit made to the society's home at Fowey, said she was greatly struck with the very real and spiritual tone of the work. Messrs. M. H. Hodder, Theodore Howard, Thomas Knight, G. Lampard, Robert Miller, and William Willett told what they had seen of the usefulness of the work, and urged that it ought to be generously supported. Lady Williams, Mrs. G. N. Buller, Mrs. J. J. Hill, and other friends also showed their interest in this special movement by their presence and help.

THE LATE

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe.

We have with sorrow, yet with sorrow turned into joy, to record the departure "to be with Christ, which is far better," of his life-long and faithful servant Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. He had for years been in delicate health, but not many days ago took a cold which induced congestion of the lungs: and shortly after midnight of last Lord's Day he fell asleep in Jesus.

Our oldest readers are best acquainted with his name and work. He was in its fullest sense a man of prayer, and an eager and aggressive evangelist for years before the Revival of 1859; and when that great movement began he was one of its foremost and most prominent representatives.

No one took deeper interest in the Thanksgiving Meeting in East London in April, 1894, for the blessings of the previous thirty-five or forty years, though his weak health prevented his personal presence there.

Providentially, we had asked Mrs. Radcliffe, a year ago, to gather up her recollections of her beloved husband's long and self-sacrificing but joyous life; and before long these will be published in book form; meanwhile, we shall be able to give some records in our columns which will, we trust, tend to advance the Revival of 1895.

It is not needful, in these circumstances, that we should enter at this time into the particulars of his truly wonderful life, in any minute degree. But we think a short outline of Mr. Radcliffe's career will be welcome to his numberless friends throughout the world; if only to indicate how marvellously he was enabled, by the will of God, to serve his generation. So far as memory serves us, his life has been, in certain respects, singularly unique. Instead of devoting time and energy almost wholly to his profession, giving to God and his fellow men such hours of leisure as he might have to spare, he really made his heavenly Father's business the first thing throughout; and put his worldly calling into a very secondary place, so far as personal devotion was concerned; and the God in whom he so simply and wholly trusted, saw to it that his business interests did not suffer.

Born in Liverpool in January, 1825, Reginald Radcliffe had some time passed the threescore and ten when, on Sunday last, he was called to his eternal rest. He elected to follow the same calling as his father—that of a solicitor. Early in life he began to take part in Christian work, with all the whole-hearted eagerness of an intense nature. Ragged schools were his first love; from that he followed on to open-air preaching, and took part in this form of Gospel work in London when it was comparatively in its infancy. There was a beautiful touch of romance about his choice of a life-partner, which we will not stay here to describe; all who know his beloved wife, to whom he was married in 1850, and who now mourns her great loss, will agree that he was very manifestly guided of God in this supreme crisis of his career. As to the help which Mrs. Radcliffe has rendered to him through all the devoted service of the after years, no one but himself could adequately tell.

In the early years of his wedded life he was very active in evangelistic work among Lancashire colliers. Two of his most effective fellow workers in those days were Richard Weaver and John Hambleton. Much time and loving effort were also expended on the sunken masses of his native city, and the pleasure-seeking crowds who attended Chester and other racecourses. At Chester he and Richard Weaver, like Paul and Silas of old, were thrust into prison for proclaiming the Gospel under the blue sky. Not infrequently in after life Mr. Radcliffe came into collision with the powers that be, in a similar way: but he always chose to obey God rather than man. These activities did not prevent him from assiduous Bible study and earnest culture of the spiritual life. He lived and breathed continually in an atmosphere of prayer and child-like communion with God, on whom his faith laid hold with a tenacity that strengthened with every succeeding year of life.

From a season of bright and happy service for Christ in and around Kendal, he sped northwards to Aberdeen, at the invitation of a professor in the University of that city. This was in the end of 1858; just when "the sound of abundance of rain" was being heard in America and the north of Ireland. Before the year closed a most memorable revival had broken out in Aberdeen, largely under Mr. Radcliffe's labours; though other consecrated workers, such as Brownlow North and Mr. Macdowall Grant, of Arndilly, were honoured instruments in connection with that remarkable visitation of Divine grace and saving power. We must refer our readers to the chapters of Mrs. Radcliffe's forthcoming book, for a record of those never-to-be-forgotten days in the North of Scotland; and somewhat later on in central Scotland.

Mr. Radcliffe's earliest visits to London were in the winters of 1860 and 1861. In his efforts to carry the Gospel to the dwellers in this great city he had the co-operation of a host of devoted men and women whose labours God very richly blessed, both in the western and the eastern parts of the city. To the work begun in East London in 1861 may very distinctly be traced most of the aggressive mission efforts that are in operation among these teeming tens of thousands at the present day. At intervals, Mr. Radcliffe found, or made, time to evangelise also in Ireland, Scotland, the North of England, and the home, or Eastern, counties.

In 1861, with Mr. Shuldham Henry for a yoke-fellow, he visited Paris and other places in France, where the power of the Gospel was very signally manifested. Here Mr. Radcliffe had his first experience of preaching the Gospel message through the medium of interpretation; a method which he pursued in after years in Switzerland, Scandinavia, Russia, and other European countries where his native tongue was not sufficiently understood.

After a delightful and fruitful period of work in Switzerland in 1862, Mr. Radcliffe's health (which, we may say, was always the reverse of robust) quite failed, and he had to take a prolonged season of rest from active public preaching. Before that, however, he had taken a practical part in the relief work in Lancashire rendered necessary by the Cotton Famine. While helping to keep alive the bodies of these industrial populations, he was equally zealous in ministering to their spiritual necessities.

Passing on a few years, we note that when Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey paid their first visit to London, the task of organising a preliminary house-to-house visitation was imposed on Mr. Radcliffe. In former years he had devised a similar effort in his native town, and the experience then gained enabled him to do most valued service, with a staff of willing voluntary helpers, in paving the way for those memorable mammoth gatherings, in different parts of the metropolis, that marked the mission of the American evangelists. About the same period Mr. Radcliffe's sympathies were drawn out towards the condition of sailors and passing emigrants in our large seaports. He was the chief instrument, in God's providence, in the establishment of the now familiar "Strangers' Rests," first in Liverpool, then in London, and afterwards in Hamburg, Bremerhaven, and Hull. That movement has since spread to different parts of the globe, and no finite mind can calculate the benefits, temporal and spiritual, that have accrued to those who do business on the great waters of the world. Every Christian seaman to-day who learns of the death of Mr. Radcliffe will mourn the loss of a true and thoughtful friend.

Largely in the same line of service was the lengthened visit paid by Mr. and Mrs. Radcliffe, in 1880, to different parts of Scandinavia. Only, the unceasing labours of these friends were by no means confined to one class. All was fish that came to Mr. Radcliffe's net; to him all souls were precious, and worthy of being instructed in the wondrous love of God. For that was his undying theme. He could preach the terrors of the law, and he could thunder out God's rejection of the lifeless formalist; but he dearly loved to exalt the tender saving love of God—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. His gifts of ingenious, evangelistic speech were altogether his own, and with his words always went a winning smile that does not appear in the accompanying portrait.

Earnest Christian workers all over Scandinavia will feel poorer when they learn that the voice which roused them to action, and led them on in aggressive endeavour, is now hushed in death. A long visit to Russia and Finland in 1884 was another evangelistic excursion, by Mr. and Mrs. Radcliffe, that was full of the deepest interest and attended with blessed results. Mrs. Radcliffe's narrative of these tours cannot fail to charm and to stimulate the reader.

In his later years, when weakened health and growing bodily infirmity did not allow of so much travel and actual personal effort, Mr. Radcliffe threw his unquenchable zeal into the channel of foreign missions. About ten years ago he went through Scotland, and other parts of the kingdom, in company with some like-minded brethren, seeking to rouse the church members to a deeper sense of their responsibility towards the heathen world. No attentive reader of these pages in recent times can fail to have been struck with the reiterated persistency with which our brother sought to impress on Christian men and women their individual part in this great work. "World-wide Evangelization" was the comprehensive theme on which he loved to descant, with all the persuasive tenderness he knew so well how to throw into his oral and written appeals.

His last important journey was to America and Canada in 1888, in company with Mr. Hudson Taylor. Across the sea he was able very sensibly to fan the rising flame of missionary consecration, which resulted in such a marked extension in the operations of the China Inland Mission. More recently still, he sent forth from his sick-room those brief but pungent articles on missions, the last of which appeared in our columns a very few weeks ago. The death of our much-loved friend terminates all these long-continued activities; and as yet we can scarce realise the greatness of our loss. Our short-sighted vision cannot at present discern on whom his mantle shall fall. But we look to God to choose an Elisha, in place of his translated servant, who well deserved the names of prophet and seer.

KINGSDOWN ORPHANAGE, 18 AND 19, PEMBERTON-ROAD, HOLLOWAY.—The annual sale of work on behalf of the Orphanage, so long carried on by Mrs. Ginever, will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, November 6 and 7, at 3.30 p.m.

QUIET DAYS AT CROYDON.

"There are, in this loud, stunning tide of human care and crime, with whom the melodies abide, of the everlasting chime." There never was a period perhaps when it was more difficult or more needful to secure a respite from the loud and stunning whirl in which this generation lives; and therefore the value of quiet days for waiting on God. At Croydon, last week, two such days were spent in the Temperance Hall, near the new Town-hall in course of erection. A lady, on whom the arrangements largely depended, writes:—

"We have had two very precious days, and I feel myself that my soul has been strengthened and refreshed, and have heard the same from others. Christian fellowship is very sweet, and seems a foretaste of the home above. When Christ alone is our centre, love and peace must result."

We have not space to record the words which were spoken; but how strange it is that people who find it irksome to sit out the more or less formal service which is usual in our Churches, express their earnest and eager interest in these freer and more informal gatherings. The chief attraction of sermons is getting to be their brevity; but when anyone at such meetings as these simply opens up the Scriptures, and simply breaks the bread of life, the hearers show their hunger for it and their satisfaction with it. Instead of weariness at fifteen or twenty minutes' discourse, they do not think of the time, though occasionally an address may last fifty minutes.

Many are unable to go to conventions large and distant; there is no less edification to be obtained in smaller gatherings, where there is less risk to secure places, and less anxiety to hear men whose names are much before the public. It is unnecessary to multiply speakers. One substantial address, or two brief ones, are ample for a meeting; leaving time for prayer, praise, and, not the least needful element, silence. R. C. M.

THE SAILORS' ORPHAN SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND has now 425 children under its care. An "Occasional Paper," just issued, gives cases illustrating the circumstances under which these have been received. Interesting details are also given of the fine home at Core, presented by Mr. C. W. Cayzer, M.P. Special efforts are being made to form an endowment fund of £100,000. The secretary is Mr. R. H. Hunter, 2, Park-circus, Glasgow.

AT THE ST. JAMES'S MISSION HALL, Affleck-street, Pentonville, the winter's Gospel temperance campaign was commenced last week, when the Portman Chapel Gospel Temperance Choir gave a service of song, illustrated with a magic lantern. At the close the chairman remarked that the most acceptable thanks to the choir would be for someone to come forward and sign the pledge, and it was a grand sight to see a working man come forward to be the first, and for a few minutes pledges were taken fast. In all, fifteen were taken—a grand start

L.M.S. SELF-DENIAL WEEK.—Allow me to remind the London Congregational churches of the return of the time (Nov. 17) when the week of Thanksgiving, Prayer, and Self-denial begins. The need of the mission-field is great, the opportunities of usefulness are many, and helpers who are willing to go cannot be sent for want of funds. If London pastors would announce the observance of the week on Nov. 10, and have envelopes and everything ready by that time, they would be rendering a great service. Some congregations have found it a good plan to have an envelope for receiving the gift, and a tract bearing on missionary work, addressed to every member, young and old. Some of the young ladies would do that part of the work.—Yours faithfully,

Streatham Hill. J. P. Gledstone.

EFFORT IN MIDDLESBROUGH.

"How to get at the people" is the question of the day in this town of workers, stalwart, hardy, hard-drinking, toiling night and day at those insatiable furnaces whose red glow never leaves the sky, and which demand as much labour on Sundays as on weekdays. Eighteen months ago the Nonconformist churches of the town banded themselves together into a council. Much was to be done. Gambling was rife everywhere. Drink was doing its worst. Good men and true must be found for local government. Above all the spiritual power of the churches must be increased.

As soon as the council was in working order it put itself in communication with Rev. F. B. Meyer. His long expected visit was paid last week, and was felt by all to be an excellent preparation for the winter's work. It was also a welcome demonstration of spiritual oneness in Christ. All the Free Church denominations took part.

Mr. Meyer preached on Tuesday afternoon in Wesley Chapel on the work of the Holy Spirit. In the evening surrender was the burden of his message, and the breaking of the idols which even Christian people so often worship. At nine o'clock at night he addressed a large meeting of men on the subject of "Social Purity." His wise words made a deep impression. On Wednesday morning he met the ministers of the town at breakfast and spent an hour or more with them afterwards in brotherly prayer and conference. In the afternoon he gave a Bible reading. At his last meeting on Wednesday night he took as his text, "The lame shall take the prey." Mr. Meyer's visit was a short one, but no man could have done more in the time. Few could have done so much. Earnest prayer anticipated his coming; lasting good must follow it.

PORTUGAL AND BRAZIL.

We recently called attention to the fact that workers in dark Brazil have sent to Mr. Walters, of the Scripture Gift Mission, urgent appeals for an edition of the Illustrated Gospels in the Portuguese language. Since then communications from Portugal have brought the assurance that God's Word in a like form would be gladly welcomed by labourers there, as well as in other lands where the same language prevails. True, there are versions of the Scriptures in Portuguese, but the poor, priest-ridden, weary people cannot readily be got to read them; whereas the striking pictures in the Illustrated editions give an idea of the contents, and tempt the reader to follow the reference and find out the details. The illustrations, as is well known, never profess to reproduce Scripture incidents, but rather to explain Oriental customs and depict natural scenery in Bible lands.

So great is the need of Brazil, that a missionary says: "Give me a million Gospels, and I can distribute them every one." Of the population, numbering sixteen millions, seven-eighths have not as yet been evangelised. Roman Catholicism prevails, but the law tolerates Protestantism, and the present is a day of great opportunities. So strongly has this fact appealed to some friends of Gospel work, that they have made substantial contributions to a fund of £200, required to produce an edition of fifty thousand copies of St. John's Gospel. Without delay the little book has been produced, and in so tasteful a form that no one could disdain it, and such as receive cannot but proceed to read.

We trust Mr. Walters will be enabled to bring out the other three Gospels in a similar form in the wide-prevailing Portuguese language; for those who may not be prepared to receive the message of John may be aroused by the Word as delivered by one of the Synoptics. We need hardly say that the version followed in this edition is that of D'Almeida, as made from the original Greek, and known as the "Protestant" version. Further particulars may be had from Mr. Walters, at 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—A meeting to stimulate interest in the work of God by the agency of this Mission was held in Marlborough on the 22nd inst. Mr. J. A. Stooke was the speaker. A most profitable time was spent, and it is hoped that many will interest themselves in the work of the C.I.M. who never before heard of it. This is the first time it has been publicly introduced in Marlborough.

The Evangelist.

A WILY INSTRUCTOR.

By M. B. GERDS.

The autumn deals very gently with Belstead. At September's end the leaves of the chesnut engage in a mild flirtation with those of the sycamore, and as they together swirl past the door of old Simon Mead's cottage, he rubs his knees, and says: "Ah, that's it! There they go; the oak'll follow them, then the beech, and by that time I may consider as knee-caps and woollen wristlets is the fashion. I feel twinges a'ready."

"Twinges of fashion, dad?" a fresh-faced young girl asks as she comes to look over his shoulder at the signs of autumn. "As I came through the wood this afternoon I saw Miss Hamlyn there, painting; she said she wanted to catch the crimson and gold before the rain came."

"Ah, she'll catch more than crimson and gold if she sits about in the wood; she'll lay up a store of rheumatiz, she will. Why didn't 'ee tell her so, Sylvie? 'Twould be kind."

"Father, she would never tolerate that. Why, Mr. Francis said only yesterday that he'd give a year of his life if he could approach her on spiritual things. She won't let him."

"Ah, a young parson didn't ought to talk like that! I shall have to ask him how often he's prayed for that young woman," said Sylvia's "old dad," who was nothing if not personal.

"Come in, dad, out of the chilly air; and you mustn't be an old Busybody, you know, or we shall have you getting into sad trouble," said Sylvia, as she kissed him.

Miss Hamlyn was the new teacher at the Belstead Art School; she was "new" at every point, and the fact that a style or method was not of the newest was sufficient, in her eyes, to condemn it. She had a fenced-in kind of manner which effectually kept off outsiders, and in this armour she spent her Sundays by herself.

"My religion is Art," she explained to the parson, when he called, "and you must admit that it is the oldest religion on earth."

"I admit nothing," said he, "but my ignorance of what you state. I certainly have not found it, under that name, in the Bible."

"Of course not!" exclaimed the Art-mistress, "such a religion is not to be imprisoned between the covers of an old book. And now, with your permission, we will forsake all this for tea!" It was clear that nothing more could be said to such a very frivolous person, so the parson sipped his tea, and left.

"He won't trouble me again—I've extinguished him!" was the thought of the Art-mistress, as she watched him down the road. As a colourist, she had often admired Sylvia Mead's rich brown hair and "strawberry-and-cream" sort of complexion; as an artist, she took pleasure in the fine lines and curves of the country-girl's well-proportioned figure. A sudden resolve stirred her pulses: "She shall come here—I will utilise her as a model. It is getting too chilly to sketch out of doors, now." But, alas, how true it is that—

The best-laid schemes o' mice and men gang aft agley.

Sylvia suddenly took to her bed, and would have none to read to her in the lengthening autumn evenings, but the young and—as some called her—heathen mistress of the Art school!

She came when she was sent for, for she had a kind, brave heart, and she told the invalid what she had purposed asking of her. "When I am quite well you shall paint me as much as you like," said Sylvia, "but just now—I suppose the autumn tries me—I don't feel strong, and my headaches prevent my reading." All of which was true, but not to the extent of keeping her in bed. But her father said she needed a good rest, and must have it.

"What shall I read you, dear?" asked the artist. "I brought a volume of Ruskin with me, though he's old-fashioned."

"Is he?" asked Sylvia. "I did not know it; and I should so like you to read him to me some day. But I hear you read French beautifully, and my French is very, very bad. Would you read me this?"

Miss Hamlyn took the little book, and, opening it, read:—Les Livres Saints, connus sous le nom de Nouveau Testament.

"Do you really wish me to read this?" she asked.

"If you please; because, if you read me anything else in French, I could not follow you; but that I know nearly by heart."

"Do you? I wonder why, and you so young and pretty!" said the artist.

But Sylvia was diplomatic, and did not wish to get into an argument, in which she was almost sure to be beaten by the quick wit of the worldling. She contented herself with merely saying, "You are very good to come to read to me, and especially in French, because that will help me in so many ways."

As the Art teacher walked home, many of the words she had read, and especially those Sylvia had asked her to read again, and to explain, kept repeating themselves over in her consciousness.

"Il vint chez soi; et les siens ne l'ont pas reçu" (John i. 11), was a verse that she, somehow, half sang, to the rhythmic stepping of her feet along the hard country road to her boarding-house. The next evening she could not keep away from Meads' Cottage. "Oh, you need not read to-night, I did not expect you," said Sylvia. "I should like to read, if it does not disturb you, dear," was the reply.

It was now, as Sylvia had foreseen, the artist's turn to ask questions, and to these Sylvia did not so much give an answer, as she led the girl to find up answering portions in the Testament. Then they threshed out other passages together, and in this way the interest grew, and the search for hidden treasure was carried on until the chiming of the church clock an hour before midnight frightened Miss Hamlyn home.

The search had been a purely intellectual one up to now; but on reaching her room, the teacher found a letter from the younger girl, and in it was this passage: "Tell me what you think of the following passage from a book I am reading—'A man without some sort of religion is at best a poor reprobate, the football of destiny, with no tie linking him to infinity, and the wondrous eternity that has begun with him; but a woman without it is even worse—a flame without heat, a rainbow without colour, a flower without perfume.'" She sat down.

"Is it true?" she asked herself. "But after all I have my Art." She did not go near the cottage for a week, but on the eighth evening she appeared before Sylvia dejected and miserable-looking. She said: "This place does not agree with me, I shall leave it!"

"That I would," said the wily Sylvia, "if it makes you ill. But I shall miss you."

"Oh, Sylvia, Sylvia!" cried the other, "don't send me away, for only you can help me! I, too, have a Testament now, but the misery in my breast continues. I so hoped it would cure it!"

"Dear Miss Hamlyn," said Sylvia, "it is Christ you want now!"

And when, six months after, the two girls discussed all the wonders of that wonderful birthnight, the Art-mistress said:—

"Ah, I really can spell art with a capital A now, for it means so much more to me. You saw what a fool I was, and I believe that sudden illness of yours was part of your plan to get hold of me!"

Then seeing the smile dancing in her friend's eyes she exclaimed:—

"Sylvia! So it is true! You beat the Jesuits for a wily instructor!"

STUDENTS' CONFERENCE, L'POOL.

The great convention of students at Liverpool, on the first five days of 1896, promises to be a gathering of far-reaching importance. A thousand delegates are expected from British, American, Scandinavian, German, Dutch, French, and South African colleges. Leaders of missionary bands, and many working missionaries will be present. The churches of all evangelical denominations in Liverpool are combining to provide hospitality to the delegates.

In an article on the convention in The Missionary Review of the World Dr. Pierson says:—

"How any intelligent discipie can look at the present condition of missions and feel satisfied passes our comprehension. With fifty millions of Protestant church-members standing face to face with twenty times their own numbers, yet in as profound ignorance of Christ's salvation as if they lived on another planet; and sparing only one in five thousand of their own number to carry the Gospel to them; and giving on an average twenty cents a year to the cause, there is something that seems more like apathy and apostasy than sympathy and activity. Liberality? We do not know the meaning of the word. The money spent on self-indulgence is enormously out of proportion to what is turned into God's treasury.

"In the recent addresses of Rev. Andrew Murray, at the Northfield Conference, none made a deeper impression than that at the last meeting conducted by him, when his subject was intercessory prayer (Rom. viii.). He appealed to us whether the Church of Christ, instead of standing apart and coldly criticising the errors, follies, faults, heresies and practices of brethren, we should not mourn, as Daniel did, over the sins of those with whom we are organically connected, and feel ourselves responsible in our measure for the evils we have indirectly fostered and made little effort directly to remove or remedy.

"Great hopes centre and cluster about this new year convention at Liverpool. A thousand young men, the flower of college and university life, in the warmth of an enthusiasm not yet cooled and chilled by habits of worldliness, with their future before them, not yet entangled in the affairs of this life, or weighed down by business cares, are coming together to consider the demands of a dying world, and the commands of a risen Lord, to organise more completely for the occupation of neglected territory. Such a convention ought to enlist sympathy as broad as Christendom, and prayer as earnest and prevailing as God's promises warrant. It will be the first time in history that an equal number of Christian young men have met in Europe for such a purpose. If a spirit of grace and supplication should be outpoured, and that vast assembly should be melted into one: fused into unity in the Spirit, no human mind can foresee the glorious outcome."

NAVAL SCRIPTURE READERS.

The Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society started in 1860 by employing one reader, it now has fourteen. Three are working at Malta, Hong-Kong, and Yokohama; the rest are at home ports, Devonport, Portsmouth, Chatham, etc. The visit on board men-of-war, in the barracks, in the hospitals, and in the prisons, gathering round them little knots of listeners as they expound the Scriptures, exhorting, admonishing, or instructing individuals or groups, as opportunity may offer. Numerous have been the expressions of gratitude for the blessings vouchsafed by God through the agency of the reader.

It is much to be lamented that for lack of funds the society can only employ fourteen readers. Twice if not thrice as many might well be employed in seeking out souls over such an extensive field. Mr. W. A. Mount, 17, Stonor-road, West Kensington, the organising secretary, would be glad to furnish further information.

BATH UNITED MISSION.

The mission by Mr. George Clarke, which has been going on at the Assembly Rooms the last three weeks, has just concluded. Our hearts are full of praise, for the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.

It was with some fear we commenced the mission, for a united mission in which clergy and ministers of all denominations should unite is a thing unknown here. We left nothing undone that could be thought of in making the meetings known, and from the first the large hall, holding about 1200, was full.

The meeting the last Sunday night was something to remember. An audience of over a thousand men thronged the room from end to end, the platform being also crowded, and while this was going on another meeting of women was being held in an adjoining room by Mr. Fawcett, of Weston-super-Mare. Never in our remembrance have such scenes been witnessed as have been seen any night these three weeks. Not only a dense mass of people always running into four figures, but a wondrous hush and an intense earnest listening, which resulted in some five hundred leaving their seats for the inquiry-room.

But the mission has not been confined to evening meetings. Morning, afternoon, and night has Mr. Clarke been at his post, now addressing a gathering of eagerly intent children; again, a meeting of women only, and again a meeting such as last Sunday's of men only, and sometimes vast attendances of both sexes. One of the special features of the mission has been the large numbers attending the afternoon Bible Talks, when various phases of the Christian life were unfolded to the wrapt attention of the listeners.

The closing meeting was on Monday week. Within a few minutes of the opening of the doors the hall was filled to overflowing, and the large platform as well. Round each doorway and extending into the corridor was a small crowd who, though not seeing Mr. Clarke, were satisfied with being able occasionally to catch a fragment or two of his remarks. Several persons contented themselves with standing beneath the platform.

The scene from the platform was remarkable—a sea of upturned faces, every eye being fixed on the mission preacher, who, speaking in his wonted straightforward and conversational style, gave excellent advice to those who had professed conversion during the mission, advising them to join some church or chapel and interest themselves in its work, never forgetting private prayer and the daily study of their Bible. "If they did that there would be no backsliding, and when he came back in five years' time, which he hoped to do, he would not have so many scores of people telling him they were backsliders, but he would find the five or six hundred as true as when he left them."

Hundreds of thanksgiving notes and gifts were sent in during the last day, and hundreds, nay thousands, of people in Bath will long cherish the recollection of this mission—in fact, never do we remember such success attending a mission in Bath as the one just concluded.

The Hon. Sec. of the Mission.

NEW SURREY CHAPEL.

At the seventh anniversary of the opening of this church, held on Sunday and Monday week, Rev. J. Tolefree Parr announced that the owner of the large and commodious dwelling-house next door to the chapel had given it to their social work. It is freehold, and valued at £1500. The only condition imposed is that £70 per annum shall be made out of it as rent, which sum shall be devoted to the support of the "Sister of the People," and her work among the sick and destitute poor, the sending of sick and ailing children to the seaside, and similar objects. Mr. Parr said he greatly desired to make it a home for "Sister Annie" and for young men under the care of a matron. This was urgently needed, but at least £200 would be required to furnish the house and meet the initial outlay.

A pleasing feature of the anniversary was the union of the Old and New Surrey churches. Dr. Newman Hall preached on Thursday, and his former assistant, Rev. H. Grainger, spoke at the public meeting, while Rev. F. B. Meyer addressed the men's P.S.A. at its first anniversary, held on the Sunday afternoon.

FRIENDS' RESCUE WORK.

A very interesting meeting was held at Devonshire House, on Tuesday, October 22, on behalf of the Friends' Rescue Home. The chair was taken by Frederick Sessions, of Gloucester, who gave a few interesting details of Rescue Work in his own city. A short paper was read by a member of the Ladies' Committee of the Friends' Rescue Home, giving some account of the work and its needs.

Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes gave a long practical address founded upon her personal experience of Rescue Work in the West end of London. Whilst expressing a natural shrinking from dealing in public with such a subject, she spoke boldly and plainly of the causes that lie at the root of the social evil. She cited as amongst these causes, loneliness, friendlessness, overwork, underpay, inconsiderateness on the part of those who employ domestic servants, and want of appreciation of the fact that these young girls cannot bear life in one constant never-ending routine of drudgery, but need change and happy surroundings as much as the growing-up daughters in our own sphere. Mrs. Hughes found that the girls on the streets are recruited chiefly from those in domestic service; although a good many coming up to London and entering shops or houses of business met with unprincipled men who lured them on to their undoing. She spoke very strongly of the evil effects of overcrowding—the life in one room, which of necessity broke down in a girl's mind all feeling of modesty, even when quite a child. The reason that these wretched families live seven, eight, and even more people in one room, is almost always at the bottom found to be drink! Mrs. Hughes dwelt very impressively upon the responsibility of mothers towards their sons. It is a mother's duty to preserve the boys, and in so doing she will, in the long run, be doing perhaps the greatest work of all.

Mr. James B. Wookey followed with a heart-stirring, touching address. He agreed that there were two classes of these poor girls—those sinned against and those wilfully choosing sin for themselves. It is difficult to know which class deserves our pity most. Girls who have been led astray often make a hard fight to keep straight afterwards. He remembered a boy of four years old being admitted into Dr. Barnardo's Homes from such a mother. "The child was shy, timid, tired, almost asleep. I went up to the dormitory, and was there whilst they put him to bed. When undressed, he slipped down on his knees, and it brought tears to our eyes to hear him say his little prayer in the presence of strangers. 'God bless mamma, God bless mamma,' sobbed the wee laddie. 'Why has mamma let you come here?' I inquired, and between the sobs came his pitiful answer twice repeated, 'Couldn't sew fast enough, couldn't sew fast enough!'" Mr. Wookey's appeal, and tender words on the need of heart-felt pity in the Church of to-day, will not soon be forgotten by those who were his privileged hearers.

The Friends' Rescue Home is small, but is doing definite work to help both sinned against and sinning. Gifts either in money or kind are greatly needed for the work of the coming winter. These may be sent direct to the matron, Mrs. Dudley, 10, Laura-place, Clapton, N.E.

CONFERENCE AT LUCKNOW.

Speaking of a series of conference meetings in this Indian city, a correspondent of the Indian Witness says:—

These meetings have been pronounced by many the best ever held in Lucknow. The subject of nearly every address was the Holy Spirit. Workers from twelve different societies were present during the meetings. A blessed work was done among the students of the Christian College, among whom meetings were held in the college chapel. A large number of very clear conversions took place. Meetings were held every evening except Sunday for the girls of the Lall Bagh school in the drawing-room of the mission house. A large number of girls consecrated themselves to Christ. The sweetest harmony prevailed from the first meeting to the last. It is hoped that these meetings may become to India more and more what Keswick meetings are to England.

REV. J. McNEILL IN NEWCASTLE.

This mission has been continued during the past week. Mr. McNeill has addressed vast audiences of business men in the Town Hall during the day, and in the evenings has preached to overflowing audiences in Jarrow and South Shields. This week he is holding two meetings a-day in Newcastle, and the interest seems to be growing. The mission is becoming the general topic of conversation, and all classes in the community are becoming more or less influenced by it. With wonderful freshness the evangelist presents at every service Gospel truth, and it is expected that this last week of the mission will prove to be the most fruitful of all in saving results. An effort is being made to get the names and addresses of those who have got blessing, and it is expected the various ministers in Newcastle, as well as in other places in the neighbourhood, will do their utmost to strengthen and watch over the new converts. Several have already confessed to having been brought to God through the mission.

On Sunday two services were held in the Olympia, and the feeling at both meetings was deep, solemn, and intense. The way of salvation was clearly set forth and the illustrations that were given were very striking and appropriate, and memorable.

At the midday meetings, especially, Mr. McNeill is well supported by the clergy and ministers of all denominations. Great delight was expressed by the business men of Newcastle, when intimation was made at the close of last week that their meetings were to be continued over another week. Many have scarcely ever missed a meeting, though they are held at the busiest hour of the day. This is a noble testimony that the Gospel has not lost its interest and power. The eager, expectant faces of many show that there is much in the old message that is suited to the deepest needs of the human soul, and that a man can find in it something whose price is "above rubies."

Mr. McNeill feels that the work in which he is engaged is a very important one, and asks the sympathy and prayers of God's people on his behalf. May the thousands whom he is addressing this week with such earnestness and self-consuming zeal be moved by a power higher and greater than mere human eloquence, and may many be led to make the great decision for God and eternity!

A MISSION OF HELP.

Not long ago we were introduced to a case of heart-breaking misery. Father, mother, and children were living in one room bare of necessaries. The father had been out of work for nine months. Three little children sat silent, patient, and hungry, from morning till night, unable to attend school for want of shoes and clothing. The mother lay in bed with a tiny newcomer at her side, and the family were only waiting till she gathered sufficient strength to accompany them to the workhouse. "We can't hold out another winter," said the man, who was an excellent husband and father. He was encouraged and helped through the next few weeks, and one night at the close of a meeting to which he had been invited, he bravely avowed his determination to become a faithful soldier of Christ. Two or three days later he said, "I've been praying for work, and I feel sure it will come." And it did come. Before the week was over he was taken on permanently by a well-known firm. Now he and his wife are rejoicing, not only in a happy home, but in the peace of God which passeth understanding.

As we write, the first breath of frost suggests the advisability of adopting winter clothing and comforts. Fires glow brightly on our hearths, and the curtains are drawn closer to protect the family circle from outside cold and discomfort. But there are fireless, curtainless homes in which the widow and orphan weep, where disease is developed and quickened into cruel activity by the forces of poverty and privation. Yet in many of such homes the faith and patience of God's saints are perfected in the testing fires of adversity, and One like unto the Son of Man stands beside the sufferers.

The Book World.

DR. PIERSON'S NEW BOOK.

The Acts of the Holy Spirit. By Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) The author, whose name as a deeply taught expositor of the Scriptures of Truth is known in all the churches, devotes his present volume to the Acts of the Apostles—the necessary and proper complement of the Four Gospels—and deals with it largely as a revelation of the Holy Spirit in his relations to believers as Christ's witnesses, and to the Church as the witnessing body. From this point of view he traces throughout the book of Acts the active ministry of the Holy Spirit, bringing out in a remarkable manner the direct over-ruling, leading, calling, sending, counsel, restraint, reception, and rejection of the Divine Spirit of God, in a church and in individuals wholly surrendered to Him. It is a book to be pondered and prayed over in private; a book which every pastor, teacher, church officer, and worker should con with candid care. The longing of every earnest soul is "more power"; may not the cure for present-day powerlessness be found in yielding to the Spirit of God, allowing Him to occupy his rightful place? To this end we wish this book a wide circulation and prayerful consideration.

THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

Dr. John Brown, of Bedford, has sustained his high reputation as a writer on religious history by his new work, The Pilgrim Fathers of New England and their Puritan Successors. (10s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) In a vein full of sympathy he sketches the movements which preceded the departure of the Pilgrims from our shores, and tells with new detail the story of conscientious struggles against error and formalism in Lincolnshire, Yorkshire, and Nottinghamshire. A special chapter is devoted to Scrooby and Austerfield, the former village having been the birthplace of the Pilgrim Church, while in the latter was born William Bradford, afterwards Governor of Plymouth Colony, and the historian of the Plantation. The experiences of the exiles in Holland are described, as is also the voyage of the "Mayflower," every endeavour having been made to embody the latest ascertained facts, and to set the story in the light of what we know of the period and the places and persons named. The difficulties which arose in the course of time, before and after the colonies were united, are admirably delineated, and deeply interesting particulars are given of the spiritual life and worship of the people. One is compelled to agree with the author of this very readable book (well illustrated by Charles Whymper) that, with all their faults, the Fathers and their successors had great and high qualities, the solid virtues on which stable commonwealths are founded. "There was in these makers of New England a grand masterful sincerity, a noble courage of conviction, an overwhelming sense of the authority of righteousness in human life, and an ever-present consciousness of God's personal rule over the world, in spite of all its confusions."

SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

The New Life in Christ: A Study in Personal Religion. By Joseph Agar Beet, D.D. (6s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This is a "study" indeed, being in reality a carefully constructed body of teaching, expository and experimental, in the form of thirty-seven lectures. The five general sections give some idea of the scope of the work. (1) The Ruin, (2) The Restoration, (3) The Way of Holiness, (4) The Divine and Human in the Christian Life, (5) The Revelation of God in the New Life in Christ. The volume is a sequel to the author's scholarly work, "Through Christ to God," and will, it is hoped, be succeeded by others, now in preparation, covering the entire range of Biblical and systematic theology. Professor Beet is always thoughtful and helpful; and those who follow his course of instruction will lay a foundation as positive as Divine truth and as deep as God's love, at once consistent with Scripture in its broad outlines, and practical as regards sound philanthropy. These pages are characterised by that exegetical power which is exhibited in all Dr. Beet's works; and that they deal with grand themes may be judged from the concluding sentences of a chapter on "The Eternal Realisation": "Thus the universe and human life in it began with an eternal thought in the mind of an intelligent and almighty and all-loving Creator: it will find its consummation in the complete and eternal realisation of that thought. The present universe, and human life and history as we know them, are the transition from the eternal thought to the eternal realisation. In that transition we are permitted and compelled to take part. What our part is to be, depends entirely upon ourselves. And upon our part in the process now going on, depends our place in the realisation." These lines show us Dr. Beet's theological standpoint, and afford some idea of the practicality of his work.

A FAMOUS QUAKER FAMILY.

The Gurneys of Earlham, by Augustus J. C. Hare (2 vols., 25s., George Allen), is a publication deserving of high commendation. It presents memoirs and letters of the eleven children of John and Catherine Gurney, of Earlham, 1775-1875, and the story of their religious life under many different forms. It is illustrated with thirty-three photogravure plates, and sixteen woodcuts, all of them excellent in point of artistic finish. Several members of the Gurney family, bankers and philanthropists, are well known in biographical literature, but this is, we believe, the first attempt to deal with them all together.

After the death of the mother, the Gurney household was presided over by the eldest daughter, Catherine, whose family influence was as wise as it was strong. Her younger sisters confided everything to her, for they loved her motherly rule. One part of her system of education was to encourage each to keep a journal. Masses of volumes thus written remain, and from these Mr. Hare has made liberal and deeply-interesting extracts.

The Quakerism of Earlham, in those days, was not of a very strict type; many practices not usual among Friends were allowed, if not, indeed, promoted, in the family circle. Concurrently the young people imbibed a distaste for Meeting House worship, and their journals contain many rebellious references to the quiet gatherings. Moreover, the wave of infidelity which came into England at the time of the French Revolution was felt at Earlham, and for a while the elder sisters were, as Catherine afterwards wrote, "in no small degree carried off their centre." In a very short time this cloud dispersed, and Elizabeth (afterwards Mrs. Fry) became an out-and-out Quaker, no longer joining in singing and dancing, but dressing and speaking as plain as possible. It was at the despised Meeting House, from the mouth of an American minister, that she heard words which turned the whole course of her life; and the following day the same Friend (William Savery) preached to the whole of the sisters, prophesying that Elizabeth would be led into a high and important calling. Afterwards the other members of the family realised a similar converting change.

Naturally the volumes deal at length with the story of Mrs. Fry, and the philanthropic enterprises which made her famous at home and impelled her to travel in many lands on visits of "Gospel love"; with the life of Joseph John Gurney, the Quaker scholar and minister; with Samuel, "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord"; with Thomas Fowell Buxton (who married Hannah Gurney), and his efforts for the emancipation of the slaves. In course of time most of the family joined the Church of England, but Earlham was, all the same, a happy home-centre, and delightful letters passed between men and women firmly united in the bonds of kindred love and Christian sympathy.

Father and mother both died in the faith of Christ, and to quote the one sentence with which Mr. Hare concludes his charming work:—"Their eleven children and their ten sons and daughters-in-law, each one a true follower of their Lord, lived full of faith and love to Christ, and died in the full assurance of an eternal inheritance with their Lord, and we may believe that they are all together in his presence."

POEMS.

Little Folks' Land. A book of verses by Horace G. Groser. (A. Melrose, 16, Pilgrim-street, E.C.) The land to which this sprightly versifier introduces us is a mixture of airy fancy and of more mundane delights. The little folks will revel in both, and wish for more.

Shiloh and other Poems. By Reginald Tavey. (Elliot Stock.) This author's muse is scarcely equal to the lofty flight demanded by such themes as that of the title poem and "Salvator Mundi" that follows. They contain some striking passages, but the poetic value is unequal. Some of the shorter poems have happy touches of imagination choicely expressed.

Shepherd's Tartan and other Poems. By Annie Winsor Haywood. (Westwood & Son, Cupar, Fife.) These are musical verses mostly on sacred themes. They would take a worthy place (as most of them have done) in the religious serials of the day, though, honestly, we do not recognise in them the elements of literary immortality. Still they may minister good cheer to tried and simple souls.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Bo-peep is well styled "A Treasury for the Little Ones." Year by year it delights denizens of the nursery with its rhymes and stories in large type, and its pictures, some of them very amusing and all of them good. (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Cassell & Co.)

Young England: Annual Volume (5s. Sunday-school Union).—Fresh and bright as ever, full of life, adventure, and instruction. The boys will find this volume well up to its predecessors in quality, quantity, and interest.

Little Folks. The Christmas volume forms a charming gift-book. There are many pictures, some of them beautifully coloured. The general contents are bright and useful, including something to read to the dots as well as items for older children. (3s. 6d. and 5s. Cassell & Co.)

NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

The Quiver for November starts a new volume with some fresh features, promising well. Great interest cannot fail to be awakened by the comprehensive series of photographs given under the heading, "Leaders in the Church of God." Opinions will differ as to who are leaders; and many who might be looked for are absent, but the seventy well-known clergymen, ministers, and workers who are given, representing various British churches and missionary societies, will be acknowledged as among the leaders. Besides, there is a large variety of good readable matter. It may be mentioned that Miss Sparrow's papers on "The Penniless Poor," are being continued in the new volume. (6d. Cassell & Co.)

The Religious Tract Society's serials for November begin new volumes. The Sunday at Home (6d.) is a number of rich and varied interest. Dean Farrar contributes a powerful paper on "True and False Union." He scorns the idea of union with the Romish Church, the characteristics of which he trenchantly summarises. He thus winds up his scathing indictment: "Could England be guilty of the criminal folly of reforging the iron fetters of Popish tyranny, which she broke more than three centuries ago, she would deserve to sink into utter dishonour and to be 'in the flat sea sunk.'" A sketch of philanthropic Glasgow makes favourable mention of Mr. Quarrier's work and of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. Another very readable paper is that on "Fiji and its People," by Rev. J. Telford. In The Leisure Hour (6d.), Mrs. Fyvie Mayo retells, in part, the story of Carlyle's domestic life. Much curious and novel information appears in an article describing "A People Adrift"—the Ossetts, a Transcaucasian tribe. The Girls' Own Paper (6d.) has a full supply of characteristic contributions; one of the freshest is "On and Off a Pack-saddle in Central Japan." The modern lady cyclist receives a good modicum of space. The Boys' Own Paper (6d.) makes a start with opening portions of new tales by Dr. Gordon Stables and David Ker. A special coloured plate depicts our British fresh-water fish.

George Procter, the Teetotaller. By Guy Hayler. (3s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.) A thoroughly good and well-told temperance story, which we specially commend to the notice of Bands of Hope.

Another valuable little work on this question is The Bible on the side of Total Abstinence, by W. W. Edwards. Under different headings, and with cogent comments, the author has dealt with over 300 texts relating to the subject. Copies may be had of Mr. Edwards, 12, Nicholson-road, Addiscombe, Croydon, price 1s.

A very pathetic and delightful story of true heroism in humble life is Gold and Incense by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. (1s. Horace Marshall & Son.) The scene is laid in the West country, and the story (a true one) is told with all Mr. Pearse's accustomed skill and vividness. Some illustrations are supplied by his daughter.

For Days of Youth. By Rev. C. A. Salmond. (5s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) These brief talks for young people, arranged for every day in the year, are simple and practical. The idea of a series of daily readings specially prepared for the young is excellent, and we trust the book will be largely used. The elders will not find it dull or uninteresting.

Mr. Elliot Stock publishes, with a preface by his namesake, Mr. Eugene Stock, a cheaper edition (1s. 6d.) of The Master's Guide for the Disciples; being "a manual of all the recorded sayings of Jesus arranged for easy consultation and systematic reading." The arrangement is admirable, and the book is a handy shape. May its precious contents find a great multitude of obedient readers.

Letters to the Editor.

THE EDUCATION CONTROVERSY.

Dear Sir,—I read with interest your reference in The Christian, of October 17, to the education conflict. A teacher of over fourteen years, it has been my lot to work in schools in London and in the provinces; my experience, confirmed by that of many whom I could name, is that unless a teacher conforms utterly to the tenets of the Ritualistic or Romanistic party connected with the school, there remains nothing for that teacher but to leave. The intolerance of the Ritualistic clergy is fairly equal to that of the Romish party; in fact, by their constant bitter treatment and petty persecution they force the teachers to give up their schools.

Is England willing that the youth of her land should be brought under a system of priestcraft? Does she desire that the nation should be brought to a "state of abject submission to Romanism? If not, let the "praying people" of the nation pray mightily to God that pure Bible teaching be not taken from our elementary schools. Let them pray also for the teachers, many of whom have to endure much persecution.—Yours faithfully,

An Elementary Teacher.

DEFECTIVE PREACHING.

Dear Sir,—How far is it advisable for the building-up of young and ill-instructed believers that the practical side of teaching should be made more prominent? We know that "the axe to the root," both in dealing with saved and unsaved, is the essential part. But it is well to notice that the bold preacher with whom we associate these words was eminently practical when he told his audience (Luke iii. 10-14) what were to be the fruits of genuine repentance. When spiritual and well-taught Christians address a mixed gathering in these days, and speak, for instance, of worldliness, how very little idea many of their converted hearers may have of the sense implied. Branches as well as root seem to require the skilful gardener's touch. How many there are who seem to be rooted in truth, and are themselves teachers of unmistakable spirituality, who by no means find that the result in the lives of their hearers corresponds to the spiritual power expended on them. There must be a cause, and I long exceedingly to know if better taught and more experienced Christians than myself can throw any light on this question.

How can spiritual teaching leave so many Christian hearers befogged about practical separation from the world if there be not a flaw somewhere? And is there no deficiency in dealing with the all-important subject of love among God's children when no guidance whatever is given about dealing in faithfulness with sin in those we love?

An Inquiring Christian.

AN ANTIDOTE TO "PENNY DREADFULS."

Dear Sir,—Many years ago my attention was attracted to some barrow loads of Sunday newspapers and other reading of a questionable character, being rapidly sold in back streets of Brighton. I noted how many were engaged on errands which might much better have been done on Saturday. Some were making their little marketings for the one home dinner of the week, for which late payment of wages was answerable; crossing-sweepers, shoeblacks, flower sellers, and cabmen were all on the look-out for custom; and most striking of all, as eleven o'clock drew near, when public-houses must close, there was a procession of women going up a leading back thoroughfare, each with a jug of beer, a pipe or two, a bag of tobacco, and a copy of one of the numerous Sunday papers under her arm. At that time most of the working men thus occupied Sunday mornings in their beds.

What could be done for them? Tracts? It had been said the people did not care for them. I had no money to spend on an experiment, which might not succeed; but I had a quantity of old Christians given me, also copies of Chatterbox, The Quiver, Hand and Heart, The Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Word and Work, and a few mission reports. With these I resolved, in the strength of God, to go forth early, and literally armed up to my chin, so as to forestall the barrow-man by giving one from my stock to whomsoever would take it, always saying, "Something good for Sunday; save your pennies." As my stock never failed, I was able to go on eleven or twelve years. Picture papers delighted the little ones, and in the comparative relaxation and quiet of the Sabbath morning, I learned to sympathise with and esteem many of my humble friends, not a few of whom ventured to bless my free and voluntary colportage. A man said to me one day, "Missis, I must read, if it is only a tea-paper."

Some sympathising friends, joined together in a little society to get a Christian Colportage man to work the district; but although he was of great use otherwise, and in other parts of the town, these poor people were far below paying for as many books as they needed to satisfy their mental cravings, of which few who groan under their household plethora of books, bound and unbound, can conceive, or of the wholesome results certain to follow the wise relief and free distribution of even their old school-books, to say nothing of their well-printed and illustrated periodicals and reports of Christian work at home as well as abroad.

This method of supplying a great need is simple enough; and only involves a little thinking about the use to be subserved by our periodicals when we have done with them, and the courtesy which enables us to pass them on with a good grace to those who otherwise would not get anything so respectable, until their taste had been cultivated, and they had acquired the courage needful to seek it in a good shop.

Even old reports and religious papers are much better appreciated by those who at present are beneath the luxury of giving than we are apt to think. A town missionary, who circulated among his people some which I had long stored, afterwards told me that they had quite changed the tone in his district.—Yours truly

TRUE UNION: WHAT IS IT?

Dear Sir,—The great cry of the day is for "union." This was manifested in the City of Lincoln, when the Bishop of Lincoln preached at the Consecration of St. Faith's Church, taking for his text Eph. iv. 2, and in deploring the divisions of Christians, laid down a basis of union from the High Church standpoint. His claim was, that the opening of a new church would make for unity in that district.

1st. Because it was a new gate, a new door of heaven opened.

2nd. Because it was the house of the One God.

3rd. Because therein the Word of God would be preached.

4th. Because the church is set apart for the solemnisation of the Sacraments.

And then as connected with the sacraments of baptism, holy communion, and confirmation, the Bishop opened out his way of union, closing with the words "The way to get true union is to get all to become communicants."

His reasoning up to this point was, in baptism we are made children of God and members of the Body of Christ. For proof of this he quoted 1 Cor. xii. 12, "By one Spirit we are all baptized into One Body." His words were, "In baptism we become partakers of Christ; we are made members of the body of Christ, having a common life with all who are baptized."

Then as to Holy Communion. The church was a blessing because there only can the Holy Communion be received, and Holy Communion was a great bond of union. Therein is taken the body and blood of Christ, life-giving, unifying, refreshing. In this way the life of Christ lives in us. The bishop concluded this part of the subject with the words we have already quoted, "The way to get true union, is to get all to become communicants of this sacrament, with its mysterious life-giving power."

Another great way of union, the Bishop went on to say, was confirmation, for in confirmation the seven-fold fulness of the Spirit was received.

The Bishop's speech was simplicity itself, and its revelation of the Popish darkness by which he is enshrouded was appalling. It manifests how Sacramentarianism is the mother of Sacerdotalism, and even of the Papacy itself. For if salvation be by sacraments, there must be a priesthood to administer them, and this priesthood must have a visible head and authority; just as in Judaism the carnal ordinances demanded a priesthood, and the priesthood necessitated a high priest. But this proves that the Ritualistic division of the Church of England is but the bastard daughter of Rome, of which even its mother is ashamed!

Sacramentarian union means union with Rome, and the only union Rome will have is the union of the wolf and the lambs. Some simple lambs were desirous of forming union with the wolf. The wolf favoured this by smiling upon them, and to all their mother's wise suggestions as to the well-known character of the wolf, and its ancestry, they listened to his blandishments, and set off with the wolf to form a union, offensive and defensive, and in the course of a few days the union became an accomplished fact! There was but one, and that one, the wolf!

The only door of heaven is Christ, the only way of life, His death, and salvation by faith, not sacraments, is the New Testament teaching. The House of God is the spiritual house, not the material one, and priesthood is the common inheritance of all believers.

But on the same day the Bishop of Lincoln laid down the basis of union according to Ritualism, the Nonconformist Council of Lincoln had arranged for meetings, both afternoon and evening, at which Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, Dr. Berry, and T. Law and Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., were to enunciate the basis for a federation of all the Free Churches. The plan was simply to form representative councils in every town, in which each congregation would be represented by a minister and layman. The councils in towns were to form centres for all the villages round about in a mapped-out district, and thus, if the views of the promoters of the scheme are carried out, all the Nonconformist congregations of England will form one great Federation. The advantages of this federation would be:—

(b) Unity in the repression of all the great evils of the day, especially the social, gambling, and drinking evils.
(c) The bringing together of small congregations in the villages, where now three or four are ekeing out a miserable existence.

It was distinctly stated that it was not to be a political organisation, yet its strength was to be used in bringing about Parliamentary reforms for the equalising of Nonconformity with the Church in the question of doing away with State-supported schools, etc.

But one thing was left out. No basis was laid as to the fundamentals of Christianity. It is well-known that Rationalism is gaining a strong foothold in some sections of Nonconformity. The Romeward trend of the Church of England was fully noted. The just-as-marked trend of a section of Nonconformity to Rationalism was not mentioned! A union of the kind would be a blessing if it were based on the truth, but is union in error a blessing? Let the history of the Church of Rome answer!

When we come to Scripture, there is unity already made in the text upon which the Bishop based his remarks, we are exhorted to "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." We are not told to make the unity, but to observe, to keep it. Every believer in Christ has been "baptised by the Spirit into the one body," and "we are members one of another." It is the individual recognition of this spiritual union which carries with it the blessing of God. Let Christians learn to love each other, in spite of ecclesiastical differences, and to "forbear one another in love," and there will come upon the people of God such a wave of Holy Spirit power, that it would shake and move the world! Questions as to baptism, the time of the Lord's coming, or church organisation should simply lead to mutual forbearance. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples," not if you see eye to eye with one another, but "if ye have love one to another."

We are—we have been made—one with every child of God on the face of the earth. Let us believe it, and recognise it in heart and life.

But the endeavour to keep this God-made unity necessarily separates us from all that does not belong to its circle. We are one "in Christ." He is the Head and centre of this union, and therefore that which is against Him must be against us. Evil doctrines that touch the glory of His person, or His work, are not to be borne with, but withstood. The living power in the Church is the Spirit. Any attack upon Christ will be resented and resisted by the Spirit, and therefore any federation of Christians which is based upon union at the expense of truth, will lack the only power that is available to withstand the attacks of Satan.

What the whole Church of God needs to-day, is to drink deeply into the one Spirit so that being filled with the Spirit of the living God it shall make the hearts of God's people burn in love towards each other, and melt in compassion for the great needy world of sinners, perishing all around us, sinners for whom Christ left the glory of heaven and died upon the Cross of shame. We need that fulness of the Spirit of God within us, and upon us, that made Charles Wesley cry out in the last century :—

O, that the world might taste and see
The wonders of his grace!
The arms of love that compass me,
Would all mankind embrace.

—Yours in Christ J. J. Sims.

THE Y.W.C.A.

CONFERENCE OF IRISH BRANCHES.

The twelfth annual conference of Y.W.C.A.'s in Ireland was held last week, in Dublin. On Monday evening a conversazione was held. Tuesday began with a devotional service, followed by a meeting, presided over by Mrs. S. H. Smith, who urged the importance of employing Christian methods in Christian work. Addresses followed by Miss Laura A. Baxter, on "Ambassadors for Christ"; Mrs. Daunt, on work in Cork; Miss Ewart, on Belfast; and Miss Richardson, on total abstinence. Various points in Association effort, raised by Miss Marrable, were discussed from a practical point of view. Mrs. Penn-Lewis spoke, with great power, on "What God can do for the Y.W.C.A."

In the afternoon Mrs. S. H. Smith, in the course of her presidential address, told how she had lately offered for foreign mission work, but the C.M.S. Medical Board had refused to sanction her going abroad. She felt, therefore, that God meant her to continue her home work. Miss Bradshaw then spoke on servants of God. Statistics given as to Irish branches showed the membership to 15,617 and the branches 330. The need of a travelling secretary is greatly felt. A lady has offered £10 towards her salary, but £50 is required. Papers followed by Miss Brock on "Time and Talents," Miss L. Pim on "Mill Girls and Factory Hands," Mrs. Penn-Lewis on "Power from on High," and Miss Baxter on "Personal Witness."

The conference throughout was felt to be practical, high-toned, and well fitted to reanimate and hearten the workers and secretaries in many parts.

At Shaftesbury House, Burton-on-Trent, a very successful missionary social was held lately to welcome Miss Emily Smith (North Africa). A most interesting account of the work was given, illustrated by photos and native costume. From October 17 to 21 special meetings have been conducted by Miss Haddon, who visited the Y.W.C.A., soon after the opening of Shaftesbury House. Many remember that visit with thankfulness. The attendances at the two meetings on Sunday, and all the evening gatherings, has been most gratifying and encouraging.

The workers in Y.W.C.A., Dundee, praise God for continual prosperity, large additions to membership, and souls saved. Large open-air meetings are held on Sabbath evenings, and frequently earnest troubled faces betoken conviction. The hall is usually full, and rarely a night passes without our seeing fruit. The work among the millworkers at the Y.W.C.A. Welcome goes forward. The Monday sewing class and Sabbath Bible classes have a large attendance, and the Thursday and Friday Gospel meetings are very encouraging. Open-air meetings are held at various closes in the neighbourhood, and the lodging-houses are also visited by devoted workers. We ask prayer that God would continue to carry on his own work, and show us yet greater things.

The annual meetings of the Y.W.C.A. (Brighton branches) on Tuesday, 22nd, at the Pavilion, were fairly well attended. The Countess of Chichester presided in the afternoon, and Mr. T. R. Tufnell in the evening. Both meetings were addressed by Rev. Evan Hopkins, and the account of work and progress during the year was given by Miss Hedley, the lady superintendent of Victoria Home. More than 600 had passed through the Home during the year. Extracts were read from letters from several who had expressed gratitude for blessings received. Mrs. Hind-Smith addressed the afternoon meeting, giving account of the general work of the Association, which could claim 200,000 members at home and in the colonies. Mrs. Cave (president of the Brighton branches) spoke of the missionary success which had attended the general work of the Society, and mentioned that hundreds of missionaries were in connection with it, among them, four of those lately martyred in China. The presidents of the afternoon and evening meetings gave very earnest and profitable words.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Listowel, co. Kerry, Y.M.C.A. are arranging to build a Y.M.C.A. Hall.

Vigorous Youths' Sections are being organised in the city of Dublin, Dundalk, and Mountpottinger.

The Kingston and Surbiton Association has issued a strong programme for the winter; also a call to a membership campaign.

Dundalk Association is actively engaged in promoting Y.M.C.A. work in the small towns and villages in the county of Louth.

Messrs. F. Marcus Wood and Montague Beauchamp are making a tour of the Irish Y.M.C.A.'s in the interest of the China Inland Mission.

The formal opening of the premises of the Hawick Association took place on October 21. About a hundred members and associates have been enrolled.

Tralee Association, formed a few years ago, has overflowed the small house in Barrack-lane, and are in new premises in a more prominent position in Nelson-street.

The Young Men, of Sydney, states that the Geelong Association has been holding, in connection with its anniversary, a special mission to young men, with good results.

The first meeting of the council of the North-Eastern District Union, incorporated, was held on Saturday at the residence of the president, Mr. C. S. Wilson, Sunderland, when there was a very large attendance.

The Birkenhead P.S.A. and Sunday evening service continue to be well attended, upwards of 450 being present at each service on Sunday last. Arrangements have been made for Mr. W. R. Lane to conduct a mission from Nov. 24 to 29.

The Islington organ says:—Our open-air services for this season have been brought to a close, with indications of much blessing. At the close of the meeting one backslider was restored, and another remained to testify of spiritual help received from these services.

A conference was held in Dublin, on Thursday, 24th, of the Associations in Mid-Ireland District. The following associations were represented: Dublin, Dundalk, Kingstown, Rathmines, Tinahely. After the transaction of the usual routine business, Mr. Robert McCann read a paper on "How to Reach Young Men in Small Towns and Villages."

Mr. L. D. Wishard, who lately made a four years' tour of the world in connection with the Y.M.C.A. and the Student Volunteer Movement, has issued in New York a book entitled "A New Programme of Missions," giving an account of his observations. The volume, which is not yet published in this country, cannot fail to be of deep interest alike to Y.M.C.A. and mission workers.

At the annual meeting of the Aberdeen Association held lately, it was stated that forty ministers in charges, twenty doctors, and many teachers, forty foreign missionaries, and seven evangelists in stated employment, had been members of that Association, and that but for the Association and its late secretary (Mr. Shirreffs), as far as man could see, not half of these would be in the foreign field to-day.

The Eastern Counties District Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s took place at King's Lynn on Wednesday week, when numbers of delegates gathered from the various Associations in the district. Mr. C. W. Perry, president of the Lynn Y.M.C.A., presided. A practical paper on "The Organisation and Management of Associations" was contributed by Mr. W. K. Cossons, which led to a profitable discussion; another paper was given by Mr. Alan Colman, of Norwich, on "The Operations of the Y.M.C.A." The Conference was a most successful one, and it is felt by those who have an extensive knowledge of the district that reforms have been introduced which will have far-reaching results. The following particulars were submitted:—Associations in district increased by 3; membership by 300; debt on the building account reduced by £2000; attendance at meetings for young men increased by 300 weekly; and mixed gatherings by 100 weekly.

IN FRENCH VILLAGES.—A correspondent writes from Aouste, Drôme: "The Lord gives me much encouragement among children and Romanists. It is a positive joy to be able to show Roman Catholics from their own mass-book that the Lord Jesus is a totally different being from their representation of Him. The mass-book contains a hundred passages of Scripture, and thus becomes a thorough weapon against Romanism. Nor are men unreached. A gentleman here was beside himself on receiving Lasserre's valuable "Prends et Lis"—St. Augustine's plea for the Scriptures. 'Cannot make out if it is Protestant or Catholic! Must write and ask the bishop.' As far as I know, he did not write, but he began to read on a sick-bed, and we pray that the Lord will honour his Word to the man's salvation."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour has been formed in Camden Town in connection with Park Chapel, Hampstead-road. There are already thirty members.

It is significant to note that "Societies of Buddhist Endeavour," on the lines of the Christian Endeavour movement, have been established in Japan by the Buddhist and Shinto priests, in order to counteract the work of Christian teachers and societies. They advocate much of the philanthropy of the New Testament, and have begun to employ "Buddhist Biblewomen."

The gathering of 6000 young Endeavourers, all representatives of societies within the State of New York, in Brooklyn Academy the week before last was an inspiring sight. The two points which appeared to receive the most emphasis in the proceedings were a deepening of the spiritual life among the members and the importance of taking a more active and practical interest in matters pertaining to good government. The former theme was discussed by Dr. Cuyler and others, and Dr. Parkhurst gave the young men and women some vigorous counsel.

The Upper Holloway C.E. Society has celebrated its third anniversary by a tea and public meeting, Rev. J. R. Wood being in the chair. The secretary's report showed how the work was carried on. The numbers stand at 81 active, 11 associates, 21 honorary; total 113. Various services are conducted by members—open-air, Gospel, and temperance, also children's services. The Society is still supporting a native preacher at Dacca, and is now about to support an orphan girl in China, also help support printing press and schools at Wathin, Congo. Three hundred and sixteen visits have been made to poor, sick, and aged people. The Sunshine Committee has only been formed about three months, and they visit cripple children in connection with the Ragged School Union, teaching them of the Saviour's love for children.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Baptist Union of Scotland held its annual meetings in Edinburgh last week. A Zenana mission meeting was held.

The three Bechuana chiefs have been very warmly received in Scotland, and their earnest words have awakened much interest.

Dr. Adamson's congregation at E.U. Church, Edinburgh, have requested him to reconsider his resignation of the pastorate which he had tendered.

On the invitation of the Dundee branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, Lady Henry Somerset has agreed to visit Dundee during the first week of November.

At a Sabbath school conference in Aberdeen the view was expressed that the ideal time for the Sabbath school was before the morning service and not, as now, an hour after dinner.

The annual meetings of the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild at Paisley, last week, were full of live and practical interest. Temperance and missionary work are fostered by the Guild.

Mr. Quarrier is being sued in the Court of Session for delivery of children alleged to be Roman Catholics, but left in writing to his care by their mother, who was before her marriage a Protestant.

At a U.P. conference in Peterhead the question as to whether publicans should be admitted to church membership caused some divergence of opinion. Other topics considered were "An Evangelistic Ministry" and "The Prayer Meeting."

A meeting in Glasgow last week for the furtherance of Wesleyan foreign missions was the occasion of some stirring addresses by missionaries and others. A similar meeting in connection with the U.P. Church brought together a large and deeply interested audience.

A valedictory meeting was held in the Gartshore Hall, Edinburgh, on October 23, to bid God-speed to Miss Daisy Munro and Miss Mary Simson. They are both fully qualified doctors, and go early next month to Ranaghat (about fifty miles from Calcutta) to take charge of a small hospital for women here.

A MISSIONARY OBJECT LESSON.—A correspondent in Shanghai mentions a brother now engaged in missionary work. "Although advanced in years, being pressed in spirit, he came out on his own charges, and lives here. A man over sixty, with an income of £20 a year only, ventures out to China to work as a missionary entirely unconnected, and is hard at it studying the language successfully, wearing native dress, living in native style and house, and selling Gospels and tracts in city and country. God owns and honours such witnesses in these degenerate days. Would that there were many more so moved of his Spirit!"

ROTHERHITHE FREE CHURCH.

A THANK OFFERING and thanksgiving day was held at this live and lively meeting-house on Monday evening. It is entirely a working-class congregation, attendance about 1200; they begin to gather sometimes at 5.20 for a 6.30 meeting on Sunday evening. The thanksgiving was for £268, subscribed principally by themselves, to pay off a debt morally, but not legally, lying upon them. The pastor, or angel, or bishop of the church is a man of business, Mr. Thomas Richardson. They propose to build, in about two years, an unostentatious and useful structure, where the King's business (which requires haste) of soul-saving may be carried on. Mr. Richardson was previously a valued helper at the Great Assembly Hall, where, as well as here, the question does not arise, Why do not the work-people go to church? For in these scripturally-constituted and conducted churches they come in numbers sometimes larger than can be accommodated. M.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE FOR INDIA.

MRS. J. C. LAWSON, of the American Methodist Mission, Aligarh, India, writes thanking friends who have sent copies of religious papers and parcels of tracts for distribution among the continually increasing body of English-speaking natives. She encloses a letter from Mrs. W. A. Scotland, of Chittagong, E. Bengal, who has done much to circulate good reading matter, by a carefully arranged system, worked by Christian Endeavourers. Many classes of people are reached, some by lending, others by giving. She has decided to build a mat-room in which to store wholesome literature, and welcome readers every evening, as well as to carry on Christian work. The C.E. Society is supporting a girls' school, and is not able to render help towards the new enterprise.

Mrs. Lawson says: "I pray that someone may be disposed to send Mrs. Scotland some assistance; about £10 would supply all her needs, and enable hundreds of sailors and others to learn more of the Gospel. Chittagong is on the East coast of India, midway between India and Burmah. Mrs. Scotland is not a missionary, but the wife of a civil engineer, and is letting her light shine in this dark land. She will be glad to receive more religious papers and tracts."

A BISHOP ON EDUCATION.—Bishop Kennion, speaking on the Church schools question at the Bath and Wells Diocesan Conference on Tuesday, said he recognised the grievance of Nonconformists in country districts that their children received daily religious instruction in Church principles or none at all. He was in favour of a Nonconformist teacher or minister being allowed to enter, under carefully prepared conditions, a Church school, when there was no Board or Nonconformist school, to impart religious teaching to those children whose parents desired it.

THE PEACE SOCIETY.—The commercial depression of past months has somewhat interfered with the propagandist activities of this society; but it may be fairly said that its work has not really suffered. It has, perhaps, gained in vigour and efficiency what it may have formerly lost in diffusion. The society has been kept in touch, as far as possible, with every movement that has tended to advance its object—the promotion of peace upon the basis of Christian principles. It has maintained a varied correspondence and an alertness in all matters relating to the promotion and maintenance of peace, and has been always ready to serve and aid wherever possible, without respect of persons. Latest details of work at home and abroad form interesting reading, which may be obtained from the secretary, Dr. W. Evans Darby, 47, New Broad-street, E.C.

MOSLEM AND DRUSE GIRLS AT BEYROUT.—For many years Miss Taylor has carried on Christian work among the orphan and neglected Moslem, Druse, and Jew girls of Beyrout and its neighbourhood. Dr. Torrance, medical missionary at Tiberias, has testified to the plain, economical, though bright, homely, healthy Christian spirit which pervades the work, and the large amount of spiritual fruit which Miss Taylor has been enabled by grace to see amongst her girls and their families. The good work includes not only schools, but medical missions and Sunday services, largely attended by Moslems in the quarter of the town where the school is situated. In one of her letters Miss Taylor tells of "a nice meeting with our old girls, and they proposed, of their own accord, to meet every Sabbath afternoon in their different houses for prayer, reading, and singing." The general secretary of this work is Mr. Wm. Ferguson, Kinmundy, near Mintlaw, Aberdeenshire.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

A VERY welcome visitor was in Oxford last week in the person of Mr. T. E. Alvarez, formerly of Jesus College, and when up here the life and soul of the O.I.C.C. Mr. Alvarez has been two years in West Africa as vice-principal of Fourah Bay College, and gave an account of the work there to a gathering at Wycliffe Lodge.

Commercial-road Baptist Church had its anniversary last week, when a former pastor, Rev. W. Hackney, of Birmingham, preached, and addressed a meeting. The church is in a very poor neighbourhood, but is working hopefully along right lines under Rev. H. B. Case, the present pastor.

Christian Endeavour seems to be taking firm hold in Oxford. The second anniversary of the branch at the Methodist Free Church was held last week, and a very useful conference was held. Mr. Purser, of Leamington, read a paper on "Some Essentials of an Ideal Society," and the Mayor of Oxford (Alderman Cooper) also spoke.

Wesleyan Foreign Missions were ably advocated at the annual meeting on Wednesday last by Rev. A. H. Hocken, of India, who spoke of the great and increasing scope for work among the class called "Young India."

The Convention for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life began on Monday with two addresses by Revs. E. H. Hopkins and C. G. Moore, which were felt to be words in season. The attendance was very good, and there is every prospect of a time of great spiritual refreshment.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Tuesday, October 22, the Cambridge supporters of the Church Pastoral Aid Society held their annual meetings in the Guildhall. The special speaker was Rev. Wilfred Davies, of Whitechapel. There was a somewhat sparse attendance, but that this was not due to lack of interest in the working of the Society is shown by the fact that the subscriptions received this year exceed in total the amount received last year.

On Friday the first meeting of the term of the Church Missionary Union took place in the Henry Martyn Hall. Dr. Lankester gave a bright and short account of the medical branch of the C.M.S., carried on in Amritsar.

The Sunday evening meetings in the Alexandra Hall were recommenced last Sunday, Dr. Moule being the speaker. His words were especially helpful to those who came out on the Lord's side the preceding Sunday. His advice to us all was, "Be constant in prayer; make a daily study of your Bible, and be reverent in the House of God."

At the Sunday daily prayer meetings in November, held in the Henry Martyn Hall, Dr. Moule hopes to give short addresses, lasting half an hour, on the Epistle to the Ephesians.

DURHAM.

Under the guidance and tutelage of Rev. H. E. Fox, there has long existed an Evangelical nucleus in the University. And through Mr. Fox's Saturday evening Greek Testament lectures, and in other ways, many students have found rallying places, to strengthen themselves and strike out upon the lines of Wesley at Oxford, of Keith Falconer at Cambridge, and of many later leaders of active work for our Lord.

This term, under the presidency of Rev. H. E. Fox, the Durham students have merged the Sunday-school, lodging-house, and other work in one union, affiliated to the British College Christian Union, and are carrying on the already existing active work with the increase of numbers and enthusiasm which arises from a more definite organisation. The least obvious, but by no means the least effectual gain of this step is the daily prayer-meeting, at which members of the union meet.

Although only recently commenced, the regular attendance at it evidences that there is a power at work which is able to do greater things. And the earnest prayer of the members is that the influence of the Holy Spirit shall daily grow in the University, and a deepening of spiritual life go side by side with the education of mind, and training of the body.

A MEMORIAL TO DR. PHILLIPS.—The Sunday-school Union of the N.-W. P. and Oudh has determined to open a subscription for a memorial to Dr. Phillips. This memorial is to be a life of Christ for children, to be published in Hindi. The book is to be in simple language and well illustrated. Rev. T. S. Wynkoop, secretary of the Tract Society, Allahabad, is chairman of the committee in charge of the memorial fund.

AMERICAN NOTES.

DR. L. W. MUNHALL has had an encouraging time, with large attendances, in a mission at Philadelphia.

Thursday, October 10, was observed as a day of prayer for young women throughout the United States.

Mr. D. L. Moody recently gave an address in New York in connection with the Evangelistic Association of New England.

A Missionary Congress was held at Peoria, Ill., on October 17-20. Great results were expected in the revival of missionary interest.

Major Whittle, aided by Major Cole and Mr. J. H. Burke, has been evangelising with every token of real and fruitful interest at Kalamazoo, Mich.

Preb. H. W. Webb-Peploe gave his last address in the States on this visit, at the Y.M.C.A. hall, New York, on Friday, October 18th. He sailed for England next day.

The Social Purity Movement in America has received a decided stimulus through a great united convention held at Baltimore in the middle of October. It is stated that landladies in Boston have organised a union for securing immunity in the keeping of disorderly houses.

CHOLERA IN MOROCCO.

DR. ROCHA, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, accompanied by his wife, Miss Hubbard, and Miss Dr. Breeze, of the North Africa Mission, arrived at Tetuan on October 10, to see what they could do in aid of the victims of the cholera plague. In a letter to Rev. John Wilkinson, Mrs. Rocha says: "I hear that up to Friday, October 11, 600 Moors, and 170 Jews had died. The Moors take no medicine, and will have no doctor.

"The Jews are very grateful that we have come at such a time as this to help them. The city of Tetuan has no European population, only Moors and Jews. In the Jewish quarter, there are said to be six thousand people, and they live packed like herrings. The houses are very small, and bad smells prevail."

EALING.—A four days' convention here last week on the spiritual life was a time of much refreshing from God's presence. Telling messages were delivered by some well-known servants of God, and the missionary interest was fully sustained.

THE PRESS PRAYER UNION has now been definitively constituted, and it is intended to hold an inaugural meeting in one of the smaller rooms at Exeter Hall next Monday evening, from 6 to 7 o'clock. All members of the Press, whether men or women, who are in sympathy with the object, are invited.

SOUTHSEA MISSION.—God is prospering this work, especially in the Sunday-school, which is increasing in number, so that over one hundred new scholars have been added during the last few weeks, and some have been converted. In this branch of the work difficulty arises from the want of class-rooms for our senior classes. After much waiting upon God we have resolved to build three class-rooms large enough to accommodate at least sixty. This will cost, including furniture and some few needful alterations to the hall, about £160, which is only a small sum to accomplish such a great work and so very much needed. JOHN DENNING.

Myrtle House, St. James'-road, Southsea.

DAY-HOME AT DOVADOLA.—Dovadola is an ancient village, not very far from Venice, on the old coach-road through the Apennines from Forli to Florence. Its inhabitants, numbering about 800, are chiefly engaged in agriculture. Last year my husband and I visiting the place became interested in the people. The result was that a few months ago I received from them a touching appeal, signed by twenty heads of families, entreating me to found a day-home, to save their children "from the contamination of the streets, where they learn all that is evil before they are old enough to go to the communal schools." The expenses of installation are already covered. The landlord of the pastor's house, a Roman Catholic, saying that "all ought to have a hand in so beneficent a thing," has built a large airy hall on purpose for the home, which he lets to us at a very low rent; and the necessary furniture has already been provided. The office of Mammina (little mother) has been undertaken by Signora Bruni, the pastor's wife, and a good Protestant woman will be the matron and teacher. The admittance will be free to the poor, whilst a small fee will be charged to those who can afford it. The instruction will be simple, and founded on the Gospel. The expenses of the whole work will be but small—£50 a year will cover everything, including the sea-bathing.

JULIA ROBERTSON.

Ca San Leonardo Catecumeni, Venice.

OBITUARY.

REV. H. GIBSON, QUEENSLAND.

Intelligence has been received at the Colonial Missionary Society's office of the death of Rev. H. Gibson, in Queensland. Mr. Gibson, who has only been out in the colonies for six years, was stationed in the Peak Mountain district, and had charge of the churches at Flinders, Milbong, and Teviotville. After taking a service at Teviotville he started on horseback to visit some sick persons. He was found unconscious on the roadside, and shortly afterwards expired.

DR. ROBERT BROWN.

In many a heart Dr. Robert Brown held a warm place as the editor of "Science for All," and author of those useful compilations, issued by Messrs. Cassell, "The Countries of the World," "The Peoples of the World," and "The Story of Africa and its Explorers." He had travelled in all the zones, on sea and land, and was a specialist in botany. He was the author of a large number of scientific memoirs, and a diligent contributor to the daily Press. Dr. Brown died on Saturday last at Streatham, aged fifty-three.

REV. H. KITCHING.

We hear with regret of the passing away of Rev. H. Kitching, on October 21st. His end was peaceful and bright. He was a brave, able, and good man, fixed in principle, and with his foot firmly planted in the old paths. His piety was clear and strong, and of recent years became very ripe and beautiful by his continued close communion with God. For many years he held a pastorate at Portsmouth, but for some time past he has lived in retirement. By those who had the privilege of knowing him he was a man greatly beloved.

REV. J. DE KEWER WILLIAMS.

This well-known Congregational minister passed away on Friday. He was born in 1817, in Hackney—the parish in which his best work was afterwards done. He began his pastoral responsibilities at Edmonton, whence he went to Limerick, then Camberwell, and finally, in 1874, to Old Gravel Pit Chapel, Hackney, where he has since laboured with great acceptance. It is stated as an example of his personal influence, that from a class of young men which he conducted in the forties in Limerick there came no less than six successful Nonconformist ministers, including Rev. Robert Rae, of Yorkshire, Rev. Alexander Murray, of Peterborough, and Rev. Julius Benn. It was, however, as a lecturer he was most widely known, gaining for himself the title 'Sydney Smith of the Dissenters."

MISS A. BORROWMAN.

The Fairfield Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, has sustained a great loss by the death of Miss Anne Borrowman, who has for many years been an earnest worker. Her Sunday afternoon Bible-class has been a place of blessing to many. The funeral took place on October 15, in Toxteth Cemetery, when Rev. C. C. Lundie paid a warm tribute to her memory. In the evening a memorial service was held in Fairfield Presbyterian Church, which was largely attended, and testified to the esteem in which this Christian lady was held by the community among whom she lived. Her influence among upwards of 100 working men who formed her Bible-class is one answer to the pressing question of the day, "How to bring working-men to church." Many of these men were not only reclaimed from drunkenness by her efforts, but led to faith in Christ, or became members of the church. It was the happy Christian life, and warm sympathetic interest in them that God used as the means of blessing.

MR. W. J. FOSTER.

There recently passed away at Middleton-by-Wirksworth a young man of great promise Mr. Walter J. Foster, of Ashbourne, had for two years been engaged in preaching, and was recently accepted as a student for the Congregational ministry at the Theological Institute, Nottingham. He was a clever draughtsman, having carried off many prizes; but he gladly sacrificed temporal prospects in order to give himself to Gospel work. On Sunday, Sept. 21, he caught a chill while fulfilling a preaching engagement; complications having developed, he submitted to a surgical operation, which, although immediately successful, did not save his life. He died joyfully and triumphantly, urging eternal things upon the attention of one of his doctors, and at the last shouting "Glory."

During his brief ministry Mr. Foster was cheered by many tokens of his work being owned of God. Seven young men in one village and several in others were led to come out for God through his efforts, and since his happy end at least two have resolved to follow his faith, and help on the public work in which he spent his life. He openly put to shame and silence an infidel lecturer in a colliery village near Nottingham. Mr. Foster was only twenty-one years old, and great things were expected by those who watched his unfolding career. He was an earnest Christian Endeavourer, and always ready to help in good work. These features of his character, with others full of interest, were, after his death, referred to in many pulpits in Ashbourne and neighbourhood.

REV. WILLIAM KNIGHT, HEMSWORTH.

This true servant of Christ, who lately passed to his rest, came of a family in which the ministry is a tradition. He entered on his work in 1848 at Honley, whence he went to Oughtibridge. In 1874 he was preferred to the vicarage of Felkirk, which he held to 1879, when the trustees of the Holgate Hospital appointed him to the post which he held until his death. Warmly attached to the principles of Evangelical Churchmanship, his cheery hopeful spirit always inclined to the brighter side of religious thought; and himself, "rejoicing in hope," he ever strove to carry others with him in the same upward path. He possessed in an eminent degree the power of gaining the confidence of young men; and many alike among clergy and laity will be found to acknowledge how much of their spiritual life they owe to his wise and fatherly counsel and direction. So long as health permitted he was never absent from the platform of the C.M.S. meetings, both in Sheffield and at Exeter Hall; and other agencies, both for home and foreign work, found in him a warm and consistent supporter and advocate.

PERSONALIA.

Lord Bennet, so well known in evangelistic circles, was married last week to Miss Van Marter, of Tacoma, U.S.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn requests that during a remainder of his stay in Austria all letters be addressed to him at 28, Leechgasse, Gratz.

Mr. Sydney Watson, of Winchester, the well-known writer, has been laid aside by ill-health since June, and is now resting at North Malvern.

Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner has arrived in England from Kalimpong, to take out his wife and children. He will return in time to meet Mr. Hudson Taylor, who is hoping to visit the Tibetan workers before coming to England.

Miss Octavia Jary, who underwent a most severe and dangerous operation nearly a month ago, is now progressing very favourably, and there is every reason to hope that in a short time her complete recovery will be assured.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, Vicar of St. Michael and All Angels, Blackheath, S.E., has been appointed Commissary to Bishop Cassels, of North-Western China; any contributions to the work of the new diocese can be sent to him.

Miss Procter writes on the eve of leaving for Beyrout, thanking the friends who have so lovingly co-operated with her in her endeavours to raise funds for the building of a house for the boys. Of the £600 needed, £250 has been raised, and placed in the hands of trustees. She is hopeful that the remainder may be secured speedily. The help of a medical lady is greatly needed in the medical branch of the work. Address, the Mission-schools, Schwifat, Beyrout, Syria.

Madame Antoinette Sterling, who shortly sails for America, has been the recipient of an interesting presentation made by a deputation of ladies representing the National British Women's Temperance Association. The presentation has taken the form of a heart-shaped broach, composed of diamonds, to which was attached a bow of white ribbon, the official badge of the society. The gift was presented by Mrs. Pearsall Smith, who expressed the grateful thanks of the Association to Madame Antoinette Sterling for her kindness on many occasions when by her singing she has rendered inestimable service to the White Ribbon cause, and especially at the international meetings last June.

PORTSMOUTH SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.—Founded by Miss Robinson in 1874, this work is now managed by Mr. Sidney Smith as hon. superintendent. He says that many of the men who have listened to the reading of God's Word in the barrack-rooms have been drawn to the Institute in search of further instruction in matters relating to their eternal welfare. In addition to Gospel services and social meetings in the Institute itself, troopship visitation goes on both at Portsmouth and Southampton. In the coffee-shed, opened at the latter place, thousands of soldiers have, at one time or another, found a comfort and a convenience One of the workers has the special duty of sending parcels of books and tracts to men who have left for India or elsewhere; and in this way touch is maintained with many of those who had passed through the Institute. There is also a special department of the work for the benefit of soldiers' wives and children.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Nestor, Cheshire.—Mr. Thos. London, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a series of Gospel services here under the auspices of the Christian Workers' Union. We feel sure that much good has been done, although no fruit has been seen as yet. W. H. T.

Mr. E. P. Telford's mission in the Splott-road Baptist Church, Cardiff, is attracting large congregations nightly, and many are professedly deciding for Christ. Mr. Telford begins next Sunday a twelve days' mission in Baillie-street Chapel, Rochdale, for which prayer is desired.

Ireland.—A two days' series of evangelistic services has been held in Christ Church, Cork, by Rev. Arthur J. Moore, of Coleraine. Similar services have been held at the Curragh Camp by Rev. John Good, Methodist Conference evangelist, and at Castlereagh-road, Belfast, by Rev. E. B. Cullen, of Londonderry.

Pool, Cornwall.—A three weeks' address has been conducted in the Free Methodist Chapel in this village by Mr. G. W. Clegg. Night after night crowds have gathered, so that more than once the chapel would not hold all who came. Some wonderful cases of conversion have been granted, aged men and women coming out boldly for Christ.

Messrs. Macgregor and Crawford, of the Edinburgh Gospel Mission, have closed a series of crowded meetings in Kirkwall, Orkney. God's Spirit was made manifest from the beginning. The interest increased as the meetings advanced, with the result that not a few anxious ones decided for Christ. These evangelists are now labouring in Lerwick.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Sunday-school has held a week of Gospel services, conducted by Mr. Newton Jones. Each night there was a meeting for boys and girls at 6.45, and for adults at eight. Bible readings were held and greatly enjoyed. Every service was largely attended. Some professed decision, while backsliders were restored, and Christians moved to a fuller consecration.

Mr. Arthur Browett, a young evangelist from Birmingham, whom God appears at present to be greatly using, concluded on Saturday a seven days' mission in the Bayswater Y.M.C.A. rooms. The services have been marked by much interest, and several young men from the neighbouring houses of business have been led to the Saviour. Mr. Browett spoke on Lord's Day evening in the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Bloemfontein-road, W., with great power, and not a few seemed pierced to the heart.

South Creake, Norfolk.—A ten days' special mission has recently been held in the national schoolroom, by Mr. W. Monro Collings, of Gosport. The hand of the Lord was evidently with his servant, and night by night the people pressed in to hear the Word of God, many of them being of the class who do not usually attend any place of worship. The work has evidently been not of man, but of God, who was making his mighty power and presence known. On four occasions Mr. Collings conducted services in the parish church, by permission of the Bishop of Norwich. He also held a three days' mission in the Assembly-room, Fakenham, from October 16th to 18th, under Y.M.C.A. auspices. God richly blessed the effort. The afternoon Bible readings have been seasons of refreshing.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—One of God's children in Victoria, Mashonaland, desires earnest prayer for the white population in that district, most of whom are living godless lives: he asks prayer that the few Christians may be strengthened to witness for God.—For blessing on the eight days' evangelistic services at Billesmere Hall, Ordsall, Salford, by Mr. S. J. Mayzes, November 3 to 10.—For Mr. J. J. Scroggie's mission, at Chelmsford, commencing November 3, and as Southampton, commencing November 17.—For the missions to be held in Canada this autumn and winter by Rev. W. Hay Aitken and Rev. George C. Grubb. Mr. Aitken is to hold missions in Montreal October 26, November 14, Halifax, November 16, December 3; St. John's, N.B., December 6 to 22; Ottawa, December 24 to January 13, and then in Toronto and Woodstock. Mr. Grubb is to be in Winnipeg, Toronto, and other places. Pray that these special efforts may be a great blessing throughout Canada.—Believers are asked to unite at 7 a.m., at noon, and in the evening every first of the month in prayer for the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the whole Church of Christ, and for fuller blessing on the unconverted.—For the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on Clavering and Langley Savill during a month's mission by Mr. A. J. Mahomet.—For an eight days' mission at Sefton Hall, Lower Richmond-road, Putney, by Mr. F. H. Dawe, Nov. 3 to 10.—For blessing on a three weeks' mission at the Leedstown Wesleyan Chapel, Cornwall.—For a special mission at St. John's, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, by Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield, November 3 to 15.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The sixth anniversary and reunion of students of the Church Training College for Lay Workers was held on Tuesday last.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol held a visitation last week, taking for the subject of his address "The Foundations of Sacred Study," dealing at great length with Biblical criticism.

The Bishop of Liverpool has added another to the numerous new churches built during his episcopate, the foundation-stone of Emmanuel Church, Southport, being laid on Saturday week.

We regret to learn that the health of Rev. G. D. Wyatt, Rector of Bermondsey, has completely broken down. The doctors enjoin three years of complete rest, and Mr. Wyatt has therefore resolved to resign.

The Bishop of London has selected for the important parish of Holy Trinity, Paddington, one of the most hard-working and successful of the clergy of the diocese, Rev. J. G. Pilkington, vicar of St. Mark's, Dalston.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone left for West Africa by Saturday's mail from Liverpool. Mrs. Ingham accompanies him, and it is hoped her health may allow her to remain out during the approaching dry season, as she is stronger than when invalided home, now more than two years ago.

The Bishop of Coventry addressed the C.P.A.S. clergy in St. Luke's, Liverpool, on Thursday, and preached to a general congregation in the evening on Home Mission work. There was a conference on "Home Missions" in the Y.M.C.A. in the afternoon.

Medical mission work in connection with the Church Missionary Society has now a separate organisation with officers, and its own magazine. Those who would know more of this work should obtain The Medical Mission Quarterly from the C.M. House, Salisbury-square, E.C.

The Church Pastoral Aid Volunteers are holding a series of interesting monthly meetings in the rooms, Falcon-court, 32, Fleet-street. On Monday, November 25, Rev. E. A. Stuart will lead, and on December 16 the Archdeacon of London will speak on the Divine presence in common life.

On Thursday evening a meeting was held at Norwich to protest against reunion with Rome. Sir A. Bagge presided, and, in opening the proceedings, contrasted what he termed the happy and prosperous condition of Protestant countries with the degraded, stagnant state of Roman Catholic nations. Rev. F. J. Hamilton, of London, moved a resolution declaring that reunion with the corrupt and fallen Church of Rome would be the greatest possible calamity which could befall the Church of England. Rev. C. H. Wainwright, of Blackpool, seconded the resolution, and observed that Rome showed herself as arbitrary and intolerant as ever. To the question, "Shall we go back to Rome?" England must return, once for all, the emphatic and unmistakeable answer, "Never."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Rowland Sturt has been recognised as pastor at Stourport.

Rev. R. Chatfield Jude has been ordained to the pastorate of Erith-avenue Church.

Mr. E. W. Johnson has been appointed Professor of English literature at Cheshunt College.

Rev. Levi Rees, pastor of Newton Abbot, has returned from America, and resumed his labours.

Rev. T. J. Barker, late of Nottingham, has been ordained at St. Stephen's (Countess of Huntingdon), Rochdale.

Bulinghurst Church has five useful mission stations in surrounding villages, served by about a dozen local preachers.

Rev. W. Pedr Williams, of Lower Clapton Church, is lying seriously ill at his residence suffering from an attack of typhoid fever.

A new mission-hall is being erected at Sutton-in-Ashfield, on the site of the Sunday-school, which has been used for some years by the congregation at High Pavement.

Mr. John Butterworth, late assistant to Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant at Hinde-street, has accepted the pastorate at Brandeston, and commenced his ministry there.

A new mission hall, designated "St. Andrew's Hall," has been erected at Park Hill, Brighton, at a cost of £2000. The building, which will be under the charge of Mr George Bird, evangelist, has been opened by Revs. J. B.. Figgis, H. Shearer, and General Stileman.

Memorial sermons of the late Rev. Thomas Orr, for twenty years pastor at Windsor, have been preached by Revs. A. Rowland and W. H. Summers. "Mr. Orr," writes a correspondent, "lived a noble Christian life, and acquired a peculiarly personal influence in Windsor."

At the autumnal meetings of Notts Union, Rev. A. J. Naylor delivered a presidential address on "The Presence and Power of the Holy Spirit." Mr. Chadbourne spoke on "National Education," Rev. R. B. Brindley on "The Growth of Sacerdotalism," and Rev. Speight Auty on "The Attitude of Congregationalists in relation to Church Establishments."

Calls.—Rev. John Holdess to Chapel-in-the-Field, Norwich; Rev. W. Parri Huws to Dolgelly; Rev. D. C. Harris, of Landore to Tredegar; Rev. James Wayman, late of Kentish Town, to Blackpool.

Resignations.—Rev. John Neighbour, of Cirencester; Rev. Sampson Nicholls, of Oliveret, Toronto; Rev. T. Sissons, of Beckenham.

BAPTIST.

Hanslope Church has celebrated its jubilee.

Rev. James Briggs has been recognised as pastor at Praed-street Chapel, Paddington.

Rev. Philip Lewis has been welcomed on his return to the pastorate at Chipping Campden.

Rev. W. J. Juniper sailed in the Prome on Saturday for Rangoon, Burmah, where he has accepted the pastorate.

The pastor and officers of Vernon Chapel, King's Cross-road, W.C., have started a "Compassionate Relief Society" for helping cases of distress in the neighbourhood.

Memorial-stones of a new chapel were laid last week at Sarratt, Herts. Professor Gould gave an address in the afternoon in the open air, and in the evening a public meeting was held.

A service took place in Salem, Dover, on Monday week, when farewell was taken of Rev. F. W. Jarry, who is entering upon mission work in Orissa. Dr. James Spurgeon gave the valedictory address.

Special services have been held at Boundary-road Baptist Church, Walthamstow, in connection with the pastor's third anniversary. On Sunday week Rev. W. Moxham preached in the morning and the pastor in the evening. On Monday a public meeting was held, at which Mr. H. Hudson presided. Addresses were given by Revs. G. T. Bailey, H. A. Burleigh, and W. Murray (pastor). The total number of members now on books is 270.

Rev. John Tuckwell has returned, after an absence of eight months, during which he has made a tour round the world, and has occupied his pulpit at Westbourne-grove.

A considerable contingent of missionaries left on Friday for India by the P. and O. s.s. Malta—Rev. R. H. Tregillus and family, Rev. G. Howells, B.A., B.D., Rev. F. W. Jarry, and Rev. R. M. Julian; the following ladies: Misses Clare, Mannington, and Way, also Miss Evans, who is leaving to be married to Rev. D. L. Donald.

Mr. James Coxeter, of Highgate-road Chapel, N.W., has given £250 as a thank-offering towards the cost of the new mission-hall in Falkland-road, Kentish Town. Mr. Coxeter, who is upwards of eighty years old, fell and broke his collar-bone while travelling in Switzerland a short time since, and has now quite recovered from the effects of the accident.

The second anniversary of the settlement of Rev. Reginald C. Evill, as pastor at Dawes-road, Fulham, was held on Sunday, October 20, when sermons were preached in the morning by Rev. W. Stott, and in the evening by Rev. H. Thomas. On the following day a sermon was preached by Rev. Newman Hall. In the evening a public meeting was held. Addresses were given by Revs. J. L. Brooks, H. J. Shirley, and W. T. Sears, Mr. W. Holmes, and the pastor. During the past year thirty-eight have been received into fellowship, there being now a membership of 175.

The twenty-third anniversary of Mr. Joseph Benson's honorary pastorate of the Belle Isle Mission, Brewery road, N., and the thirty-fourth year of his mission work in London, has been celebrated. A large and enthusiastic meeting was presided over by Mr. J. Williams Benn, who gave a stirring address. Amongst the speakers were Rev. H. O. Mackay, Messrs. W. T. Paton, J. E. Kirby, J. E. Jack, H. Whittenbury, and J. Benson. The report shows a net addition of nine new members during the year; the total membership is now 376; 760 members have joined the church in the twenty-three years of Mr. Benson's work, 653 of whom were on first profession of faith. The services continue to be largely attended. The Sunday-schools, nearly the largest in London, number 1500 children.

Large congregations gathered afternoon and evening at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Wednesday, October 23, to hear Pastor Archibald G. Brown. There was an appropriateness in his visiting the West Cliff Tabernacle, for the ladies of the congregation have for many years sent up a large box of clothing every Christmas for the poor of East London. The welcome he received must have been gratifying to the preacher. In the afternoon service the exposition of Psalms iii. and iv. were most interesting and helpful. He described them as David's morning and evening prayers, which, while each is complete in itself, should never be separated. The sermon was a Bible reading on the subject of "El-Shaddai, or the All-Sufficient God," which was followed with interest and delight by the whole congregation. In the evening the address dealt with backsliders, and how the Church ought to deal with them. His text was Gal. vi. i., and the tenderness of his appeal to backsliders, and the fidelity with which he reminded the Church of her duty, have left a profound impression.

Calls.—Rev. F. Wynne, of Barrow, to Batley; Rev. John Muirhead to Palmerston North, New Zealand; Rev. T. A. Williams to Sydenham, New Zealand; Mr. R. E. Sears to Providence, Clapham Junction; Rev. W. H. Stevens, to Grove Chapel, Stratford; Rev. E. Aubrey, of Abercairn, to Glasgow.

Resignations.—Rev. G. W. Oldring, of Long Sutton; Rev. M. M. Thompson, of Guilsborough; Rev. W. R. Foster, of Earl's Colne.

METHODIST.

The Bible Christian president, Rev. John Thorne, has conducted a mission at Barnstaple.

Rev. Joseph Jackson has decided to leave the East London Wesleyan Mission at the next Conference.

A missionary convention, representing eleven Primitive Methodist circuits, was held at Swindon last week.

Sister Jeannette, of Bowron House, has concluded a very successful fortnight's mission in connection with Swadlincote Church, Burton-on-Trent.

Miss Hornby has, after two years' training at the Zenana Medical College and Bowron House Deaconesses' Home, left England by the s.s. Himalaya for Ningpo.

The Wesleyan Methodist missionaries at Mashonaland have baptized their first native converts, five adults being admitted to church membership at Epworth, where the mission has been established for three years.

So far as London is concerned, "Children's Sunday" was a great spiritual success. The most careful preparations were made in all the larger schools, and there is good reason to hope that the results will be permanent. Satisfactory reports have also been received from all over the country. Upwards of 80,000 copies of the annual Children's Letter were circulated.

The question of union between the Methodists of Australia and New Zealand has been making rapid progress among the Primitive Methodists of the Colonies recently. At a conference held in Adelaide, it was stated that next year would probably see union consummated in New Zealand; perhaps the year after in Victoria, and then South Australia and New South Wales would follow.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Most interesting anniversary services (semi-jubilee) have been held at Wolverhampton.

In connection with Brockley Church, a series of Saturday evening free entertainments has been inaugurated.

Dr. David Landsborough was ordained a medical missionary to Formosa on Sunday week, in his father's church at Kilmarnock.

The Church Building and Debt Extinction Fund is receiving increased support. Nearly £7000 have already been promised, in sums from five to two thousand pounds.

Rev. John Bogue, of Stockton-on-Tees, clerk of the Darlington Presbytery, has returned after sick leave, but has been forbidden to preach. His congregation will not hear of his resignation, and have granted Mr. Bogue a further leave of absence for an indefinite period.

The Camberwell Church has celebrated the twentieth anniversary of Rev. J. Reid Howatt's pastorate. Special services were held on Sunday week. On the following evening a soirée was held in commemoration of the event, which was largely attended by present and past members.

The official report of the conference of the Presbyterian Church in Wales, held recently in Cardiff, has reached us. It tells of a vigorous and hopeful work, not only in Cardiff, but far and wide over the Principality. It is admirably edited, and many of the papers seem to glow with Celtic fire and ardour.

Calls.—Rev. J. Howatson, of Horndean, to Walker; Rev. A. Murray, to Fossoway; Rev. A. Aitken, of Edinburgh, to Cambusnethan; Rev. C. F. Chaleson, of Tundergarth; Rev. R. Stevenson, of Gargunnock, to St. Andrew's, Edinburgh.

Coming Conferences.

Deepening of Spiritual Life.—Belfast, Nov. 4-8; Bradford, Nov. 5-8; Edinburgh, Nov. 11-16.

Rev. Andrew Murray will hold a three days' convention for the promotion and quickening of spiritual life, in Regent's-square Presbyterian Church, near King's Cross, Nov. 20, 21, and 22.

SOUTH AFRICA.—The mission of the Free Church of Scotland, under Rev. D. Doig Young, at Main, Tembuland, South Africa, reports evident growth throughout an extensive district, where work for God is carried on among the heathen. There are now five native evangelists labouring in the Gospel, besides Bible-women and male and female native teachers. The native church showed a membership for 1894 of 543. There is also much cause of rejoicing in the results of work among the heathen children. Mr. Young remarks how repeatedly and forcibly he is reminded by the spiritual blindness of the people that conversion is the work of God's Spirit; but looking back on the past year's labours he finds great reason to give thanks for abundant evidence that the Spirit has been working through the evangelistic efforts of himself and his helpers.

CONSUMPTION,
AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.
INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

101st INTERVIEW

With Mr. E. JACKSON, Newton Brae, Newton, near Glasgow.

CHEST DISEASE—RESULTING FROM INFLUENZA.

This case has not been published before.

The history of Mr. Jackson's case is very brief, but illustrates the importance of at once applying to Mr. Congreve for advice and medicine on the first signs of chest disease, instead of (as so often happens) allowing it to get a firm hold of the system, when the course of treatment is necessarily prolonged, and complete recovery delayed.

"Having seen a notice of Mr. Congreve's treatment in one of the weekly journals" (said Mr. Jackson), "I wrote to him in the summer of 1892. I had had an attack of influenza, which left me with a severe cough, much phlegm, heavy and yellow, some pain in the chest and left side. I was fevered and flushed, had experienced the exhausting night-sweats, and had lost both flesh and strength."

"I believe you had a rapid recovery to health under Mr. Congreve's treatment?"

"Yes; I made good progress, and at the end of August was able to tell Mr. Congreve that I was entirely free from the cough and pains, and was enjoying better health than I had done for a long time."

"And have you remained well ever since?"

"Quite well. If ever I had anything the matter with my chest again I should at once take the medicine. I have a very high opinion of it, and have recommended it to many others. In one case, that of a little boy who had been under medical treatment for some time without benefit, the parents obtained the medicine at my instigation, and he is getting on capitally."

As a token of his gratitude, Mr. Jackson very willingly gave me his permission to publish his statement.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. Notes and Comments.

A series of meetings for the deepening of spiritual life, to be addressed by Rev. Andrew Murray and others has been arranged by the Presbyterian Church in London. The arrangements are :—Wed., Nov. 20, 7 p.m., and Thur., Nov. 21, 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., in Regent-square Presbyterian Church ; Thurs., Nov. 21, 7 p.m., in Exeter Hall; Fri., Nov. 22, 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., in Regent Square Presbyterian Church ; Fri., Nov. 22, 7 p.m., in Exeter Hall. All the meetings, with the exception of that on Thursday morning, which is for ministers and office-bearers, are open to the public, and it is expected that Mr. Murray will speak at each meeting. Regent Square Church is within eight minutes' walk of King's Cross station. Earnest prayer is requested that these gatherings may be attended with the Divine blessing.

We are glad to report that since our last reference to the sending of The Christian to editors of papers in India there has been a further response, so that 48 editors are now receiving the paper. This covers nearly one-third of the list sent to us by Miss Leitch in connection with her letter which appeared in The Christian of 15th August. We trust the remaining names may be taken up by other friends, so that by the beginning of 1896 each of the 157 editors whose names we have may be in receipt of The Christian. We mention again for the convenience of those who may not have seen the previous notes that help may be rendered in two ways (a) by sending 8s. 10d., which covers subscription for one copy for one year, or (b) by sending own copy when done with, but by as early a mail as possible. In each case we are ready to furnish names from the list sent to us by Miss Leitch. All amounts are acknowledged in our donation list as well as by receipt from our postal agents.

A word of warning has been given by the Archbishop of York against unhealthy devotional manuals, by which he, and the bishops in whose names he spoke, mean Roman Catholic books of devotion. We could have wished that he had laid more emphasis upon the unscripturalness of the practice of praying to the Virgin Mary, and less upon its not being in harmony with the teaching of the Church of England, for to say so much about a Church is practically to lead on to that worship of systems and men which has been the danger of the true Church from the beginning. The Archbishop said that the clergy had only "to consider the spiritual condition of countries where this misguided worship had attained to its greatest height to see how it tended to constitute the blessed mother of our Lord as the chief object of devotion, and almost the ruling power in the courts of heaven." To say "misguided" worship is mild; it is idolatrous; and to say "blessed" and "holy" mother of our Lord is to lean to the practice he condemns.

Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, who is visiting the West Indies for the Colonial Missionary Society, has called at Syracuse, U.S.A., on his way, to address the American Congregational Council. When speaking of the sacerdotal tendencies of our times, he recalled a saying of Dr. Dale's that, if not checked, England, in less than fifty years, would be ready for reconciliation with Rome, a prophecy which seems to have too much truth in it. Dr. Barrett himself said that the longer he lived the more he realised the fact that if a man does not have "a strong Gospel to preach, with a Blood Atonement, a Holy Ghost, a new birth, a resurrection, a risen and ascended Lord, a heaven for believers and condemnation for the unjust, he has no place or business in a Congregational pulpit in England or America." No, nor in any other pulpit that professes to be Christian. Men are feeling as never before that these verities are verities, and may not be safely ignored or denied.

Whilst it may be true that there are some good Christians who join no fellowship of believers, there is well-deserved rebuke in Dr. Forsyth's remarks of some who stand aloof, that they are too religious to be satisfied with any of the forms of religion that are current. "One seldom observes that they think themselves too good for the world, though they are too religious for a church. They are sometimes very much at home in the world indeed." Why, even Carlyle said in the plainest words, that the best people he found in London, when he came to live in it, were the religious people.

As against the pretensions of an intellectualism which repudiates religion, it is well to be reminded, as J. B. Greene, junr., reminds us in the Presbyterian and Reformed Review, that Christianity is very stimulating intellectually, and that beyond all other books the Bible has made thinkers. Whenever reason has not been recognised in religion, the issue has been evil. In such cases faith either degenerates into superstition or loses the power to sustain itself. That is to say, every part of man's nature is appealed to by Scripture, and ought to be sanctified and strengthened by the truth. Our Saviour and the apostles appealed to reason and to every part of man, —his conscience, his heart, his imagination. The service of God is a reasonable service.

The Bible is the only true and exhaustive educational book. In the gymnasium the body is trained ; in the university the intellect is developed ; but the Bible alone quickens, regenerates, and renews, cultivates, educates, and edifies the spirit, which is the essential man.

Some preachers would have us regard their most extravagant statements as matters to be accepted without proof, apparently on the mere ground of eloquent presentation. Thus Canon Wilberforce, advocating the Romish practice of prayers for the dead, declares it to be "scriptural, primitive, and in accordance with the conclusions of modern psychology." We could name a host of standard expositors and theologians, and scientists of repute, who would not only come forward and deny this proposition, but also indignantly resent the flippant remark of the Canon, that the general recognition of such prayers is prevented by nothing but a "stupid, stolid, unenlightened prejudice." The Canon's idea of the communion of saints has ecclesiastical status (in Rome), but not Divine warrant (in Scripture) ; and he should know better than hurl epithets against those who intelligently hold by the latter and reject the former. His "facts" and "conclusions" are of no worth when brought to the teaching of Scripture legitimately interpreted ; primitive Christianity, correctly so-called ; or modern psychology as scientifically defined.

The Methodist Recorder is all in good time in writing on October 31 on the possibility of improving the May Missionary Meeting. The meeting for 1895 was far below the mark, not more than a hundred men being present, apart from the ministers. The suggestion now made is that of an evening meeting instead of a morning one, that it be shorter, and that it be brighter in character, with more singing and more speaking by missionaries. There are other societies which will do well to anticipate how they can make their May meeting more of a living power. Evening meetings certainly are more likely to get the people than morning ones, and persons are essential for more things than numbers.

Before these words come under the eyes of our readers we sincerely trust that the troubles at Belfast and Glasgow in the shipbuilding trade may have been settled. Surely we have had depression enough of trade without paralysing one of the largest and most distinctive industries in the country by a quarrel between men and masters. Of its merits we now say nothing, but of its consequences, if it proceeds, we can make a fair guess. Misery and injury to thousands, loss of trade, bad feeling, and some surrender on the part of each side to make peace possible. Is there anything at stake worth all that ? How seldom there is.

Rev. Charles Garrett would like to see the temperance party concentrate its efforts on obtaining shorter hours for the public-house to sell, Sunday closing, repeal of grocers' licences, registration of clubs, and power for districts to refuse granting new licences. He would also be willing to give the Gothenburg system a trial. For our own part, we shall be content to have the other things without that, and let us see what they will do towards making us a less drunken nation.

In a Bournemouth paper the other day there appeared an advertisement, from a firm of stock and share brokers, giving particulars of speculative operations and arrangements whereby they might be facilitated. The advertisement was in reality a series of instructions as to how to gamble on the Stock Exchange. Immediately following the announcement was a report headed "Shocking Suicide in a Bournemouth Train—A Stock Broker Shoots Himself." Ominous connection ! The victim, according to a note which he left, had "made a mess of everything." Gambling on the Stock Exchange is as immoral as gambling on the issues of the turf; and it is hardly surprising that those who do such things often become desperate and take their own lives. "Wealth gotten in haste shall be diminished; he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be unpunished" (Prov. xiii. 11, xxviii. 20. R.V. marg.).

The news of a meeting of Christians, Mohammedans, and Pagans at Ibadan, on the West coast of Africa, for the purpose of condemning the drink traffic, sounds strange but hopeful. The people have taken the matter up themselves, and in the Yoruba language have condemned Europe for its deadly work, and pledged themselves to support every effort which may be made in Europe or Africa to bring it to an end. One of the speakers referred to the love of some of his countrymen for liquor in this language:—"In talking to you, countrymen, to give up the liquor traffic, you will not like to hear because it is as one announcing to you the sad news of the death of your dear father or mother."

It was lately stated that "fourteen out of seventeen centuries which had passed had neglected the duty which Christ had enjoined to preach the Gospel to every creature." This must mean that only in the first three centuries of her life was the Church a missionary church. The mistake is a common one. A moment's thought will show that it is an error. At the end of three hundred and fifty years the conversion of Europe had hardly begun—when then did it take place save in the intervening years between 350 and 1750? And how did it take place but by means of missionaries? The conversion of the Goths and of the Franks took place between A.D. 340 and 508; of the Irish, the Picts, and the North of England between 431 and 490; of Southern Germany between 590 and 630; of Friesland between 628 and 719; of Germany between 715 and 789; of Denmark and Sweden between 800 and 1011; of Norway between 900 and 1030; of the Slavonic races between 800 and 1000; of Prussia and Lithuania between 1050 and 1410.

A good deal of this work was superficial, being often the so-called conversion of a king and his nation by baptism; it was also spoiled by the monasticism from which it sprang, and by its subservience to the See of Rome. But there was also the translation and preaching of the Word of God, and there were very frequently the zeal, the faith, and the holiness of a consecrated missionary. It is too large a question for our space, but there can be no doubt that had these labours always been carried on as they were, say by Willehad, a native of Northumbria, in Groningen and Drenthe, there would have been small need for the monk of Eisenach. The history of the conversion of Europe is a story full of instruction for to-day.

The state of the education question in England is grave; in Ireland it is critical. There is a demand for an Irish Roman Catholic university; the Papists wish to rule the board of intermediate education, and all the educational system; in the elementary schools they desire to place the usual signs of the Romish faith, and to have the usual acts of devotion taught the children; they seek the endowment of the Christian Brothers' Schools, and also of the convent schools; they have the same wish for their institutions for the blind, the lame, the imbecile, and orphans. The public purse is to be open for them to any extent to which they may wish to use it. The only persons who can prevent them from gaining their object appear to be the Presbyterians. But will they have courage and resolution enough to do it? We hope so; but there is a sad, nerveless state of public feeling when Rome is encountered. Our fathers fought her to the death, because they knew her; we seem to be often paralysed with her blandishments.

The most suggestive thing about the exposure of another spiritualist "medium" is not her exposure at all, but the exposure of the gullibility of a number of scientists and persons with high-sounding names. Mr. Maskelyne, who has brought his large experience and quick eyes to bear with some effect upon the clever tricks of the medium, told The Daily Chronicle that he knew from experience that "no class of men can be so readily deceived by simple trickery as scientists. Try as they may, they cannot bring their minds down to the level of the subject, and are as much at fault as though it were immeasurably above them." Another lesson—not to put too much faith in specialists of any sort. Our Father has not left us without common sense enough to guide our way through life. What a light all this belief of scientific men in miserable frauds, performed always in the dark, throws upon Renan's suggestion that the story of the miracles in the Gospels, say the raising of Lazarus, might have been believed had a body of savants judged of them and accepted them. A little daylight, a little good sense, and a little honesty, are better sometimes than scientific attainments. Not that we object to the attainments, but let them be kept in their proper place, and be judged like other things.

Rome never a Christian City.

The Pope has been active of late in thrusting before the world his claims to be regarded as the centre of Christendom. I meet these pretensions by a reference to history, which shows that it is extremely doubtful if he can be included within its circumference.

At the time when the Apostle Paul wrote his Epistle to the Romans, that great city wherein they dwelt was eminently heathen. It was the centre of Pagan idolatry, the emperor was not only Pontifex Maximus, but himself a god. The history of the past, linked to the policy of the future, were both intertwined with that idolatrous worship which pervaded alike the public and private life of the citizens, and together formed that vast system which was called Rome. At that time the disciples of Christ were few, their influence small. They sought obscurity rather than courted notice, so that the Apostle recognised them as the Church in Rome, or at Rome, but certainly not as the Church of Rome. It would be interesting if the time could be fixed when there came to be a Christian Church of Rome, but this change was never effected. Rome Pagan was transformed into Rome Papal, but at no time has it been in any true sense of the term a Christian city.

Consider for a moment what it is that constitutes a Christian city. A community may fairly be called Christian even although there be within it a large mass of sin, misery, and crime; if its general government and the tone of its society are pervaded by the spirit of Christianity—the Christian life and rule being highest in public opinion. The cities and towns of Britain are examples of such communities in which, notwithstanding much to deplore, there are evidences of the authoritative rule of the Christian system. On the other hand there are communities, such as those of Calcutta, Delhi, Benares—in the midst of which are Christians not a few, yet nevertheless the cities in which they dwell are distinctly heathen. Such was Rome at the time of Paul and for succeeding centuries.

Tertullian writing about A.D. 190, says: "If the Tiber rises, or the Nile does not rise; if heaven stands, or the earth trembles; if there be a famine or pestilence, forthwith the cry is, 'Christianos ad leones.'" From Antoninus to Aurelius, a period of forty years ending A.D. 180, both popular fury and imperial policy pressed heavily on the Church in Rome. Passing on through the reigns of successive emperors, there are found sufficient evidences that the Christians continued to be an uninfluential and despised sect in the midst of the great city. It will probably surprise the general reader of history to learn that under the early Christian emperors, notwithstanding their despotic power, Rome continued heathen, and manifested openly its dislike to Christianity.

Constantine so despaired of overcoming the dominant heathenism of Rome that he removed the seat of empire to his new city on the Bosphorus. In direct opposition to his authority, and in spite of his violent measures, the Senate of Rome restored the Temple of Concord, and at the same time, A.D. 331, erected several public altars for idolatrous worship. So powerful were the heathen that Constantine, though preferring the services of Christians, was obliged to employ idolators in the higher offices of state. After his death, with a grim satire on his attempts to Christianise them, the Senate, by a decree, numbered Constantine among the gods. Constans and Constantius, his successors, were also baffled by the persistent heathenism of the nobles and people of Rome. Edicts against idolatry could not be put in force in the city.

It is significant of the heathen character of Rome that a calendar of A.D. 354 gives all the heathen festivals in the same way as our almanacks mark the Christian holidays. When Constantius visited Rome, A.D. 357, the prefects were heathen, and he could not venture to interfere with the openly-observed superstitions of the city, but left their privileges to the vestal, their rank to the priests, and continued the money grants for idolatrous ceremonies. In the fifth century the heathenism of Rome was unchanged, impurity was universal, the auguries were observed, and wild beasts exhibited in the amphitheatre. It is a fact which in this day should be kept in continual remembrance, that for five hundred years after our Saviour came there was not a Christian Church of Rome. The Church had failed to Christianise the city, but the city had power to Paganise the Church. Heathenism crept into the Church until it became so thoroughly Pagan in form and spirit that the Romans had no difficulty in accepting their ancient religion under a new name. Rome Pagan became Rome Papal, but she had not drawn nearer to the Lord Jesus Christ.

At this time, when the truth of God was darkened in the city of Rome, men of faith, disciples of the Apostle John, were carrying to the wilds of Britain that true Gospel Light which after centuries of eclipse shone upon these isles in the day-dawn of the Reformation. J. H.

"But."

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.*

I propose to direct your attention specially to one little word—a big little word—of one syllable, which you will find in a number of passages—the word But. It occupies a very considerable place in the intercourse of man with man. It is a very strange word, that suddenly alters matters altogether—turns the tables, as it were.

You find yourself in financial difficulty, let me suppose. You write to a friend, asking him if he will lend you, say, £20. He answers immediately in a very polite letter, which begins with expressions of affection and sympathy with you in your trouble; yet you are not quite satisfied with that beginning because you feel that something unwelcome is sure to follow. Here it comes: "But I am very sorry I cannot do anything for you."

Or, on the other hand, one of your children is ill. The doctor comes and examines the child carefully, and he looks very grave. You walk with him into the next room and you say: "Well, doctor, what do you think of it?" He says: "It is a very, very serious case"—and your heart goes down—"but"—at once your heart goes up like a lark into the blue—"but with God's help we will make him well again."

Such is the power of "but." Paul, who was constantly reasoning and arguing, uses the word continually in the Epistle to the Romans.

Let me point out a few instances. The first I notice is in chap. iii.; it is a well-known passage, but it will do us good to read it over again. Let us begin with verse 19: "What things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped." (We thought of that a little while ago when our chairman read in Job: "I will put my hand upon my mouth.") "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin."

Now, suppose someone, reading this passage, should stop at this point, and say: "Such is the doctrine of justification"; what would you think of him and of his Gospel? Would you not exclaim, with one voice: "Read on, man; read on!" And he would read on—"But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God—" (It is no question of deeds now, but of the righteousness of God. It is no question of law, but a question of grace and of faith,) "the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference; all have sinned and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus."

There may be some here—very likely there are some—who have not yet understood this. Shall I suppose there are some who do not even know and feel that they are guilty and condemned before God? Why, you are self-condemned, and you know it; how much more are you condemned before God! What can you do to justify yourselves? Nothing. Listen to this, then: "But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested," and you are justified freely by the grace of God.

But I speak now to you who have believed in the Lord Jesus Christ and have found peace in believing. What next? Then, very likely, you have said to yourself, "I will now obey the law of God. I am grateful to God; I love Him because He loved me first." And you have done your best to obey the law of God. Have you succeeded? That is the question. I read in chapter vii. 14, of this epistle to the Romans: "We know that the law is spiritual; but [a bad but, this] I am carnal." The law is all right; I admire the law; I know it is good. Paul even goes so far as to say (v. 25): "With the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin."

Suppose I should stop there and should tell you that this is the Bible teaching as to sanctification, you would again exclaim: "Read on; read on!" I read on, then: "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do..." Exactly. It could not justify me, but God justifies me through Jesus Christ. So the law cannot sanctify me; the flesh cannot sanctify me; self-effort cannot sanctify me; but God can, and will, and does sanctify me through the Holy Spirit: "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh." Why? "That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh, but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally-minded is death, but to be spiritually-minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God."

Observe, it is not "they that are in the flesh do not please God so much as others"; it is "they cannot please God. "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit." Observe, again, that it is not for a special class of Christians who wish to rise higher than others; not at all. "If so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you; now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Have you got the Spirit of Christ? Do you believe that just as God has freely given his Son to bear your sins, He has freely given the Spirit, to give you the victory over sin?

How are we to get the life of the Spirit? What is the first step? The first step comes here: "Reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin"—just because Christ died; not because you feel it. You find people stopping for weeks and months, perhaps years, saying they do not feel dead. You will never feel dead. The only way is to believe that you have died with Christ, and in Christ. Even a strongly rationalistic commentator says: "We are not to interpret this as though Paul meant it to be merely a kind of illustration: an ideal thing." It was to him an altogether real thing, that "he had died on the cross of Christ. Therefore, reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

What then? "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof." Why should you obey it when it is no longer your master? "Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, but yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." Those same members that have been instruments of unrighteousness shall become instruments of righteousness unto God. Those same members in which dwells the law of sin, shall be made instruments of righteousness unto God, because you shall live no longer in the flesh, but in the Spirit.

And, finally, he says to them: "What fruit had ye in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? For the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." Here is another "but": "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Now, shall we remember this, when the enemy comes, as he will come, as he is coming now, perhaps, trying to trouble us and to frighten us. When he says, "You are vile and guilty, you are unworthy and condemned," let us reply, "It is true, but the gift of God is eternal life, and I have eternal life." When he comes again and says, "You are ignorant, you are weak; you are utterly unable to cope with me, with the world, with the flesh, let us reply: "It is true, but the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." That little word but is enough to put him to confusion.

* Notes of an Address at Oxford Conference, October 30.

A CEYLON DISPENSARY.

A correspondent of the Ceylon Observer, writing from Chavagacherri Dispensary, Point Pedro says:—

The dispensary for women and children at Chavagacherri, opened in July last, owes its origin to the indefatigable and self-sacrificing efforts of Miss Leitch, who has left no stone unturned to supply a long-felt want in the Peninsula. I was not a little surprised at my last visit to find that the dispensary has been able to draw, within so short a period as two months or less, a hundred or more patients daily—patients who had till now been shut out from European medical treatment. The eagerness with which patients are seen to flock in, and the satisfaction which a visitor is able to read in the face of the patients as they leave the dispensary are ample proofs that a dispensary, under the management of a lady doctor, to whom our native females could speak of their complaints without hesitation, was a necessity. This dispensary is an unqualified success; by the kindness shown by Miss Leitch and the attention paid by Dr. Miss Greeve, there is every prospect of the institution being largely patronised.

One noteworthy feature is the interest evinced in the spiritual welfare of these patients. Preaching of the Gospel to those who seek medical aid is carried on before dispensary hours. It gladdened my heart to find that many a Brahman lady was eagerly listening to what fell from the lips of the preacher. I do not hesitate to express publicly the sense of gratitude felt by those of my sex to Miss Leitch for the interest she has evinced in them and their country's welfare, and the boon conferred by her in the establishing of this dispensary.

HARLEY COLLEGE, BOW.

In a circular letter to friends of the East London Institute, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness refers to the lamented death of Mr. Morris, and adds:—"As yet no Principal has been found for Harley College, but we feel sure that the good hand of our Lord will supply this need. In the meantime He has given us in Rev. James Douglas, of South London, Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Luton, and Rev. Buchanan Ryley, of our own neighbourhood, helpers who are temporarily dividing the work formerly done by Mr. Morris. Pastor Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, has also promised to lecture occasionally during the session, and Rev. F. B. Meyer will be with us, God willing, from time to time.

"Turning to the party of students now leaving us, our hearts go forth to a world-wide sphere. Eleven brethren and sisters are about to enter on their life-work, and it is cheering to think of them as destined to influence the intelligent, mobile peoples of beautiful Ceylon, the Pagan multitudes of China, the medley of faiths and races found in Zanzibar, the vigorous tribes of East Africa and Pondoland, the heathen hillmen of Assam, the fanatical Mohammedans of North Africa, and the dark men and women of the Congo.

"Before you receive this letter I shall be (D.V.) on my way to Servia. Urgent business calls me to Belgrade for three weeks, and in leaving home I shall be glad of your prayers that I may be prospered in the difficult matter which will engage my attention, and also that during my absence the Institute needs may be abundantly supplied."

KNOWING THE BIBLE.—To know the Bible well is to hear the voice of God through it; to listen to the risen Christ expounding "in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself" No habit more profoundly exalts the whole life than that of daily devotional reading of the Bible. No education produces so fine a character as thinking the thoughts of God, and walking with Him.

"Yet have I set my King."

(2 Samuel viii.; 1 Chronicles xviii., xix., xx.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The time of rest which succeeded the removal of the ark was broken in upon by a succession of fierce wars. One after another the surrounding nations gathered together, either singly or in confederacies, against David. "The nations raged; the kingdoms were moved."

The Philistines.—For the last time they arose; but David smote and subdued them, and, to use the significant phrase of the R.V., took the bridle of the mother-city out of their hand.

The Moabites.—The hereditary alliance, dating from the time of Ruth, between the Hebrew monarch and his restless neighbours, was insufficient to restrain them; and Benaiah was commissioned to lead an expedition against them, which was so successful that their entire army fell into his hands, and was dealt with according to the terrible custom of the time, one-third only being spared.

The Syrians.—The king of Zobah and the Syrians of Damascus were utterly defeated; vast spoils of gold and brass fell into David's hand, and the border of Israel was carried to the line of the Euphrates, so that the ancient promise made by God to Abraham was fulfilled: "Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates."

Edom.—Whilst David was engaged in the north, the Edomites invaded Judah, and Abishai was despatched against them. On the west shore of the Dead Sea he encountered them, and slew eighteen thousand in the valley of Salt. The whole land, even to Petra, its rock-bound capital, was slowly reduced to submission; and, with the exception of Hadad, who made his way to Egypt, the royal family was exterminated.

Ammon.—A friendly overture on the part of David was met with gross insult; and Hanun, apprehending the infliction of condign revenge, formed a vast coalition. The combined forces amounted to 32,000, with a strong contingent of cavalry and chariots, against which David could only oppose the Hebrew infantry, the use of horses being forbidden by the Mosaic legislation. It was a supreme moment in David's career, and taxed the utmost resources of Joab's generalship. By God's good hand, however, victory was secured; the tide of Israelite invasion swept over the hostile country; Rabbah, the capital city, fell into David's hand; the people were put to work with saws, arrows, and axes, probably preparing the materials for the erection of public works, and perhaps of the Temple itself.

These years of war gave birth to some of the grandest of the Psalms, amongst which may be numbered ii., xx., xxi., lx., cx.

I.—THE FOE.

"The nations rage; the peoples imagine a vain thing; the kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against his anointed." We hear their plottings in their council chambers:—

> Let us break their bands asunder,
> And cast away their cords from us.

They trust in chariots and in horses; their kings think that they will be saved by the multitude of their hosts. They inspire fear through the hearts of Israel, so that the land trembles as though God had rent it, and the people drink the wine of staggering and dismay. So tremendous is their assault, so overwhelming their numbers, that all help of man seems vain.

It is thus in every era of the history of God's people, that Satan has stirred up their foes. Right behind the coalitions of men lies the malignity of the fallen spirit, who ever seeks to bruise the heel of the woman's Seed. "In the world ye shall have tribulation." "Behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days." "When the dragon saw that he was cast down to the earth, he persecuted the woman."

II.—THE ATTITUDE OF FAITH.

Whilst the serried ranks of the foe are in sight, the hero-king is permitted a vision into the unseen and eternal. There is no fear upon the face of God, no change in his determination to set his king upon his holy hill. In fact, it seems that the day of his foe's attack is that in which he receives a new assurance of sonship, and is bidden to claim the nations for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. As he anticipates the battle, he hears the chime of the Divine promise above the tumult of his fear:—

> Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron;
> Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

On his leaving the capital, his people pray that the Lord may answer him in the day of trouble, remember his offerings, and send him help from the sanctuary; and he replies,

> I know that the Lord saveth his anointed;
> He will answer him from his holy heaven
> With the saving strength of his right hand.

He knows that through the loving-kindness of the Most High he shall not be moved, but that his right hand will destroy his enemies.

In the ecstasy of his faith he asserts, as he looks eastward, across the Jordan, that Gilead will as certainly own his sway as Ephraim and Manasseh did. Strong in the allegiance of Judah, and her sister tribes, he counts victory already secured. Moab is his washing-basin; Edom like a slave shall carry his shoes; Philistia shall tremble before his war-shout, and even the strong city of Petra shall receive his troops.

In perfect peace he anticipates the result, the Lord will send forth the rod of his strength out of Zion, and strike through kings in the day of his wrath, and make his enemies his footstool, so that in all after-days he may combine the office of priest and king, as Melchizedek did on that same site centuries before.

III.—THE WARRIORS OF THE PRIEST-KING.

Catching the contagion of his faith, they triumph in God's salvation, and in his name set up their banners. They believe that God, as a Man of War, is going forth with their hosts, and will tread down their adversaries. They are characterized by the willingness of their service. No mercenaries are pressed into their ranks; they gladly gather around the standard, as the warriors of whom Deborah sang, who willingly offered themselves. They are clad not in mail, but in the fine linen of the Priests; "the beauties of holiness," a phrase which suggests that the warfare was conducted by religious men, as an act of worship to God. They are numerous as the dewdrops that bespangle the morning grass, when every blade has its own coronet of jewels, and the light is reflected from a million diamonds (Psa. cx.).

What an exquisite conception of David's ideal for his soldiers, and of the knightly chivalry, of the purity, truth, and righteousness, in which all the soldiers of the Messiah should be arrayed!

IV.—THE COMPLETENESS OF THE VICTORY.

The armies of the alien cannot stand the onset of those heaven-accoutred soldiers. Kings of armies flee apace. They are bowed down and fallen in bitter, hopeless defeat. They are made as a fiery furnace in the time of God's anger, and swallowed up in his wrath.

As the triumphant army returns, leaving desolation where their foes had swarmed, they express in song their gratitude to their Almighty Deliverer. Singers and minstrels, Benjamin and Judah, Zebulun and Naphtali, join in the mighty anthem:

> God is unto us a God of deliverances;
> And unto Jehovah the Lord belong the issues from death;
> O God, Thou art terrible out of thy holy places;
> The God of Israel, He giveth strength and power unto his people.

All this has a further reference. In David we have a type of the Messiah. For, of a truth, against the Holy Servant Jesus, whom God has anointed, both the Gentiles and the people of Israel have gathered together. Men have refused his sway, and do refuse it; but God hath sworn, and will not repent, that to Him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess: and it is more sure than that to-morrow's sun will rise that, ere long, great voices shall be heard in heaven, saying, "The kingdoms of the world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ: and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. xi. 15-18).

IN PRESENCE OF THE INFINITE.

Prebendary Reynolds, in his weekly Higher Science lecture at SS. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, on Wednesday, last week said: In times of unbelief men scoff at authority; but, when true reason enforces faith, they learn that the authority of worthiness, of reliableness, is, after all, not only the strength of faith, but the justification of reason. It is that which gladdens men's lives, fills with noble action, which both spending and gaining force, has double joy because of both employments, and lays hold on eternal life.

The millions of mechanisms and instincts in the animal kingdom, though everyone is related to all other, do not present one for the inclusive benefit of another species. The outcome, everywhere and always, is a fiercely raging struggle for life. This no more justifies the theory of natural selection, than it proves the dominion of chance. Regard, as science does, "that as a whole, Nature is a cosmos, a beautiful scheme, in which every part is related to the whole," then, of course, apparent waste and purposeless action of parts is shown, as nothing is lost, to be for some replenishing purpose elsewhere; and behind physical appearances is a moral justification by larger beneficence, limited only by the Infinite.

The great discoveries made in various sciences by Galileo, Harvey, and Jenner, were violently resisted by men who said "the whole orbit of human knowledge and experience was against the asserted facts." Young's undulatory theory of light was hooted. The proposal for railways raised a cry, "Strait jacket for the man." Sir Humphrey Davy laughed at the idea of London being lighted with gas. Yet these and more shortly became matters of fact.

If godless persons think they are reasonable in attributing the form, beauty, life, thought, religion of the world, to that which was and had none of these, we surely have more reasonable knowledge for our certainty that man, being that part of nature which is most highly intelligent, ought to give the honour of his intelligence to that Glorious One whose wisdom directs his power, whose love is active in beneficence, and not to things lower than stocks and stones. We count it lowest of all idolatries when human beings worship spades and beetles: but when the devil comes to us as a philosopher, and tells us that we and the whole universe, its beauty, power, life, and science, were wrapped inside that which was not even a nutshell we tell him plainly he is a fool.

That grand man of ancient time, Isaiah the prophet of God, has thus spoken: "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people...Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things...Hast thou not known, hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not?...They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary, and they shall walk, and not faint."

SOLDIERS AT LYDD.—God has graciously blessed the feeble efforts put forth during the summer. We are desirous of extending the work, if all is well, another season, and would like to have our room open every evening for the soldiers' use, if means are forthcoming. Some readers who have been blessed during the encampment at Lydd may be inclined to help us in this. We have about 3000 soldiers with us during the summer, and I should be glad to hear of any who would be willing to come at their own cost, and tell the "old old story of Jesus and his love."

London Poverty.

1.—The Homes of the Poor.

During the past few weeks I have been exploring in out-of-the-way courts and narrow back streets and alleys in east, south, and central London. This is to me no new experience. Fourteen years ago, in company with Pastor A. G. Brown, I was introduced to some of the worst of the slums; and subsequently had occasion to make similar investigations in various districts of this great city. Since then "slumming" has become fashionable. Public attention has been called to the wretched and ruinous condition of the houses in which tens of thousands of the poor were compelled to herd. Something has been done; whole areas have been condemned and swept away; while in all directions owners of small property seem to have felt the necessity of putting their houses in order—externally, at all events. Thus, outwardly, some slight improvement is manifest. Alas, it is often but skin deep, and inside things are as bad as ever.

The dwellings inhabited by the poor may be roughly classed under three divisions. 1. Old houses which have seen better days, and are now let out to separate families in one or two rooms. These are often in the most deplorable, if not dangerous, condition. The staircases may be broken and treacherous, the ceilings "down," the windows rag-stuffed or paper-covered; the upper floors soaked with every shower of rain; the lower floors and cellars damp, mouldy, and smelling of bad drains. Nothing but sheer necessity would compel any self-respecting person to live in some of these old houses.

2. Turning aside off the main thoroughfare one finds endless rows of two or three storey tenements, four or six-roomed—sublet usually in single or double rooms. Whole streets of such little houses look outwardly neat and tidy—even curtains on the front windows—but inside there is often dirt, disorder, and entire neglect of the simplest sanitary precautions. Much of this arises, doubtless, from the fact that the women have to work hard for the family living, and have no time to spare for tidying up at home. Sunday, with many a poor mother, is washing and cleaning up day; for the rest, "they must manage somehow."

3. Then there are now springing up huge Industrial Blocks which are already evolving serious difficulties for Christian workers and social reformers. As Miss Octavia Hill points out, the influence on the character of the tenants of such Blocks is very marked; moreover, once a few of the undisciplined are admitted to a Block, deterioration rapidly sets in; violence, dirt, noise, and quarrelling are introduced; "and often, with a very fair show to the outsider, the Block becomes a sort of pandemonium." This does not apply to all Blocks—far from it; but there are such, only too well known to local workers, usually built by speculators, dark, insanitary and dreary, with little or no regard to the comfort of the occupants. All concerned in the welfare of the poor know that questions with respect to these great Blocks are becoming pressing: first, as to their construction, light, and sanitation; and second, as to their regulation and inspection when occupied. The perpetual gloom of the lower floors in some of these privately-owned model dwellings, the abominable scenes and odours on the landings, from choked dust shafts and defective sanitation, seem to the visitor unendurable, though, it is true, the poor tenants get used to them.

No one, I trust, will suppose that in referring to such facts I am minimising in any way the value of Industrial Model Dwellings, such as Peabody's, Guinness Trustees, the Improved Industrial Dwellings Co., Metropolitan Association, and other admirably conducted buildings belonging to philanthropic and semi-philanthropic associations, and in some cases to large trading companies. I mention the matter because such buildings are springing up on all hands, and in many districts Christian workers are beginning to find them present very serious problems indeed.

I hope to follow these introductory notes on the homes of the poor, with two or three papers on the people who live in them; the sore, sad battle they have to fight with poverty and pain; and the patient loving efforts being made, in the name of Christ, to bring in the comfort of the Gospel and win the hopeless to Him who alone can save and elevate.

A MISSIONARY BISHOP.

A NEW LIFE OF HEBER.*

Whether as a gifted hymn-writer or as a pioneer missionary bishop in Eastern lands, Reginald Heber will ever hold a high and sure niche in Christian memory. We fancy his career as a country clergyman in England is not so familiar to present-day readers. Many who have not read the larger biography, compiled by Bishop Heber's wife, will heartily welcome this work, which comes from a very sympathetic pen, though the writer belongs to a different church order. But there is hardly any uniting bond so strong as that of missionary interest and zeal.

At the close of the first century of revived foreign missionary enterprise it is right that we should look back upon the earnest labours of those whose devotion made such results possible. The name of Heber is as sacred to our friends of the Church of England as are those of Carey, Morrison, and Duff to other sections of the Church universal. We follow, in these full and attractive pages, the beautiful career of the gifted Oxford student, of the parish clergyman beloved by all, of the missionary poet, with his wonderful gift of immortal song, and of the zealous, self-sacrificing overseer of the great Indian diocese. More than half the book is devoted to Heber's Indian experiences, but it is none too much. As we read, we thank God for raising up such a man at a critical period in the history of Episcopal foreign missions. We pray that he may have many successors in that catholicity of spirit, that evangelistic zeal, and that wise administration that marked his whole career, whether at home or abroad.

The following extract, which we make from the closing pages of Dr. Smith's book, will whet the appetite of the reader, we trust, and induce him to study the whole volume—an admirable contribution to modern missionary literature:—

"In England, from the beginning of the nineteenth century, Reginald Heber was a zealous and catholic supporter of the missions of the Church of England and the Bible Society, when nearly all his class, the Oxford clergy, and the squires, kept aloof, or would have sneered the movement down as fanatical, 'leaving it to the Dissenters,' as Southey complained. In India, like Henry Martyn, Heber's aspirations went out after the Hindoos and Mohammedans; whilst he was full of care for the East India Company's servants and troops, and for the chaplains. Every week he lived, every mile he travelled, caused the missionary fire to burn within him. He combined, as no other foreigner has done, the personal fascination, the influence of a high office and broad culture, the zeal of an evangelical in the best sense, true to the commission of his Master, and the high faculty of organisation directed by business habits and common sense. All this made him the true founder of the Church of England Missions in India and the East.

"On April 15, 1826, Rev. D. Currie wrote: 'Our late beloved Bishop was so entirely a missionary that we can hardly hope to see one like him; and in respect of temper and beauty of general disposition to expect the like of him seems utterly hopeless....Such was the amiability of his character that it was often difficult to say whether he acted from nature or grace. But whatever might be judged by some at times to be errors of judgment the general tenour of his life was so opposed to worldly maxims, and what the world would have wished him to follow, that there seems no doubt grace was the ruling influence of his conduct.'

"Steadily, as the work of the Church of England in the East and in Africa has extended, through the Church Missionary and Gospel Propagation Societies, missionary episcopates such as Heber longed for have been privately endowed, till now the ecclesiastical province of India and Ceylon consists of these ten:—The Metropolitical See of Calcutta, with Madras, Bombay, Colombo, Lahore, Rangoon, Travancore and Cochin, Chota Nagpoor, Lucknow, and Tinnevelli. There are other six Asiatic dioceses which have not yet been organised into a province:—Jerusalem, Victoria, Mid-China, North China, Singapore, Japan and Corea. Australia has fourteen dioceses, New Zealand and the Pacific have eight, Africa has seventeen. The area in which Heber represented Christianity of the Anglican type, and to which he was chief missionary, is now, seventy years after his incessant toil, ministered to by fifty-six bishops, overseeing a staff of 2,422 chaplains and missionaries. To these must be added some bishops and missionaries of the American Episcopal churches.

"'Can we refrain,' exclaimed Heber, when, in 1822, the Bishop of Bristol delivered to him a valedictory address 'from indulging the hope that one century more, and the thousands of converts which our missionaries already number, may be extended into a mighty multitude?' Two-thirds of the century only have passed since these words were spoken, and even now the number approaches a million of the natives of India, professing the pure faith of the Gospel."

We ought to add that a beautiful reproduction of a painting of Heber at Oxford, is given as a frontispiece; and there are a number of other illustrations.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

An interesting conference of workers and delegates from branches of the Railway Mission was held at Cambridge on October 19th to 21st. Over thirty delegates were present, and gave encouraging accounts of the work of their various branches. Addresses were given by Rev. E. L. Hamilton, of Bath, Mr. R. Nixon, general secretary, Mr. D. Jackson, missionary to railwaymen in South Africa, and others.

A conference of delegates from Scottish branches of the Mission was held in Glasgow on October 27th and 28th. The reports given showed that the mission has made remarkable progress in Scotland during the last few years. Fifty-two branches have been formed. About 1,200 railway people were present at a social meeting in the Waterloo Rooms, on Saturday evening, October 27th. The workers are much encouraged by seeing instances of God's saving power among the men.

THE BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION.—Pastor Lecoat has paid his annual pastoral visit to the large Breton population in the Channel Islands. The mission just concluded has had most cheering results. At Brest, the western extremity of Brittany, too, the work is progressing much; eight converts from Roman Catholicism having been baptized in the Atlantic Ocean by Evangelist Guillon, in the presence of a large but respectful concourse of their compatriots. These signs of life are most cheering for the friends of the Mission, notwithstanding the fierce opposition of the priesthood of Rome and the newly-formed Anti-Bible Society. The new boys' school about to be opened at [illegible] quarters of the Mission, will prove a valuable [illegible] to the now very complete set of mission premises.

PARABLE OF THE TARES.—2.

By Mr. G. H. PEMBER, M.A.*

The causes of the general failure, as pointed out in the first of the Parables, would be the untoward dispositions of many that should hear the Word, and the action of the Wicked One.

The hearers are divided into four classes, of which one only understands the Word, and brings forth good fruit. The hearts of another class are so hardened that the Word cannot penetrate them at all, and is, therefore, quickly carried away by the Devil. These are in a special degree those "children of the Wicked One," that are afterwards represented by the Tares; for they are never pervious to the Word of God, and so do not even experience temporary impressions.

Others, with a heart of stone beneath, have a shallow nature and easily excited feelings; but their enthusiasm is selfish, and unwilling to suffer for the principles which it recommends. Such persons would strive to modify Christianity by so conforming it to the world as to remove its offence at the cost of its purity. Or, if there should be no persecution in the air, their instability would move them to frequent changes of opinions and doctrines.

And, finally, there are men of large and deep heart, capable of bringing forth abundant fruit, of energising mightily for their Lord; but, alas! although they have received the Word, they are also filled with earthly joys, and cares, and desires, and hopes, which stunt, and, at length, overpower and stifle it. These are they who strive to serve two masters, and end inevitably in serving one only, and that not the Lord Jesus. From this class, for the most part, come those who would combine Christianity with earthly power, and earthly gain, and earthly pleasure, who would have their good things now as well as hereafter; who sometimes retain the central truth of Christianity, but surround and hide it with the hard cold maxims of the world.

Such, then, is the varying character of the hearts of men upon which the seed is cast. When we add to this the activity of the Devil in carrying away the seed, we do not wonder that all the remaining parables depict the church in divers stages of corruption.

An Exposition.

The second, that of the Wheat and Tares, I have chosen for our consideration this afternoon, because it is more general in its application than any of the four which follow it, and comprehends the whole of the interval between the two advents. The Parable of the Mustard Plant, on the other hand, refers to the worldly ambition of Christians, especially from the date of Constantine; that of the Leaven, to the corruption of doctrine by the false Church; that of the Husbandman and the Treasure, to the deadness of Protestantism; that of the Pearl, to the submersion of the Word of God beneath the ever-changing currents of human criticism, opinions, and creeds, which is the great characteristic of the present time.

The Parable of the Tares, then, runs as follows.

"The kingdom of the heavens is likened unto a man that sowed good seed in his field: but while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares also among the wheat, and went away. But when the blade sprang up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. And the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? Whence, then, hath it tares? And he said unto them, An enemy hath done this. And the servants say unto him, Wilt thou, then, that we go and gather them up? But he said, Nay, lest haply while ye gather up the tares, ye root up the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest; and in the time of the harvest, I will say to the reapers, Gather up first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn."

The story is simple; and, in regard to its meaning, we cannot be mistaken, because we have the Lord's own explanation of it.

The sower of the good seed, He says, is the Son of Man.

The field is the world.

The good seed is here not, as in the former parable, "the Word," but the Children of the Kingdom sown by the great Lord Himself, that they may bear fruit in the world.

The tares are the Children of the Wicked One, the seed of the serpent, the instruments of Satan for the corruption of the Church. Let us ever remember that they are sown among the wheat.

The enemy that sowed them is the devil.

The harvest is the end of the age, and the reapers, who will at last effect the separation of the Children of the Kingdom and the Children of the wicked one, and convey each to his own everlasting abode, are the angels.

Now there are two great and very practical truths which we ought to carry away from this parable. First, we have the express prediction of the Lord, that, as soon as He had established his church, Satan would foist in among its members creatures of his own, the pernicious nature of whose doctrines and practices would only be discovered as time went on. Yet, from the very first, they would occupy the place, and draw away the nourishment, of the real Christians, crowding them out still more and more, and stunting their growth by intercepting the rays of the sun, until at last the black fruits—which tares are said to produce—would be everywhere mingled with the golden grain.

Secondly, this state of things is without remedy, and must continue till the end of the age; there can be no effectual purging, or reformation, of the church until the Son of Man Himself puts in the sickle, and the earth is reaped. Then, in one moment of time, that separation will be effected which the Lord's people on earth have never been, and never will be, able to compass.

Now, please notice that these two truths, so far at least as their practical use goes, are surface-truths, having nothing of the deep or occult in them, but being such as a child could understand, provided only that he gave heed to the plain words of the Lord and accepted their simple meaning, instead of weaving a meaning of his own into them. And they are intended to convey to the real people of God two cardinal principles, two rules for their guidance, without attention to which they will be, so far as their spiritual life on earth is concerned, like ships without a rudder.

These principles are as follows:—

I. The visible Church is at all times a mixed body, including not merely unconverted and indifferent persons, but positive children of the Wicked One, active agents of Satan, sons of perdition, like Judas, the first example of them, who will do the work of their father, the Devil, as long as they live. Wherefore, we may never accept any teaching on the mere ground that it is the teaching of the Church, lest, haply, we be found to be listening to Satan, and not to Christ. We must test all things by the Word of God, which is given to us for that purpose; and hold fast only that which is proved by its testimony to be good.

II. For the same reason, we must not set our heart upon any earthly church, upon any great hierarchy in that world which is at present Satan's realm; but must long for the coming of the Lord of the Harvest to make all men know whom He has chosen and loved, by calling them away to be with Him where He is, and to see his glory.

Oh, that these truths had been recognised from the first! How much waste of Christian life and exertion would have been avoided; how would the eye of the Church have been ever fixed upon that one object which is set before her in the Scriptures, the return of her King, instead of wandering to and fro after so many unsubstantial and pernicious phantoms.

The Lord, then, has explained the Parable of the Tares, and, provided we apply it practically to our own conduct, there is nothing more for us to do but to mark its fulfilment in history. We cannot, however, speak this afternoon of the countless heresies which were developed within the Church during the first few centuries, and have been re-appearing at intervals ever since. Let us, therefore, turn to the parallel passage in another great prophecy, and see if the Lord's words there may not help us to a more definite conception of the particular apostasy which was uppermost in his mind when He spoke of the Tares sown among the wheat; that we may thus confine our inquiry within reasonable limits.

The passage to which I refer is the Epistle to the Church in Smyrna, in the second chapter of the Apocalypse (8-11). And if we glance through its four verses, we shall see that it points to a time of affliction and persecution, exactly corresponding to the second period of the Church universal—from A.D. '64 to the beginning of the fourth century—which includes the Ten Persecutions. During the same period the Tares began to develop, for strange to say the great heresies appeared in the epoch of the Church's sharpest trial. And while there is an allusive reference to the persecutions in the Parable of the Tares, there is an indication of the Tares in the Epistle to Smyrna. In the former the Lord, fearing lest his people should wish to imitate the murderous tactics of their foes, forbids them to root up the Tares—that is, to remove the Children of the Wicked One out of the field, which is the world. In the latter He says, "I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are of the synagogue of Satan."

Here, then, are the Tares, or, at least, the main portion of them, and they are said to represent themselves as Jews; which apparently, means that they attempt to defend their system by appeals to the Old Testament rather than the New. But the Lord takes away this covering of lies, and lo! in place of mere Jewish affinities, they are the synagogue of Satan himself. I call your attention to the strength of the expression, and also to the fact that it exactly corresponds to the description of the Tares as "the Children of the Wicked One." And let it be remembered that, in both cases, the words are from the Lord's own mouth, and cannot, therefore, be in any sense exaggerated or hyperbolical.

THE SECRET OF MENTAL TRANQUILLITY.—Joseph John Gurney, the Quaker banker and scholar, when on a visit to Dr. Bathurst, Bishop of Norwich, in 1830, was charmed with the serenity of the Bishop, then in his eighty-fifth year. He remarked that what he saw reminded him of the exquisite description of a tranquil old age which Cicero gives in his "De Senectute." The Bishop replied:—"Joseph, my tranquillity is founded on the merits of Jesus Christ."

LORD MAYOR'S DAY AND THE POOR.—Sir,—The banquet given on Lord Mayor's Day to the poor of the East End of London, has now become an annual feature, and they look forward to it as much as the City magnate does to his at the Guildhall. The feast is followed by an entertainment; the invitations are distributed to the very poorest. The Lord Mayor-Elect, Sir W. H. Wilkin, has very kindly sent us twenty-five guineas, Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Cooper and Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Pound, have each given ten guineas. Exceptional distress already exists in some quarters, and we have already had numerous applications for tickets. The charitable public have always supplemented the amount given by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and we trust they will again assist us, so as to enable us to entertain at least 2000 guests on November 9. Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by,—Yours faithfully,

Fredk. N. Charrington.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E.

REV. J. McNEILL IN NEWCASTLE.

THIS mission terminated on Friday evening, November 1st, after having lasted four weeks. The interest was sustained to the close, and the last meetings in the series proved to be the best of all. A deeper feeling of solemnity characterised them, and the preacher's words seemed to tell with greater power.

The last meeting in the Olympia was one which none who were present will ever forget. The large hall was crowded, the galleries and area and platform being all packed with eager listeners. The address was founded on St. Paul's shipwreck, as recorded in the closing portion of the Acts of the Apostles. The lessons deduced from that thrilling Bible incident were eminently practical and every way suitable for a closing address. The scene at the close was highly impressive. Mr. McNeill, in a subdued and trembling tone of voice, asked those who were prepared to dedicate themselves fully to the Lord, and to serve Him during the rest of their days, to stand up and hold up their right hand. Nearly the whole of the vast audience at once sprang to their feet and lifted up their right hand, and, as they stood in that solemn posture, amid a silence that might be felt, Mr. McNeill led in prayer, beseeching God to give all needed grace to those who had thus solemnly and publicly pledged their allegiance to Jesus Christ, to carry out their solemn vows.

Cards have been issued with the view of ascertaining, so far as is possible, the outcome of the mission. Three classes of persons are appealed to, and a return has been solicited. First, Christians who have received distinct quickening and stimulus; second, those who have been recovered from backsliding, either hidden or open; third, those who honestly believe that their eyes have been opened, as never before, to know Jesus Christ as a real personal Saviour. Persons are asked to send a reply to these questions, and it is gratifying to know that some hundreds of replies have been returned, and in many cases they have been accompanied with a private letter testifying to the saving benefit that has been received. The return of these cards, in great numbers, by every postal delivery during these past few days has greatly cheered Mr. McNeill's heart, as well as the hearts of those who have taken a leading part in the mission. Many have testified to having been greatly revived and stimulated and strengthened in their Christian life. Some have testified that they have been brought back to God from a state of backsliding, whilst not a few have borne witness that they now know that saving grace to which before they had been utter strangers.

At his last meeting for business men in the Town Hall, Mr. McNeill, as is reported in The Newcastle Daily Chronicle, said: "He would betray no confidences, but he would betray none," he thought, "in saying just this, in a general way, that thousands had been reached, and moved, and helped, and blessed, by the grace of God, through these services. By personal testimony, and by letters coming to his own hand in great quantities by every post, he had the surest evidence of the seal and stamp of God upon the work."

I may add that I personally know some and have heard of others who have attended the meetings with great regularity, who had ceased attending any regular place of worship. Mr. McNeill's manly presentation of Divine truth has also confirmed many wanderers. Adverse criticism has been largely silenced. Unbelief has stood rebuked and ashamed. The Christian faith has been spoken about in quarters where it was seldom named except to be severely criticised, and ignorantly condemned. The addresses have been varied and forceful, and have appealed alike to the heart, the conscience, and the intellect.

From Newcastle Mr. McNeill proceeds to Sunderland for a week's mission. He then goes to Wales, where he will labour (D.V.) till the end of this year, 1895. Leeds has sent an urgent and united request for him, and it is thought he will visit that large and influential town in the beginning of next year. His present intention seems to be to work in the large centres of our English population, where a faithful, full, and fresh presentation of Gospel truth is greatly needed. He leaves this city with the sympathy and good wishes of many, many friends, and I have no doubt that wherever he goes he will be followed by their earnest and believing prayers. RICHARD LEITCH.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nov. 2.

Mr. McNeill's definite engagements up to the end of the year are Newport (Mon.), November 11 to 21; Swansea, November 24 to 28; Cardiff, December 1 to 12, and Derby, December 15 to 22.

THE PRISONS OF JAPAN.

JAPAN has often shown her wisdom, in her willingness to learn of other nations, and to adapt herself to the principles and improvements of the Western World as they have been made known to her. No little astonishment was created by the recent result of her war with China, which suffered defeat at the hands of so small a country by reason of Japan having modelled her army and navy on European lines.

I have learned from a Japanese correspondent of the desire of those in authority not only to accept that which is good in the civilisation of the West, but also that which is far better, the true knowledge of the principles of Christ's teaching, and who tells of the wonderful proofs adduced of its beneficial effects amongst the worst classes of society.

The great northern island of the Empire is Hokkaido, and here it was that fourteen years ago the Government began to send long-sentence convicts. In the four great prisons already built there are 7000 convicts, undergoing sentences from twelve years to life. The idea of the Government was that the wilds of this island might be colonised; thus the work of the prisoners consisted of reclaiming land, road-making, and mining.

Until recently the discipline and government of the criminals had been very lax. Two years ago, however, the four prisons were put under one management, and the most efficient of the warders was made general superintendent, in addition to his being governor of one of the gaols. This Mr. Oinwe is a man of great ability, very strict in the execution of the prison rules, but exceedingly kind at heart, so that he is both feared and liked by the prisoners, and thoroughly respected by everybody.

He had evidently come under the influence of true Christian teaching, with such effect that his insight led him to the conviction years ago that the principles of Christianity were what were needed to restrain, and reform, and instruct prisoners. He was anxious to get a Christian instructor for the prison over which he was governor. Succeeding in this, and the results being so wonderful, he has now managed to procure Christian teachers for all the four prisons.

My friend in Japan says: "It has been my privilege to visit all these prisons, and to inspect them thoroughly, and the change is marvellous. The officers and guards now discharge their duties not perfunctorily, but with an interest in the welfare of their prisoners. The cells are well ventilated, clean and neat; and in nearly all of them is seen a pile of books—scientific, ethical, and religious; whilst on the walls are to be seen texts of Scripture, which are periodically changed, after the inmates have become acquainted with their meaning."

Perhaps the pioneer of this work was Taneakéra Hara. He was baptized in 1874, and soon after started a bookstore for the sale of Bibles and other religious publications. A political pamphlet, written by him, was the instrumental cause of a complete change in all his plans for life.

For writing against the Government's attempt to prevent freedom of speech, he was arrested and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. Mr. Hara says: "I entered the prison, and was clothed in the garb of the gaol, which is of a brick-red colour, with three robbers, and in the place was a man who evidently recognised me. 'Who are you? I know you, but not in these clothes,' 'I am a bookseller, and my shop is in Ginza-street. 'Ah, you are a Jesus-teacher, I heard you preaching, and I stopped to listen.' 'Why are you here?' 'I committed a great crime, a robbery, but my conscience has been uneasy since you spoke of sin and salvation—see, I have a Bible, but though I read it I cannot understand it.'"

It was not long before this anxious soul found peace. Other prisoners came to be instructed, and with the permission of the authorities, Mr. Hara held a meeting every night for the instruction of the prisoners in the great truths of Christianity. On his release he published a small book on the severe punishment accorded to some of the criminals, and their inability to get any employment when discharged. He felt drawn to devote his life to the welfare of prisoners.

After working in the Hyogo prison about three years, he then transferred his services to the Hokkaido. About this time Mr. Tomeoka, a graduate of the Doshisha University, who had been preaching the Gospel with success, had his mind occupied with Christianity's relations to Sociological problems, such as "Christianity and Philanthropy," and "Christianity and Prison Reform." He was led to consider whether he should not devote his whole life to the instruction and salvation of prisoners. He gave up his idea of pastoral work, and joined Mr. Hara at Hokkaido in his work of reformation among the 7000 convicts.

After two years' labour among these desperate characters, the following reforms have been effected, and wonderful results seen:—

I. Moral instruction by a lecture on Sunday to all the prisoners, attendance being compulsory. Distinctively Christian teaching is not brought into this address, as among the prisoners are Buddhists, Shintoists, and Confucianists. Religious freedom is guaranteed to all.

II. Religious instruction on the Sunday.—The study of the Bible and explanation of Christian truth for an hour succeeding the moral lecture, attendance upon which is voluntary.

III. Daily instruction in the cells.—This instruction is either moral or religious.

IV. Individual instruction.—Meeting the men privately for personal advice.

V. Educational instruction to those who need it.

As the direct results of the preaching of the Gospel by these two brethren, out of 1506 prisoners 510 are studying the Bible in one of the four great prisons in the Hokkaido. Besides this, there is a large band of praying men. The radical change wrought in these Japanese criminals has greatly impressed those who have witnessed it. According to the testimony of their teachers, they are "an example to believers."

Mr. Tomeoka is shortly coming on a visit to the Continental prisons, and is quite expecting to find our English prisoners much better provided for, spiritually and morally, than in his own country, I fear he will have a rude awakening, as there is little or nothing in our own prison system to reform or convert men. What England wants is a number of honorary, qualified, accredited, holy men and women, to be permitted to visit our prisoners and to bring to bear upon them the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The results would surprise the authorities. I have witnessed its mighty effects in foreign gaols; why should it not be tried in England? CHARLES COOK.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 10.

"I am the Lord which sanctify."—Lev. xxi. 8, 15, 23.

This chapter is full of restrictions and cautions against anything that might defile the priests, the sons of Aaron. The holiness of God was set in a clear light by the care that there should be no ceremonial pollution or personal defect in those who ministered before his presence. What Aaron and his sons were in the ancient typical worship, that Jesus and his people are in the spiritual dispensation which has taken its place. "Ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation."

How holy we should be "in all manner of living!" What may be innocent and natural for others would be wrong and inconsistent in us. The pointing of the beard after the fashion of the nations round and for appearance sake was forbidden them, and contact with death in the home of domestic mourning. These with many such-like cautions indicate that our spiritual separation for the service of God must enter into the minutest details. The clothes we wear, the books we read, the amusements we engage in, the details of the home-life, will all be affected by the thought, "I have been set apart for God, the anointing of the Spirit is on me, I am called to offer Him the bread of a holy life, I cannot do this, though I cannot condemn those who deem it lawful."

This is a high ideal, and it is only practicable to those who realise the thrice-made announcement of our text, that God will sanctify us: setting us apart for Himself by the precious blood of Christ, by the anointing of the Spirit, and by the separation of our thoughts, and aims, and practices.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 11.

"He shall not eat of the holy things till he be clean."—Lev. xxii. 4.

The holy things referred to here are the offerings made by Israel to Jehovah, a part of which was presented to God in fire, and the rest partaken of by the priests and their families. None, however, might feed on them, whilst ceremonially unclean. This suggests some useful precautions for ourselves.

We must be clean before we can enjoy the private reading of the Word of God.—We would wash our hands, soiled with the dust and grime of toil, before opening an exquisitely printed copy of the Scriptures; how much more should we seek cleansing at the hands of Christ before we feed on the holy things of Scripture.

We must be clean before entering the House of God.—It is a holy habit for each intending worshipper to be quiet before leaving the house on the Lord's day, or to use carefully the moment of the bent head at the commencement of the public service, in order that the soul may be made clean from any contracted stain, and resolve henceforth to abstain from all evil.

We must be clean before partaking of the Lord's Supper.—There we feed upon the bread of God, and as we wash our hands before we sit at the table of a friend, so should our hearts be cleansed ere we partake of the emblems of the body and blood of Christ. Holiness becomes God's house. Those that ascend the hill of the Lord must have clean hands and a pure heart.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 12.

"Ye shall afflict your souls."—Lev. xxiii. 27, 29, 32.

Whilst Aaron was making the solemn atonement for the people, confessing their sins on the victims and sending them away, the camp was pervaded with the atmosphere of the Sabbath rest. No servile work was done on penalty of death. Probably for the most part the people abode in their tents. No sound was heard save sighs, and groans, and cries of penitence. The people afflicted themselves for their sins.

Sin is forgiven by God, but it should not be forgotten by us.—We should remember it, in order to refresh our memory of God's great grace in putting it away, in order to deepen our sense of gratitude and to promote our self-humiliation, in order to make us watchful and careful in our daily walk and conversation. Holding the hand of our Saviour, we need not dread to look down into the abyss from which He has redeemed us. We shall turn from it to Him with tenderer love and gratitude.

Repentance is once for all, penitence is perennial.—We repent when we turn from the kingdom of darkness to that of God's dear Son; it is the act of the will, the utter reversal of the course we had been pursuing. But we are penitent after we have seen the face of Jesus, the sense of his love and of our unworthiness together makes us weep, as the forgiven sinner at his feet.

Penitence does not purchase forgiveness, but accompanies and follows it.—Could our tears for ever flow, they could not bring God's pardon into our souls. That is secured by the offering of our substitute on Calvary. But being forgiven, we wash his feet with our tears, we break our alabaster boxes on his head, and love much.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13.

"Before the Lord continually."—Lev. xxiv. 4-8.

The light of the candlestick and the twelve cakes of fine flour were to be before the Lord continually, as symbols of the twofold office his people were to sustain, on the one hand to the world's darkness, on the other to God Himself.

We must shine as lights in the world.—As a candle in the hand of the housewife, who sweeps her house diligently; as a lamp in the hand of the virgin expecting the bridegroom; or as the lighthouse on a rocky coast. We must dispel the darkness, and guide wanderers through the murky night. Light is soft and still, and is thus a fitting emblem of the influence of a holy life, which burns steadily on before the Lord continually, and is unaffected by the heed or comment of man. If no one seems the better for our consistent testimony, aim to satsfy the Lord. The lamps of the pure candlestick of a holy life are not for man only, but for Him. But they can only be maintained through the constant supply of the pure oil of the Holy Ghost, ministered by Him who walks amid the seven golden candlesticks.

We must be as bread to God.—In a blessed sense we feed on God, but God also feeds on us. He finds satisfaction in beholding his people's unity and love, in receiving their sacrifices of praise, and in watching their growing conformity to his will. The two rows of six cakes foreshadow the unity and order of the church; the fine flour, its holy character; the pure frankincense, the fragrance of Christian love. There is a testimony in all these to the world, but we do not always realise the satisfaction afforded to the great God, who has made such costly sacrifices on behalf of his Church.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14.

"His Kinsman that is next unto him."—Lev. xxv. 25.

In the case of Naomi this was Boaz; in our case it is Jesus Christ. Redemption, as described in this chapter, had to do with persons and lands, and each illustrates Christ's work on our behalf.

He has redeemed our persons.—It often happened that a Hebrew waxed poor, and was compelled to sell himself to some wealthy Gentile who sojourned in the land. He who had owned his own land now wrought as a bondservant for another. But after he had sold himself he might be redeemed by his next kinsman. So we had sold ourselves for nought; we wrought the will of the flesh; we were enslaved to the fashions of the world; we obeyed the promptings of the prince of the power of the air. Alas for us! But we have been redeemed, not with corruptible things, but with the precious blood of Christ. We have been made free by right, and have only to claim and act upon the freedom with which the risen Christ has made us free.

He has redeemed our inheritance.—What we lost in the first Adam we have more than regained in the second. For innocence, we have purity; for external fellowship with God, his indwelling; for the delights of an earthly paradise, the fulness of God's blessedness and joy.

He is our nearest Kinsman.—"My brother, my sister," He says of each who will do the will of his Father. He has made Himself one with us by taking on Himself our nature, and identifying Himself with our race. We know that Jesus, our Goel and Redeemer, liveth.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15.

"None shall make you afraid."—Lev. xxvi. 6.

But we are afraid, often very greatly so. How can we be secured from the dread of men and things which so easily besets us?

We must be absolutely right with God.—To walk in God's statutes, and keep his commandments, was the first condition of Israel's immunity from fear. When we know that there is no cause of controversy between us and God, we feel able to count confidently on his protection and deliverance.

We must count on God's faithfulness.—He has put us where we are, and we dare not think He will withdraw from us as Joab did from Uriah. We are his partners, summoned to co-operate with Him; will He allow us to incur responsibilities in his name, and then leave the burden on our unassisted resources? Fear will yield before a clear sense of God's might, but it is still more likely to yield before a deep sense of God's perfect faithfulness.

We must rely on the environment of angel keepers.—When David, during his flight before Absalom, slept in the open, he believed that the Angel of the Lord encamped around him. More are they which are for us than against us. The mountain is full of horses and chariots of fire.

We must believe that our enemies are less formidable than they seem.—They surround us with their bluster and threatenings, they come against us in embattled array, but if we dare to go forward and do the right thing in the sight of God, they will vanish like a puff of smoke.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 16.

"No devoted thing...shall be sold or redeemed."—Lev. xxvii. 28.

There is a great principle involved in these words. When once a person or possession had been solemnly dedicated to God, it was not permissible to withdraw from the obligations which had been assumed. Once given, the offering was regarded as God's property, and might not be resumed by the offerer, or placed to any inferior use.

This regulation is specially applicable to our conception and practice of consecration. We are Christ's, by the gift of the Father, by the purchase of the blood of Christ, by the sealing of the Spirit; but there often comes a time in the life of the earnest believer when the Lord appears to claim a more earnest recognition of his rightful claim. Then thoughtfully and solemnly, spirit, soul, and body is laid upon the altar.

When once this is done, we must reckon that God has accepted it, and that we cannot repeat it. We may perpetually refer to it, and acknowledge its abiding obligation, and apply its principle to all those new departments and functions which are perpetually increasing on us; but we can no more repeat it, than could the Israelite give God the first lamb, since it was already his (ver. 26).

If we go back from the attitude we had once taken up, we must confess our relapse with tears and deep contrition, asking to be restored; waiting to be put back again into the old place by our merciful and compassionate High Priest. We cannot undo that past, but we may ask Him to restore the years that the cankerworm and locust have eaten.

SAUL REJECTED—1 Sam. xv. 10-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 22.

OUR last lesson described the beginning of Saul's reign. There seemed to be a bright and successful career before him. His conduct at that time gave promise of a character worthy of his office. Only about ten years have passed since then, and already we have to read of his rejection by God, in consequence of repeated unfaithfulness. How true it is that we know no man truly until he is tested. The testing does not make a man bad, but it proves what is in him. The fair promise of Saul's beginning is disappointed as soon as the tests are applied.

The first trial is recorded in chapter xiii. Recall the story of the distress of the people through the oppression of the Philistines; the bold enterprise of Jonathan, which brought the whole of the Philistine army against Israel; the delay of Samuel, and the consequent impatience of Saul; his sin in usurping the priest's office and offering sacrifice; and the appearance of Samuel just as the act of disobedience was completed. No doubt the test was a severe one. To see the enemy growing stronger, and his own forces gradually diminishing in numbers through delay was not easy. But difficulty never justifies or excuses disobedience. He has failed under the first test, and has lost the opportunity of continuing the government in his family.

The second test is in connection with the Amalekites (xv. 1-9). These were the "most harassing and unconquerable enemies of the Israelites, and were a fierce, untamable race of wanderers, who roamed at large through those deserts which lie between Southern Judea and the Egyptian frontier" (Ellicott). To Saul was committed the task, and the opportunity of utterly exterminating this people. Nothing less than their utter extermination could be a blessing. They had persisted in a long course of enmity against Israel; their "cup of iniquity was full," hence they are called "the sinners the Amalekites" (18); their continued existence would only be a curse to other nations, and Saul was called to execute this terrible act of judgment.

But again he failed (9). The fact is first made known to Samuel by God Himself (10, 11). For God reveals his secrets to his prophets, and to them that fear Him. Samuel was wroth (R.V.), full of indignation with Saul for his rebellion, angry with him for so foolishly throwing away his opportunity. In his anger he "cried to God all night." If every angry man did the same many a cruel word would remain unspoken. His anger was against the wrong, but his grief was for the foolish king. He who weeps and prays over another's sin is most suited to administer the word of reproof. It is no easy thing to reprove a king; yet Samuel did it before Saul; so did Elijah before Ahab; John the Baptist before Herod; Paul before Agrippa; Hugh Latimer before Henry the Eighth.

Saul's conduct when he is before Samuel only increases his guilt. He had already erected a monument (12, R.V.) to record his victory. "Carmel" is not the mount of that name, but a city some seven miles south-east of Hebron. He counts that to be a victory which God regards as a piece of guilty disobedience. He sought ineffectually to hide his sin, but the bleating of the sheep and the lowing of the oxen declared it (13, 14). Every sin leaves its mark somewhere, and will find some way of proclaiming itself. His excuses were—he had saved only the best of the spoil (15), he had allowed the people to have their way (21), and what had been saved was intended for sacrifice (21). The first of these contained an admission of his guilt; the second was a cowardly attempt to shift the blame upon the people, as Adam tried to blame Eve, and Aaron to blame the Israelites; and the third seemed like making God a partner of the guilt by getting Him to accept as offerings part of the results of disobedience.

The motto text is the answer (22). God does not mean to slight sacrifice, but He intimates that it is utterly worthless if it does not express the true obedience and devotion of the heart. It can never be an excuse for disobience. The spirit of the offerer determines the value of the offering. Saul has rejected God, and now God rejects him (23). From this time, though he occupied the throne, he was no longer so recognised and blessed by God as to effect the deliverance of his people. Alas! how many since his day have lost a kingdom through disobedience. The kingdom that cannot be moved may be ours; are we fulfilling the condition of yielding whole-hearted confidence to the King?

MR. RICHARD COAD has lately had good temperance missions at Hoylake (Cheshire) and Luton. Meetings for women, lantern lectures to children, and workers' conferences have been among the means used with so much success.

FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE GATES OF PEARL.

Jesus called a little child unto Him.—Matt. xviii. 2.
And He said unto her, Talitha cumi (My little darling), arise.—Mark v. 41.
And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls, playing in the streets thereof.—Zech. viii. 5.

[A dear little child-friend had been called home by the Good Shepherd; and one day as I sat alone, thinking of her, and missing her sadly, the following thought-picture shaped itself in my mind. I seemed to see the little ones of heaven clustered at the pearly gates, watching eagerly, in true child-like fashion, to welcome a new-comer. So vivid, so real, grew the scene, that I seemed to hear the sweet glad little voices, and the following lines embody in simplest fashion the very words I heard in my waking dream.—E. G. C.]

"WHAT do you think the angels say?"
Said the children up in heaven;
"There's a dear little girl coming home to-day:
She is almost ready to fly away
From the earth we used to live in;
Come, let us watch at the gates of pearl,
And be ready to welcome the dear little girl,"
Said the children up in heaven.

"God wanted her here where his little ones meet,"
Said the children up in heaven;
"She shall play with us in the golden street,
She had grown too fair, and pure, and sweet,
For the earth we used to live in.
She pined for the sunshine, this dear little girl,
That gilds our side of the gates of pearl,"
Said the children up in Heaven.

"So the King called down from the angels' dome,"
Said the children up in heaven;
"'My little darling, arise and come
To thy place prepared, in My Father's home,
The home that My children live in';
So come, let us watch at the gates of pearl,
For Jesus has called her, the dear little girl,"
Said the children up in Heaven.

"Far down on the earth, do you hear them weep?"
Said the children up in heaven;
"For the dear little girl has gone to sleep;
The shadows fall and the night-clouds sweep
O'er the earth we used to live in.
But up here, there is joy at the gates of pearl;
Oh, why do they weep for their glad little girl?"
Said the children up in heaven.

"Fly with her quickly, O angels dear!"
Said the children up in heaven;
"See, she is coming! look there, look there,
At the jasper light on her sunny hair,
Where the veiling clouds are riven! [furl!
Ah, hush,—hush,—hush!—all the swift wings
For the King Himself, at the gates of pearl,
Is taking her hand, dear, tired little girl,
And leading her into heaven!"

CARDIFF SAILORS' REST.—A large and enthusiastic audence attended at the Park Hall, on Wednesday evening, October 30, the occasion being the annual meeting of this society. Mr. E. R. Moxey presided. Brief addresses descriptive of the work were delivered by Messrs. C. Schroeter, R. M. Richards, and J. Glenelg Grant. The utmost heartiness prevailed throughout the proceedings, and the collection afforded cheering evidence of increased sympathy with the work, £150 being taken up at the meeting towards liquidating a debt of £200 now resting upon the institution.

IN LIVERPOOL BACK STREETS.

A REPORT has reached us of open-air evangelistic work, during the past summer, by two Christian friends in the back streets and courts of Liverpool. The preachers during twenty-six Sunday afternoons visited sixty-six courts and twenty-four narrow streets in various parts of the city. They state:—

On many occasions, after a few minutes' singing and talking, we have seen the people in tears, some of them evidently being under deep conviction. On one occasion, in the house of a Roman Catholic family, when we were at prayer, several were so deeply impressed that they sobbed; nearly all were in tears, including one strong man, who wept like a child. This gave us a splendid opportunity for preaching Jesus. On another occasion we could hardly get a man in a court to leave us, he being so determined to make a better start for the future. We have repeatedly heard—and sometimes indirectly—how glad the people were to hear us, even in some of the worst streets and courts, often many crowding round their doors and listening. Sometimes poor women with black eyes we would see, with others, sitting on their door-steps listening with attention to the old, old story of Jesus and his love. Often they joined us in the singing. The silent pressure of the hand indicated the intensity of their feelings, the Lord graciously touching their hearts.

We regret to say that such work in such places on Sunday afternoons is exceptional; certainly in our city. Indeed, in none of our travels have we seen brethren similarly engaged. The Lord stir us up to our responsibilities, privileges, and possibilities.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

DEAR SIR,—We of the Moravian Church stand face to face with a deficiency of £5750 on our foreign missions. To our own resources this sum is proportionately as much as ten times the amount would be to the larger societies. There has been no falling off of voluntary consecrated gifts on the part of our members and friends. The constant progress of the work which God still lays upon their hearts and hands in ever-increasing measure is the reason why the income of the year has fallen so far short of its demands.

You know well what that work of faith is, which the Lord has deigned to carry on these 160 years through a very feeble, and, humanly speaking, inadequate instrumentality. You know what remote corners of the earth are blessed by it, and what degraded tribes have received the Gospel at the hands of Moravian missionaries. You know in what spirit this endeavour is carried on, however imperfectly, and you are well aware that the simple, central testimony of the living Saviour, who died for our sins and was raised again for our justification, has by the Divine Spirit been made the power of God to the salvation of thousands of souls.

We Moravians will do our best to maintain the wide missionary work which is our heritage, but this £5750 by no means represents all that must be raised to carry it on in all the fields entrusted to us. Therefore, I make bold to plead that you will lay our case before your readers, lest the missions which God undoubtedly owns and blessed should be crippled for lack of funds. In sharing the burden, which is too heavy for us, I believe they will fulfil the law of Christ.—I am, Sir, yours sincerely,

B. LA TROBE, Secretary.

GIRLS' GUILD OF GOOD LIFE.—The tenth annual meeting of this important work amongst London factory girls was held on Tuesday evening last week in Hoxton Hall, the centre of its varied operations. Mr. J. Fyfe Stewart was chairman. The Bishop of Stepney (Dr. Harold Browne) delivered a most interesting address, and Mrs. Browne presented the annual prizes. Vocal and instrumental music illustrated branches of the Guild's work, and Professor James Stuart, M.P. for Hoxton, and Mr. W. P. Goulding, one of the oldest workers, spoke. The Guild is entirely unsectarian, its workers including members of various sections of the Church of Christ. On the surface its work appears largely secular, but the motive power underlying all is love for Christ, and the desire to serve Him by service to the humanity He loves, so that all may be brought to him. Further particulars of the work may be obtained from Mrs. J. T. Rae, 17, Darenth-road, Stamford Hill, N.

A MONTH IN A HOSPITAL.

BY A LADY PATIENT.

"Hezekiah king of Judah, when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness," wrote down his experiences, which have been a blessing to many. I too have written down the way in which the Lord led me into a new untrodden path, trusting that by his blessing my simple record may help some of the people of God along the strange path of life they are called to tread.

A delightful fortnight spent at the seaside, in a good measure of health, was suddenly terminated by a serious illness, which prolonged my stay under the care of a doctor and nurse. In that illness a fact was disclosed to me of which I had not the remotest idea: "If you wish to save your life you must undergo an operation" said the doctor one day. An operation! It sounded like a death knell in my ears. It might be successful, or it might not; was I prepared to die? The matter was left for me to decide. I asked would the operation, if successful, save my life? The doctor replied "Yes, and you may have many years of usefulness; whereas by neglecting it, you may soon die." "Then, doctor, I will go through it; I am a Christian and not afraid to die. I could with truth repeat Peace! perfect peace! our future all unknown?

Jesus we know, and He is on the throne.

It was arranged that the operation should take place in a London hospital, a new untrodden path for me, "not knowing the things that shall befall me there." The outlook was dreary, until the day arrived to enter "The Palace of Pain." Before starting on my journey to London, two promises like two strong arms—"the everlasting arms"—supported me, and faith was given me to grip them. The verse, "My presence shall go with thee" (Ex. xxxiii. 14), and "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee" (Is. xliii. 2).

My first impressions of the hospital were anything but cheering, but a warm-hearted nurse, with a bright face and cheering words, made me feel at home with my surroundings. Next day was the Sabbath. How strangely the church bells sounded! I pictured the happy throngs going up Zion's Hill to keep Holy Day; but as his presence makes the sanctuary and is rest, a Sabbath might also be enjoyed in a hospital. My companions were by my side, the Word of God and one of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, entitled "Faith's Firm Resolve" on Psalm lxxi. 16 (Authorised Version), "I will go in the strength of the Lord God." Twice the preacher (not then promoted to glory) referred to cases of operation. I quote one of them: "A sister just now sent a letter asking us to pray for her while she undergoes an operation. May the Lord sustain her! It is a prayer we often have to put up in this large congregation, for some of the very dearest and best amongst us. Dear friends, the text is for you with regard to the suffering you have to encounter. May you go forward to it without fear! Therefore, believer, do not linger, but say 'I will go, I will go.'" What could have been more comforting? I also was enabled by faith to say, "I will go" forward without fear, and in the strength of my Lord God I did. Thus closed one of the happiest Sabbaths I ever had in my life.

Next day I was visited by the operator, who fixed the following Wednesday for the operation. It seemed very near—life or death was near—was I prepared to meet my God? Shall I really go forward without fear? Satan, taking advantage of my weakness, insinuated that I should be deserted at the moment of trial; whereupon commenced "the good fight of faith." Brooding was not the way to resist the adversary, but to obey God and "go forward" (Exodus xiv. 15) right into this sea of difficulty and danger. I resolved to fill up the intervening hours with the duty of each hour as it came. "Hope and keep busy" was a favourite motto of an American authoress, and as that hope was centred in Jehovah it is no wonder that the day finished up with a glorious victory over the devil, who, being resisted, had fled. God gave me strong faith to lay hold on his promises with a firm grip, and the "strong consolation" was mine. This lasted right on to the hour of the operation.

On Tuesday I read Hebrews xiii., being much supported by verse 6, "The Lord is my helper, I will not fear. What shall man do unto me?" Relatives came to see me, bringing flowers and texts to adorn my little cubicle. I hoisted my colours to the mainmast, JESUS, that all might see "whose I am, whom also I serve." Anything but gloom pervaded that small room. What were my texts? Deut. xxxiii. 25, "As thy days," etc.; Phil. iv. 13, "I can do all things," etc.; and in large letters, "He knoweth," to which I could affix anything I liked, as "my way," etc. Thus ended another happy day of perfect peace, followed by a night of sweet sleep, knowing that the morrow

Can bring with it nothing,
But He will bear us through.

Awaking next morning, it was with a grateful heart for such a good night. The eventful day had come, but Jesus came with it too. Only one thing troubled me: I wished, just before taking the anæsthetic and losing consciousness, to offer a short audible prayer. Satan whispered, "Doctors and nurses have no patience with that kind of thing." Earnestly did I pray that I might keep my resolve. After preliminaries the sister led me to the operator, who received me kindly. Just before breathing in the deadening stuff I prayed audibly, "Father, into thy hands I commit my body, soul, and spirit"; and soon afterwards I was in a state of unconsciousness, and knew no more until I found myself once more in my little bed, a nurse occasionally watching over me to mark the first signs of awakening. "Is it all over?" I inquired of her. "Was the operation successful?" "Yes, quite," she replied. "Bless the Lord, O my soul!" and blessings on the heads of merciful men who laboured by the aid of science to find out ways to baffle pain and take away the old horrors of butchery!

Many sufferings of one kind and another had to be endured until Mother Nature had fully retaliated for the use of such powerful things, and my condition had become normal once more. Being an abstainer went a great way towards rapid healing. My condition was all that doctors and nurses could desire; the Great Physician was close by, "healing all my diseases." To Him I gave the praise in outward expression as well as from the heart.

That hospital experience taught me many lessons in the school of Christ. I endeavoured to be his witness of patience under suffering, striving to bear pain and sleeplessness without the aid of morphia.

I learnt also to sympathise with the suffering people of God. I was a prisoner of hope, but how many have no hope of ever being well again this side of the grave; they are incurables, bed-ridden for life, and dear Christians too, who, by reason of their maladies, are deeply depressed in spirit, to whom death would be a welcome visitor and the grave a bed of rest. As I now walk in health past any hospital, I think of the weary sleepless occupants, and have reason to say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

I cannot close without one word for the nurses, whose devotion and enthusiasm astonished me. Their work at times is of a most unpleasant character, yet it is performed cheerfully, and in many cases skilfully. The more difficult the case, the more enthusiastic they become. May it please the Lord, who delivered me in the day of calamity to bless this simple record, and fulfil his own word, "And call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me" (Psa. l. 15).

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

John 1. 1-18.

Nearly all commentators on the Gospel of John are careful to point out that the first eighteen verses of the first chapter constitute the prologue or introduction. It is interesting to note that beyond this they present to us an epitome of the Gospel, as the following may help to show:—

1. The Divinity of Christ—"the Word was God" v. 1.
2. The Incarnation of Christ—"the Word was made flesh," v. 14.
3. The Humanity of Christ—"the Word was made flesh," v. 14.

As the outcome of this we have:—

1. Salvation by faith—"to them that believe on his Name," v. 12.
2. Regeneration by the Spirit—"which were born," etc. (comp. ch. iii. 5).
3. Adoption into God's family—"gave he right to become the sons of God," v. 12 (see Rom. viii. 14-17).

As children of God we can ever rely on:—

1. The Power of Christ—"all things were made by Him," v. 3.
2. The Presence of Christ—"and dwelt among us," v. 14 (note present tense—shineth and lighteth in vv. 5-9).
3. The Plenitude of Christ—"full of grace and truth," v. 14., "of his fulness," v. 16.

Further, we have Christ revealed to us as:—

1. The Source of Life—"In Him was Life," v. 4. (see Eph. ii. 1-5, Col. ii. 13, Gal. ii. 20).
2. The Giver of Light—"the Life was the Light of men," v. 4.
3. The Embodiment of Truth—"full of grace and truth," v. 14.
4. The Revelation of God—"He hath declared Him," v. 19.

And lastly, we have man's attitude towards Christ:—

1. Ignorance of Christ—"knew Him not," v. 10.
2. Rejection of Christ—"received Him not, v. 11.
3. Acceptance of Christ—as many as received Him, v. 12.

Edinburgh Castle, E. S. E. Burrow.

THE LORD'S WORK IN SPAIN.—On Thursday afternoon a Foreign Missionary Drawing-room Meeting was held at 62, Everton-brow, Liverpool, at the invitation of Rev. and Mrs. Herbert Wood. Miss Ellen Leake (late of Liverpool) gave a most interesting account of her call to work in Spain, and of the Gundalera Mission, Madrid, which she is working. Several interesting cases of conversion were given. Mr. C. A. Ropes, 9, Princes-avenue, will supply all information concerning this missionary enterprise.

AN EAST-END POLYTECHNIC.—Some years ago the Baroness Burdett-Coutts built the Columbia Market in Bethnal Green, and endeavoured to establish there a great central mart to supply the needs of East London. For some reason or other the East-end salesmen did not take kindly to it, and after several years it was finally abandoned. The spacious building thus left vacant has recently been acquired for the East London Church Polytechnic, which Rev. W. Dawson, for several years a Clerkenwell vicar, has carried on in Appold-street, Finsbury, in succession to Rev. Freeman Wills, the original founder. The Polytechnic aims at providing for the educational and the recreational needs of a younger class of working lads than the ordinary polytechnics, and last week the Bishop of Stepney presided at a meeting, held at the Mansion House, to draw attention to the work of the institution.

PASTEURISM.—Having regard to the resolution of the Cork Board of Guardians to establish a Pasteur Institute in Ireland, Mr. F. E. Pirkis, writing from The High Elms, Nutfield, Surrey, calls attention to the sad death of another patient who had been treated in the Pasteur Institute at Paris. He says: "This makes the two hundred and eighty-first victim to Pasteurian treatment. The vapour-bath treatment of hydrophobia, first brought into vogue by the late Dr. Buisson, is to be procured at nearly every hydropathic establishment in the United Kingdom, and at no fewer than twenty-seven stations in India and Ceylon. I shall be glad to send pamphlets, giving particulars of this treatment, to anyone, and I gladly add the assurance that for needy patients all expenses will be paid, and they will be able, free of charge, to obtain the full benefit of a system that rests its claim to success upon the simple, yet scientific, principle that it is better to take poison out of the system than to put it in."

Rev. C. C. Fenn, M.A.,

MISSIONARY AND C.M.S. SECRETARY.

Biographical notices in these pages are not unfrequently records of those whose warfare is accomplished and whose race is run. They are calls to thanksgiving for faithful servants who have joined the Church Triumphant, but they are, at the same time, reminders that the Church Militant has lost a valiant soldier, or that a witness for Christ has been removed. It is more pleasant when, as to-day, we may speak of one still among us, and still seeking to advance the Redeemer's kingdom and prepare the way for his coming.

Christopher Cyprian Fenn was born in the midst of mission work, and missionary instincts have, under God, influenced and moulded his whole life. His father, Joseph Fenn, early in the century gave up bright prospects as a barrister, in order that he might obey the Lord's parting command and go forth as his messenger to the heathen. He was selected by the Committee of the Church Missionary Society as one of the pioneers in the mission to Travancore, in South India, where the corrupt Syrian Church, dating, according to its own account, from Apostolic times, presented an attractive sphere of labour. It was proposed to endeavour to reform this Church of native Christians, so that they might become a powerful agency in the evangelisation of the Hindus around them. Many difficulties impeded the success of this plan, and eventually the missionaries turned to the heathen, to meet with encouragement and success.

Mrs. Fenn accompanied her husband to Travancore. She was, like him, a most devoted servant of the Lord, and a woman of great sweetness of character. Few came in contact with her without being the better and the happier for it. The writer recalls with great pleasure the Christian intercourse he was permitted to enjoy in later years with these aged saints at Blackheath, where Mr. Fenn became, after his return from India, vicar of St. Michael's Church, and where he laboured for forty years, loved and revered by his large congregation.

Their family was a remarkable one. Their thirteen children were all spared to grow to man's estate, and of them, perhaps without exception, it could be said that the Lord was their God. No less than six of their nine sons became ministers of the Gospel. Several of the children were born in India, including Christopher, who first saw the light at Cottayam where his parents were stationed, shortly before they were obliged to leave India. His early years were spent with them at Blackheath, where he received his education. From his childhood eternal things were very real to him, and he has said that he cannot recall a time when he was not conscious of love to the Lord Jesus.

After his ordination he served for a time as curate of Ockbrook, in that way gaining some parochial experience. But his father's missionary spirit had descended to him. The needs of the heathen world weighed on his heart, and he offered himself to the Church Missionary Society for foreign work. He was appointed to the Ceylon Mission, and in 1851 he went forth to that island, having as his companion on board ship Rev. Edward Thomas Higgens, who is still labouring in Colombo.

Shortly afterwards, his younger brother, David, stimulated doubtless by his example, followed him to the East, finding his sphere of labour among the Tamils of North Tinnevelly, and at length laying down his life in his Master's service at Madras.

Christopher Fenn's post was that of Principal of the Cotta Christian Institution, an important educational establishment about six miles from Colombo, the capital. It was intended chiefly as a place of training for Singhalese clergy and other native agents, and afforded to Christian youths who appeared spiritually fitted for the work of teaching, an opportunity of acquiring the requisite knowledge.

Mr. Fenn, to a very remarkable extent, succeeded in impressing his own personal character on those who came under his teaching, and at the same time he secured a hold on their affections which still continues. When, eleven years since, in company with Rev. John Barton, he revisited Ceylon as deputation from the parent Committee of the C.M.S., in order to adjust difficulties which had arisen consequent on the attempt of Bishop Copleston to assume absolute control of the mission, it was delightful to witness the warm welcome accorded to him by those in whose training he had taken part, and whose Christian character he had been instrumental in moulding.

(From Photograph by Messrs. French & Co., 1, Railway-terrace, Wallington.)

The Institution has been changed in its character, but is still carried on as the Cotta English School, educating Buddhist lads as well as Christians. Its efficient and godly head master, Mr. William de Silva, was a former pupil of Mr. Fenn, and from among his Buddhist pupils almost every year some are found professing their faith in Christ, and seeking admission by baptism to his church.

Mr. Fenn's labours in Ceylon were not exclusively educational. In Colombo, Christ Church—Galle Face Church, as it is popularly called—has, from its foundation by Rev. George Pettitt fifty years since, been a rallying point for Europeans of that city who are supporters of the C.M.S., and who value the simplicity of worship and evangelical teaching which are found there.

During Mr. Fenn's period of service in Ceylon a large and influential congregation assembled in it every Lord's Day. Among its members were to be found some of the chief government officials, many officers of the Ceylon Rifle Regiment, and several leading merchants of the colony. To this congregation during his later years of residence in the island, Mr. Fenn was called to minister. The charge was a very important one, but it entailed difficulties from which at Cotta he had been comparatively free. Some, who saw no inconsistency in mingling the service of Christ with the pleasures of the world, endeavoured to induce him to join in the fashionable gatherings of so-called "Society." The wife of the colonel of the regiment urged his attendance at such an assembly at their house. Mr. Fenn calmly enquired whether, if he went, permission would be given for him to conclude the evening with the reading of God's Word and prayer. On being told in reply that it could not be, as young officers and others present would regard it as being "so extraordinary," he at once declined. Where recognition of his Master was out of place, there the servant could not rightly be. Strictly adhering to this rule, he maintained his position as one "separated to the Gospel of God," and won the respect of many who yet shrank from following him in his decided course.

On his return to England, in consequence of Mrs. Fenn's failure of health, he was in 1864 appointed one of the Secretaries of the parent society, and for thirty years he continued to fulfil the arduous duties of that post. His special charge was that of the missions in Ceylon, with which experience had made him familiar, and also of those in China, Japan, North-West America, and the North Pacific. Few outside the Church Missionary House have any conception of the amount of labour which such a post involves.

As the missions grew and extended, Mr. Fenn felt that the pressure became too heavy, and realized that a breakdown of health was only to be averted by retirement from such incessant labour. In the minute passed by the Committee on receipt of his resignation, there is warm recognition of both his personal worth and the importance of his services during the long period of his secretariat.

Mr. Fenn's visit to Ceylon in 1884 is above alluded to. During his stay there a circumstance occurred deserving of record, as showing the character of the man, and affording proof of his fellowship with brethren of other denominations than his own. Meetings for united prayer, in connection with the Evangelical Alliance, were being held during the first week of the year. The Wesleyans at Morotuwa, a few miles from Colombo, had arranged for such a gathering, and they requested Mr. Fenn to preside and give the address. He willingly consented, and the arrangement was duly published. The notice came under the eye of the Bishop of Colombo, who at once wrote to Mr. Fenn protesting against his proposed action, and strongly urging him to withdraw his name. The moment was critical, for negotiations of great importance to the mission were pending, which might be seriously affected by the answer given. But policy was not allowed to override principle—Mr. Fenn was not to be moved. He replied respectfully but firmly to the Bishop, defending his position, and asserting his right to follow his own judgment and convictions in such a matter; and he carried out his engagement.

The year of comparative rest since his retirement has done much, under the Divine blessing, towards restoring Mr. Fenn's health: and with returning strength comes earnest desire still to be about his Master's business. The love of souls and the longing to win them for Christ are in him as strong as ever. And now, at a time of life when many would seek to enjoy well-earned repose, he is busy in the study of a new language, to be employed for Him. His hope is, through its medium, to make known Jesus as Messiah to Jews in London, even as in days gone by he proclaimed Him as Saviour and Lord to Buddhist Gentiles in Ceylon.

THE LATE MR. RADCLIFFE.

On Wednesday of last week the mortal remains of our departed friend were laid in the grave in the presence of many friends, not only from his native city of Liverpool, but from more distant places. His two sons, Brainerd and Heber, two grandsons and other relatives were the chief mourners; they were joined in that capacity by Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. Robert Burns, of Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., and others. The attendance at the churchyard was very numerous and highly representative, showing the universal esteem in which Mr. Radcliffe was held by all classes of the community.

Mrs. Radcliffe has been deeply prostrated by the irreparable loss which she has sustained by the removal of her beloved partner in life; we commend her and all the bereaved family to the tender consolations of our God, and to the sympathetic remembrances of our many readers who have known and loved them. We give some notes of the services at Inglewood, Waterloo, Mrs. Radcliffe's residence, and at the cemetery.

PRIVATE SERVICE AT THE HOME.

Rev. J. J. Muir read selected portions of the Scriptures on the fleeting nature of life, the sublimity of death and the great reward hereafter. He said:—"I do not think that many men ever realised so truly what it is to die, that life might spring from death, than the friend who has been taken from us. Oh! how much one feels on a day like this, when the only thing worth counting is what we have done for our Master and for our fellow-men! All the efforts of a successful life lie pale under the cold shadow of death, but whatever we have done for Christ, to bring men to salvation, stands out as something precious.

"This it is we think of in connection with our friend who has left us. What thousands he has been the means of leading to Christ, bringing love and joy into their lives! How soon life is done. How this great shadow, which comes into every home, which is repeated from house to house, spoils and darkens everything unless we have Christ."

SERVICE IN SMITHDOWN-ROAD CEMETERY.

The hymn, "Jesus, the very thought of Thee," having been sung, Canon Woodward read Psalm xc. and 1 Cor. xv. In a fervent address he said:—We have met at the last earthly resting-place of the mortal remains of Reginald Radcliffe, solicitor-at-law, in Liverpool, and servant of Christ. I remember him when a very young man, and it was my lot to become acquainted with his loving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ before even he was admitted as a solicitor. I bear testimony that his religion was, from the very first, of a remarkable character. It was a singularly whole-souled religion. His consecration to the Lord Jesus Christ was an absolutely unswerving and complete surrender, and from the earliest time of my recollection of him he loved the Saviour's work. He delighted to be engaged in it, and he felt it impossible to be silent. He preached in all possible places in the name of the Lord. It was most uncommon, unusual, and unfashionable in those days, but he ever spoke simple, earnest words, which thousands, ay, hundreds of thousands, never forgot. During an acquaintance of nearly fifty years, I can verily say that I never knew him to do an inconsistent act. The Christian Church comprises many backsliders, but my friend was thoroughly consistent and zealous throughout. His faith was like a shining light, glowing brighter and brighter still, beholding more the glory of the Lord.

I stood by his side in Scotland-road, when for the first time he told the large crowd who gathered there (many of whom were Roman Catholics) the way of eternal life. At no time, no matter whatever changes took place around him (and many changes there were), did he alter his fundamental principles, his unlimited faith in his Saviour, the Saviour who has done all and suffered all. This faith grew stronger and stronger; he was, in truth, filled with the Spirit of God. The result was a remarkable self-denial and self-sacrifice. I well remember his unselfishness, his carelessness with respect to food, and sometimes I ventured to suggest it was injurious to his health. It was the same with his attire. His one point was to prosecute his Master's work, to do his Master's business. His heart was very singularly large. He set on foot missionary enterprises, which, though they have not yet accomplished all the work he desired, will go on through the years till the Master comes. He was a man of extraordinary power. He was a man of constant mind. He was a man of stupendous faith. He refused to look at difficulties in the way, obstacles and impediments were nothing; strong in the confidence of Christ, and the assurance of Christ's promises, he went on with his work, faithful to the end.

Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke to the following effect: "Part of the host has passed the flood, and part is passing now." I am reminded by the departure of our beloved brother of the many whose names have been connected with his during the past forty years most of whom have passed away, though a few still remain. As one and another is removed we feel we are brought near, so near, to the gates of eternity. Our beloved brother was a man who feared God from his youth, and sought to obey Him. He was steeped in the truth that "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but have everlasting life." And he was so filled with this Spirit that he "bound the whole round world about the feet of God" in prayer. Prayer, prayer, prayer, was the secret of his power in winning souls, and God used and honoured him to give effect to his own prayers.

When he went to Aberdeen in 1858 he found sacerdotalism in the ascendant. A "layman" was not expected to minister the gift that was in him; but Reginald Radcliffe opened the door, not by antagonising or denouncing the exclusive spirit, but in meekness proving himself sent of the Holy Ghost. He affirmed the right and righteousness of preaching in the open air, at races, executions, and other places of concourse; and when he and his comrade, Richard Weaver, were arrested and put in prison, they sang praises, as Paul and Silas had done before them, and the authorities came themselves and fetched them out. His frame was slight and his health weak, but he was a man of lion-like courage, of godly sincerity, and with the simplicity of a child. His wonderful work in Europe in preaching the Gospel by interpretation made these features of his character manifest, but that was not his business. He was like Uncle Vassar, who in the drawing-room of an American hotel asked a fashionable lady if she were a Christian, and pressed the way of life upon her. When her husband came she told him that a strange man had spoken to her about her soul. "Did you not tell him to mind his own business?" asked her husband. "Well, John," she replied, "if you had been here you would have thought that was his business." It was so with our brother Radcliffe; his business was the King's business, and he knew that it required haste, yet he waited on the Lord, at the posts of his doors, and never went forth until He sent him.

He put first things first; he did not, like the Apostles, ask such questions as "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the Kingdom to Israel?" but obeyed the commission: "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me, to the uttermost parts of the earth." So that he did not deal in mysteries. He knew that

> Soon the whole
> Like a parched scroll,
> Shall before my amazed sight uproll,
> And without a screen,
> At one burst be seen
> The Presence wherein I have ever been.

Therefore he was content to do the next thing, and wait for the things that are coming.

Neither did he enter into controversies; he fulfilled his own ministry, and did not smite his fellow servants.

He served his generation according to the will of God, and fell on sleep, garnered as a shock of corn fully ripe. Probably no man of his generation has done more to spread the Gospel. He was in fruitful work before the Revival of 1859, and to him we owe, as an instrument under God, as much as to any, the Revival of 1895.

Mr. R. J. Glasgow said: I have not come to praise the friend who has left us, but to tell you one or two things about him which I well remember. It was in the winter of 1859 that I first made his acquaintance, and since then I have enjoyed his uninterrupted friendship, and oftentimes his fellowship. A suitable allusion has been made to his courage, but there was a grace along with it which may well be mentioned, and that was his humility. I never knew a man who so deliberately kept himself in the background and pushed others forward. There are many in Liverpool, and throughout the whole kingdom, to bear testimony to the fact that it was the stimulus received from Reginald Radcliffe which prompted them to devote themselves to Christ. I believe there are present some of the agents of the Liverpool Town Mission, a number of whom were invited some thirty years ago to spend a night in prayer in one of the halls in West Derby-road. Reginald Radcliffe, Wm. P. Lockhart, John Hambleton, and many others were present, only three of whom now remain. It was a marvellous night, never to be forgotten. Liverpool was visited in a most wonderful way with spiritual blessing.

Allusion has been made to the great love of our friend, which I believe was the most prominent feature of his character. He was filled with the love of Christ, and love for his fellow-men. I do not know anyone to whom the words of St. Paul were more applicable than to him. "For whether we be beside ourselves, it is to God, or whether we be sober, it is for your cause. For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge that if one died for all then were all dead." He forgot himself to work for his Master, and his devoted life is before us now as a solemn lesson to all who profess to be followers of the Lord Jesus. I was once on a tour in Switzerland, my companions being Mr. Lockhart and Mr. Radcliffe's elder son. When we reached Lausanne we called at an hotel for tea, and entered our names in the register. Presently the head waiter appeared, very anxious to speak to us. "You have a Mr. Radcliffe in your company," he said. "That name is very dear to me." We asked him why. He replied that a few years ago an English gentleman of that name was in the town, through which he drove in an open carriage distributing tracts and giving notice of a meeting he was holding. This man had attended the meeting, and had never forgotten it.

Thirteen years ago I was in the north of Europe, and on reaching Christiana found that Mr. Radcliffe had been there. Before leaving Norway we met him, and he pressed us to attend a meeting which he had arranged in the open air at the country seat of the German Consul. I do not think he could speak three words of any language but his own, yet he reached the hearts of thousands, of many different nations, through interpretation. He was consumed with this, above all other ideas, that, having learned the grace of God himself, he should impart it to all nations. There are here to-day trophies of his ministry, and we thank God that, though he has ceased from his labours, there are many who remain to carry on his work. You will forgive me saying that he never preached a sermon in his life, but he spoke with the deep feelings of a heart filled with the Spirit of his Saviour. From him we may learn to be simple, humble, and, above all things, consecrated with an invariable devotion.

After the interment Canon Woodward spoke of the deceased gentleman's last words. Feeble and weak, he endeavoured to speak. "I want..." he said. "Is it Brainerd (his elder son)?" "No." "Is it Heber (the younger son)?" "No." Then, gathering all his strength, and making one last great effort, he said, "I want—all Christians—to spread the Gospel all over the world." He had often said, "I don't want them to preach; I want them to spread the Gospel." And so ended his glorious life.

After the benediction had been pronounced Canon Woodward said, and it sounded like a voice from above, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

This Mission held its annual réunion at Exeter Hall on Monday evening. The proceedings commenced with an excellent tea, after which every opportunity was given for the friends to converse. Archdeacon Sinclair, who presided at the meeting, said he considered the work of the Mission to be a strong, useful, and blessed auxiliary to the Church of Christ. He urged his audience that as they felt assured they had received the order to go out into the byeways and hedges to get in the wayfarers, that they should do so fully equipped.

Mr. Barry Wake, of the Finsbury Park Auxiliary, gave an enthusiastic report of the workings of this branch. Mr. Steer, of the Willesden Auxiliary, spoke of the great spread of the movement; they began with one service, and at present they had eight services carried on simultaneously in different parts of the parish. Mr. Arkell, of the South London Auxiliary, spoke of their work, which extended from Putney to Plumstead; out of eighty-nine meetings planned at the beginning of the season, eighty-three were actually held. Major Mackinlay, hon. secretary, reported a steady increase in the numbers of the meetings and testified to the excellent work done by the male choir.

After prayer by Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, Rev. E. G. Gange, of Regent's Park Baptist Chapel, gave an address. Every Christian, he said, should have his special work in the Church of Christ; there should be no drones. Jesus Christ was an open-air missionary; so were the Apostles, so that we are following in their footsteps. Let there be careful thought of what we are going to say, and make it carry home to the hearts of the hearers. Do not only think of those who are standing close around, but of the clusters of passers-by at the extreme edge of the crowd. Let the singing also be good; more good is done by singing than one knows of.

UGANDA.—In a recent interview with a press agency, Mr. Pilkington, of the C.M.S. Uganda Mission, said: "Since the proclamation of the protectorate in Uganda matters have been much more settled, the natives realising that the British will not now leave the country. A large number of the Mohometans who left the country after the recent rising are returning from the German territory, and are quietly settling down. The two great factions of the Waganda people—the Protestants and the Roman Catholics—are living amicably together, and there is no prospect of any political strife between them. The Mohometans in the country are quite friendly, particularly with the Protestants."

THE OXFORD CONVENTION.

[BY OUR OXFORD CORRESPONDENT.]

The Convention, held last week in the New Examination Schools, proved a time of very real blessing to many in the large audiences which assembled. As a kind of preliminary to the Convention proper, Canon Christopher invited the Evangelical ministers of Oxford and the students of Wycliffe and Mansfield to a drawing-room meeting, when Rev. E. H. Hopkins gave a most valuable address, characterised by the speaker's well-known clearness and grasp of truth. So balanced a statement of holiness teaching could not fail to help those present, and to remove any prejudices against the movement associated with the Convention.

The opening meeting on Monday evening was attended by a large audience, the fine and spacious school being practically full. The addresses were by Mr. Hopkins, and Rev. C. G. Moore, the latter being hitherto a stranger to Oxford. Mr. Hopkins, speaking from Deut. i. 21 and 30, emphasised the need of constant progress in the Christian life, and the danger of resting short of the highest possible attainment. Very clearly was it pointed out that Canaan primarily symbolizes the life of the Christian now, and only secondarily the future in heaven. Three obstacles to progress were dwelt on, fear, discouragement, and unbelief, and the address closed with an earnest appeal to honour God by allowing Him to go before us, and by following Him fully. Then two things will follow us, goodness and mercy. Mr. Moore's address was on "The provoked Spirit" (Ps. cvi. 32 and 33), and proved a very definite message to many. Faithfully was it shown how we hinder God's grace in us by the wrong spirit with which we receive the wrong-doing of others and so prevent them from putting matters right. This definitely practical word was like the touch of a wise physician, and revealed a weak spot to not a few Christians.

Tuesday's gatherings were addressed by Revs. A. E. Barnes Lawrence, and F. B. Meyer, the former taking the Bible reading in the afternoon. The keynote of this day was "the Will of God" and the need of our surrender to, and union with, that will in order to true life and service. From John xiii. 36, Mr. Meyer showed how Peter failed through the assertion of his self-life, and how he "followed afterwards" by reckoning himself dead to that self-life.

Wednesday's Bible reading was taken by Mr. Meyer, the subject being Fact, Faith, and Feeling, and it proved one of the most helpful messages of the whole Convention. The evening addresses were by Mr. Meyer and Pastor Th. Monod of Paris, the coming of the latter being particularly anticipated because of his connection with the Oxford Conference of 1874. Mr. Meyer's address was specially appropriate to those of ripe experience in Divine things, and dealt with the attitude of the believer to things doubtful and how we could be prevented from being brought under the power of any of these (1 Cor. vi. 12). The way of liberty through Christ's death was shown, and Christians were urged to possess and enjoy this freedom by the reckoning of faith and the reception of the Spirit (Rom. viii. 4).

Pastor Monod's address was brief, but proved a very helpful application of Mr. Meyer's words. Full notes appear on a preceding page.

The Bible reading on Thursday by Pastor Monod was a running comment on Luke xv., regarded as a revelation of "The Joy of God." Though chiefly evangelistic in treatment, its simplicity and quaintness helped many, and threw fresh light on a very familiar passage.

The closing addresses were by Pastor Monod and Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon. The former spoke from John xii. 36, and the latter from 1 Cor. iii. 16. Mr. Monod's message about having, believing in, and becoming the light, again spoke in particular to many young Christians. Mr. Moore fittingly concluded the convention with a word on the indwelling of the Spirit, and his manifestation in us. The after meetings each evening were clear evidences of God's working, and many will long remember this season of teaching and blessing.

Mr. Robert Wilson, the venerable chairman at Keswick, presided, and the arrangements of the committee were carefully made and carried out. The proportion of University men was not very large; it would seem impossible to make them realise that a meeting for all is intended for town and gown. It was found impracticable this time to have a meeting for University men only.

Special morning services were held in St. Aldate's Church, and sermons preached by Revs. E. H. Hopkins and E. W. Moore, which were greatly valued by those who were able to be present.

The extreme "Anglican" element was, of course, totally unrepresented at the Convention, while illness and other causes prevented the Nonconformist ministers from attending as often as they otherwise would; but those ministers and other workers of all the churches who were present day by day had a season of spiritual refreshment, that must bear much fruit in their work this winter. The teaching was uniformly clear, balanced, and Scriptural. The quiet interest of the audiences at each meeting was a sufficient indication of their value of the teaching, which will assuredly lead to renewed power and blessing in many quarters. It is now hoped to make this Convention an annual gathering. The air of Oxford is so heavily charged with intellectual elements that the spiritual side of truth represented by such a gathering cannot but prove of inestimable value to members of the University, as well as to the Christian workers of the city.

COLD ON THE WATERS.

The sudden burst of sharp cold finds many sailors and fishermen exposed on the seas around our stormy coasts unprepared with comforters, cuffs, steering gloves, chest protectors, and other knitted articles of warm clothing. Suffering men are making application to the Missions to Seamen for the usual winter supplies. Our hundred chaplains and Scripture readers, employed on board ships and fishing vessels, will be very grateful for such "woollies." Free copies of "Ladies' Work for Sailors," describing what is required afloat, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary, the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Wm. Dawson, Commander, R.N.

MRS. SEAMAN'S HOME.—The work carried on for some time by Mrs. Seaman at "Engedi," Eastern-road, Brighton, has been removed to "Harewood House," on the Marine-parade. Engedi consisted of two houses communicating, one being used for girls mostly from London workrooms. This part of the work Mrs. Seaman feels reluctantly obliged to discontinue. Harewood House will, therefore, be used for Christian workers and others desiring a quiet rest at the seaside. This house is not far from where Engedi was situated, but is on the sea front, with an extensive view of the Channel. The air of Brighton is delightful at this time of the year, and Mrs. Seaman will gladly welcome any who may be seeking a refined Christian home. Address, Harewood House, Marine-parade, Brighton.

THE JUBILEE OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE to be held next year, suggests to those interested in its work thoughts both of thankfulness and of humiliation: thankfulness that something has been done in the direction aimed at, and humiliation that, as yet, comparatively little has resulted from this attempt to draw the hearts of God's people into greater union and fellowship with Him and with one another. The founders of the Evangelical Alliance did not aim at any merely outward or formal union of churches, even of those professedly orthodox, much less at any amalgamation with or submission to the Church of Rome. They would not even interfere with existing denominational distinctions, but sought to kindle in all true Christians that brotherly love which would rise above and penetrate through all such man-made walls of separation.—Evangelical Christendom.

AMONG IRISH ROMANISTS.—4.

ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

I often find that Roman Catholics have a strength of belief in the power of prayer which may well teach Protestants a lesson. It is true that they look upon prayer as, in some sense, a charm; but, nevertheless, I have felt reproached for my own want of faith when witnessing the trust of some poor ignorant peasant in the fatherly goodness of God.

Passing by the house of an old widow lately, I was stopped by her grandson, who begged me to come in to see her, "Shure she was dying intirely, and couldn't catch her breath."

I went in, to find the old woman sitting up in bed, gasping in bronchitis, and making herself far worse by sobs and cries for aid. "Oh, help me, Miss, jewel!" she wailed, seizing me by both hands. "Oh, give me relafe!"

"I wish I could, Mrs. C——; we must get on a mustard plaster at once, and give you some medicine. Let Jack follow us to the house for them. In the meantime do try to be quiet; you will only increase the choking if you go on like this."

"But I'll die afore he comes back; oh! do help me!"

I was preparing to get what remedies were at hand, when she clung to me more closely. "Pray for me, that's what I want; last time you prayed I got relief; that's what'll cure me."

Very willingly I knelt at the bedside and committed her to God's hands, whether in health or sickness, in life or death, and to the Saviour who alone is sufficient to supply every need. She accompanied me with constant ejaculations, "Blessed Jesus, hear us! Holy Mary, have mercy on us! Almighty Father, bless us."

It was no time for controversy, for the woman's state was really dangerous. I went on praying, quietly and soothingly. By degrees her sobs ceased and her gasping became less distressing. She had faith to be healed. I left her composed and trustful. I found that God's blessing had been with the remedies which were sent to her later on, and that half an hour after my visit she was in a fair way to recovery. It was a matter of deep thankfulness to me, for I knew that this occurrence might increase my influence among Romanists, and that God could send home the words spoken in weakness to some heart, by his strength.

In a wretched cabin sunk below the level road, and fronted by a heap of manure, lived two old people a brother and sister, called Biddy and Jimmy P——. They had few relations and yet many friends, for Jimmy was the best cow doctor in all the country round, and was constantly in request by farmers in the neighbourhood. Alas, these friends did not show themselves friendly in a true sense, for they considered that Jimmy must be liberally supplied with whisky while helping them with their cattle. The frail old man came at last almost to live upon spirits, having no comfort at home, after the death of his sister.

Biddy was afflicted for many months by an immense cancerous tumour on the lip, which disfigured her so greatly that she rarely stirred beyond her threshold, shunning the eyes of mankind. It was little wonder that she grew wretched and bitter, though ever gentle towards me. In course of time the tumour seemed absorbed, and the unsightly lump fell off: but the poison spread now through all her system, and Biddy felt that death was creeping over her. She would not acknowledge her weakness, nor go to bed. Day and night were spent crouched upon some sacks in a corner of the filthy cabin; her brother absent: her door shut; with no companion but her cats, and her own sad thoughts.

I went every day, when possible, to take her a little nourishment, and make her more comfortable, and she hung on the words of life which were spoken "as she was able to bear them"; a psalm, a few scattered texts, now and then a prayer. They were all lovely, she said, "But I'm not going to die; won't I get better, Miss? shure I'm stronger to-day."

It was sad to see and hear her. Old, desolate, diseased, without one spot of brightness in all the present, past, or future, here was she clinging to life; determined not to lose her hold on the seen, as she could not realise the unseen. I told her of the glorious Home which God had prepared for such as she; but Biddy shook her head doubtfully. "I hope so," was all she dared allow, with the remembrance of sins, and the fears of purgatory haunting her.

I knew she must soon die, and kept on striving to open her dull eyes to the Saviour's all-sufficient redemption, to the "far better" things which He had died to purchase, richer than any the world at its best could give. But day after day passed by, and when I asked, "Biddy, are you willing to do Christ's will? Are you content to leave this pain, and loneliness, and misery, to be with Him?" she would reply, "I suppose so." Then came the pathetic appeal so often reiterated: "But won't I get over this? Won't I be well again an' able to get about?"

Hardly anyone came to see her. The house grew more filthy, the disease more repulsive. I had to go and wash out her broken cup, and carry water from a well even to give her drink. I do not think the priest knew of her state. One day the end was very near. "Biddy, the Lord Jesus will soon come for your soul; don't fight against Him any longer; do say to Him that your are content to die."

It had seemed as though her determination not to face death had held it in abeyance so far. She raised sunken glittering eyes to my face, "Then you think I can't live any longer?" "Yes, Biddy, you are going to the Saviour; are you ready?"

She sank back on her sack-pillow with folded hands. "Yes, I'm content; the Lord's will be done. Have pity on a poor sinner, blessed Jesus!" Peace entered that squalid cabin, and a June sunbeam lit up the calm on her dying face. Once more I prayed for her—the brother, who had come in, standing reverently by with uncovered head; and, as she repeated falteringly a few words of the Lord's Prayer, I felt that we were in the presence of "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Two days later Biddy passed quietly away.

Her brother lived on in sadness and solitude, falling more deeply under the power of drink. Ill, miserable, and neglected, a little while ago he became confined to the house, and hung over the fire all day, too asthmatic to lie down. I asked him if he remembered what he used to hear me saying to Biddy. "Indade I do, dear lady; poor Biddy!" He was wandering a little in mind, and I tried to gain his attention.

"Jimmy, you say you are dying; tell me in whom do you trust for salvation?" "In the Lord, shurely; who else would I trust?"

"No one, no one. Can you fix your hope on Him only to wash away your sin?" "Yes! God help me, God forgive me." He was not able to listen longer.

Next day the priest came, and neighbours worried the dying man with business matters, but I believe that "He who knoweth what is in man" saw the yearnings of that poor soul, and satisfied them. "Thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." C. M. B.

MR. W. G. CARR.—Large numbers have listened to Bible Readings by this evangelist, recently given in Edinburgh. Mr. Carr has held similar gatherings in Belfast and Dublin.

ANNIE'S CONVERSION.

"Will you go and visit Annie S——?" "Gladly," I answered, and next day found me at the given address. After a few minutes' talk with her father I was shown into the sick girl's room.

I had known Annie for some time as a strong, healthy girl; but what a change now. There was the unmistakable symptoms of a rapid consumption in the hectic flush and hollow cough. Evidently disease had laid firm hold of its victim. As I looked at her emaciated form I knew her time here could not be long; yet she was not ready for death.

Oh! the folly of putting off to the eleventh hour the salvation of the never-dying soul, of serving the world, the flesh, and the devil with youth and strength, and giving God the fag-end of life! Yet "whosoever will may come," and Annie desired salvation.

I continued to visit her, and prayed much for her. At last God "commanded the light to shine out of darkness."

One day, after reading from the 53rd chapter of Isaiah the following words, "He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned everyone to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all," I paused and looked at her. The Spirit of God there and then revealed the blessed truth that if her sins were laid on Jesus she had only to believe and live.

I do believe, I do believe, that Jesus died for me,
And through his blood, his precious blood, I shall from sin be free.

Reaching out her thin hands she drew me towards her in a loving embrace. Her face shone with a new born joy. Together we praised God for the gift of eternal life, and there was joy in heaven that afternoon, for do we not read in God's Word, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth"? Henceforth Annie's one desire was to live for Christ. Earnestly she prayed that "if it be thy will raise me up to testify for Thee"; but the Lord's will was to take her to Himself. She lingered a few weeks rejoicing in Jesus her Saviour, while grieving over her wasted life, then peacefully fell asleep.

THE TREBIZOND MASSACRES.

A letter dated Trebizond, October 17, gives painful details of the recent massacre there:—

"You will have read in the papers of the terrible massacre which occurred here on October 8th. At about eleven a.m., when everyone was at business, some in their shops, others moving hither and thither on the streets, all unfearful of danger, suddenly every Armenian became conscious that he was in danger of being shot down by armed men who appeared on every hand. Some had no time to think, but dropped before the well-aimed bullet. The work of slaughter went on for more than five hours, and was only checked when the rioters' attention was turned to looting. The cruel, inhuman, and wanton manner in which harmless men were cut down is sad to contemplate.

"The entire Armenian community, whether Gregorian, Catholic, or Protestant, is utterly prostrate. About one in four of all the able-bodied men are killed, say 500 in all. Scarcely an Armenian shop remains that is not looted. Three-fourths of the houses have been stripped. All are thrown at one blow into a helpless condition. The men are as helpless as the women, or more so. Their resources torn from them, regarded with suspicion and hatred by half the population of the city, their lives in danger, they can do nothing. How are the 7000 Armenians of this city to get their bread? And the villagers are worse off; their winter supplies are plundered, their houses burnt, their strong men killed, and the women and children refugees in the forests and houses of friendly Greeks. As soon as they dare to move, these will come to the city for help. Unless help comes speedily there must be great suffering. There is urgency, and as fast as funds come to hand please send direct to me."

Donations for the Trebizond Massacre Relief Fund should be sent to Rev. W. A. Essery, hon. sec. of the Bible Lands Mission Aid Society's office, Alliance House, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.

On Wednesday last week, at the anniversary gathering of Miss Steer's friends and helpers at the Bridge of Hope, Rev. Peter Thompson deplored the backwardness of suburban Christians in looking up the workers among the poor and needy of the East End. Certain it is that many who labour in the slums, and devote themselves heart and soul to the succour of the helpless, have much to teach the Church as to the weakness of humanity and the abounding grace of God. We could not but be sorry to find that so few of those who feel for the weak and wandering attended the meeting, at which the excellent work done at 28, Betts-street, St. George's in the East, was described.

It is seventeen years since Miss Steer started the Mission whereby she endeavours to raise the fallen, extends a sisterly hand to those who are in moral danger, and in various ways makes proof of a ministry of Christian compassion and love. Many a poor girl has been won from the ways of sin, while others have been warned in time and put in the way of a life of purity and usefulness. Year by year the tale has been told in outline, and in the latest report we read:—

"There are wonderful compensations in our work in Ratcliff Highway. If we have to go down to the very depths of uncleanness and sin to rescue souls, we are brought into contact with the purest and holiest and truest of God's children upon earth, whose one desire and aim in life seems to be how, in the smallest, as well as the greatest acts in their lives, to remember all they hold is in trust from God, for the use of their brothers and sisters for whom Christ died.

"Since September 30, 1894, we have received into our Homes 278 women and children. Of these 179 were rescue, and ninety-nine preventive cases, which, with the numbers in the Homes on September 30 last makes a total of 491. Of this number, after a short stay in the Refuge, we have passed on forty-five to other Homes. We have also found situations for 108 young women and girls, most of whom have passed through the laundry department, or one of the training Homes.

"In the Refuge and London Home we have 63 beds, which are always full. In the Night Shelter we have given 4901 night shelters, and have dealt with 920 individual cases. We have 145 children under our care in the Children's Cottage Homes. Many more infants and very young children have been boarded out this year, an arrangement which we have found desirable. During the year we have earned in the laundry £481, and the nett proceeds of our knitting and needle-room are £118."

Besides these agencies, there was a general solicitude for poor children, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and throwing round them a protecting hand. The little ones who are received into the various Homes have in some instances histories which it is hoped they will never know, and in many cases they would be lost indeed were it not for the love which seeks to give them the blessings of home and motherly care. Some of the little ones sang hymns in the Mission hall on Wednesday afternoon, and those who saw and heard were deeply moved to think of the contrast between the actual condition and training of the children and the surroundings in which many of them first saw the light. The same afternoon there was a sale of work, hosiery, etc., made in the Refuge.

The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, who spoke words of encouragement to the workers. Miss Jones, who carries on the Shelter branch of the Mission, held drink to be responsible for most of the degradation and ruin among women. Her story showed that kindness can get at the hearts of the most wayward. Assured that they will be lovingly listened to, young women, weary of a life of sin, come and ask to be taken in. Eyes filled with tears when Miss Jones told of cases in which mere girls had said that they "would do all right if they could be delivered from their friends"; and, of one who, desiring a free night's lodging, explained that the twopence she had would get her a bath in the morning—and after that she could go all day without food! A gentleman gave his card to a young woman in the Strand, telling her that on going to a certain Mission Hall and showing it, she would learn of a Home into which she might be taken. She carried the card for months, at length went to the Mission Hall, and was impressed by what she heard. A few nights ago she looked in at the door of the Bridge of Hope, and her request was, "Is it too much trouble to ask you to pray for me?" Too much trouble! Will not many pray for that young woman, "unknown yet well known"?

Rev. Peter Thompson's address was very cordial. He is as fully as ever abandoned to his work in the East-End. Mr. E. Straker described the preventive work. Short addresses were also given by Miss Steer; Miss Johnston, who works at the Refuge; and Miss Maud Steer, who looks after the children. Those who attended the meeting cannot but have been impressed with the urgency and reality of the work.

MISSION AT KILBURN.

St. John's, Kilburn, is a parish which for poverty and difficulty is not surpassed in any part of London. We are at present in the midst of a Mission, conducted by Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield, of St. Peter's, Highgate Hill. The special object is to reach the members of friendly societies, trades unions, and temperance societies, and numbers of these organisations have heartily co-operated in the enterprise. The presence of the Holy Spirit was very manifest in the church on Sunday, the congregation including many who, we believe, are not in the habit of attending any place of worship.

The expenses of the Mission will, I think, amount to about £40; and all funds for aggressive Gospel work must be raised outside the parish. Whatever influence for good my position as vicar gives me, it is for the benefit of all, and my hope and prayer is that this Mission may be the means of winning souls, strengthening the hands of all workers for Christ, and building up a spirit of unity amongst all who call themselves brethren in Christ Jesus. J. Sinclair Moore.

TRUST AND GUIDANCE.

Proverbs iii. 5, 6.

Unknown, untrod the future lies;
Its track I cannot see;
But Thou, my God, the "only Wise,"
Hast planned it all for me.

It may be that the path shall lead
Through rugged places drear;
And then thy guiding hand I'll need
To point my way quite clear.

When angry storms around me beat,
And mists the landscape hide,
Then may thy lamp uphold my feet,
Be Thou alone my guide!

Blest Saviour, keep me close to Thee,
So that I cannot stray;
Then 'tis enough for me to know
My duty for each day! H. C.

SERMON LANE MISSION.—The Young Women's Welcome has lost two workers, Miss Margaret F. Brodie and Miss Edith Sharpe. Miss Brodie has gone to reside at Eastbourne, where she will carry on similar work (among the young women of that town) to that which she was engaged at the Mission. Miss Edith Sharpe was suddenly summoned to a higher service. Without a moment's warning she was called home. Rev. E. A. Stuart, in speaking of her, said, "We have no need of a dying testimony to assure us that all is well with her, for her life showed whose she was, and Whom she served. Her quiet, gentle, unobtrusive Christianity endeared her to all hearts."

HOMES OF HOPE.

These Homes, situated Nos. 4, 5, and 6, Regent's-square, Gray's Inn-road, N.W., continue their quiet work, with painfully attenuated resources. The last report abounds with evidences of the immense good effected through this agency. Two facts are evident, that under the surface of our vaunted social order and Christian civilisation, dark and evil forces are constantly in operation, producing incalculable misery and wretchednes; and that, but for the remedial help of the Gospel offered through these and similar refuges, the victims of sin and sorrow would have otherwise swollen the black tide of utter despair. Many, alas, have been left unhelped, not from want of will but from lack of means. Less than £1500 has been contributed to the funds of the society during the past year.

The class among whom the society chiefly works.—the erring, but not depraved, because helped back in time—are such as form the most repentant and the most stable in their future, of those who have but stumbled from the right path. It is stated in the report, that in almost every case, the young mothers, and those admitted unfallen, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent. of the others! We would strengthen the appeal which the society makes, for special and sustained help in its blessed Christian endeavours by quoting the touching words of one who had fallen from grace, but through those endeavours had been restored in the spirit of meekness:—"It cannot but interest you to know that in my severe and bitter trial, I have learned a valuable lesson—how to trust God. My sore and deep affliction has driven me to Him from whom I had strayed. While in your Home I had time to reflect and consider my ways, which led me to seek God with all my heart. I know of two cases similar to my own; how many more there are I cannot tell. The great day, I feel sure, will reveal the inestimable value of such a Christlike work."

The secretary of the Mission is Mr. W. Hornibrook.

HINDE-STREET WESLEYAN CHURCH.

Two years have passed since the friends connected with this church met to welcome Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, their newly-appointed minister. The celebration of the anniversary took place on Thursday last. The services began with a key-note of praise, which rang through every meeting. In the afternoon a most impressive sermon was preached by Rev. F. B. Meyer.

At the evening meeting Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant said his heart was filled with thanksgiving as he looked back over the two years' work. There had been many difficulties, but God had given strength and victory. Every week men and women had been converted. The increase of members is 251, besides filling the places of 160 removals. The various kinds of work done in connection with the church were spoken about, and the pastor thanked the people for all their sympathy and loving-kindness.

Mr. Crosland spoke straight to the hearts of the listeners; he had been much interested in all the doings at Hinde-street, but especially in the work done by the Sunday-school staff. Rev. E. R. Gibbens gave a very helpful address on "The Power of the Holy Spirit in Life and Service." Dr. Heywood Smith also spoke briefly.

Mr. Sarjeant has issued a report of his two years' work, under the title of "The Nameless Mission"; it is full of interesting records of Christian effort among various classes.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed a month's mission here. The services have been largely attended. This young evangelist possesses, in an eminent degree, the power of holding his congregations, and his attractive method of address secures the repeated attendance of those who have once listened to him. Throughout his mission the congregations have been above the average. The simple Gospel has been preached with much power, and God has graciously owned his truth to the salvation of many.

Nearly a thousand persons assembled on the last week-night service held by Mr. Notman. Not a few among those will bless God to all eternity for the visit of our brother. K.

REV. ANDREW MURRAY.

A bitter attack on Rev. Andrew Murray was made in the October number of a monthly contemporary, with reference to some passages in his book, "In the Holiest." Had Mr. Murray been aware of a keen controversy on the sacred subject of the Word made flesh, which began forty years ago, and the virus of which is not yet dead, we are assured that our revered friend would have avoided any expressions calculated to revive the discussion. Had the writer of the strictures, or the editor of the paper, asked Mr. Murray to explain his meaning before denouncing him and his book, a great fault would have been avoided—that of censorious judgment of a much-used fellow-servant of Jesus Christ.

We have received from a friend the following extracts of a letter written by Mr. Murray in reference to this subject. Our readers will observe at once the humility, the candour, and the loving spirit of his words. We much regret the expressions which have proved capable of an interpretation other than that intended by the author; and it is quite possible that we may not entirely agree with Mr. Murray, even in the modification which he will make in his next edition. But we know him to be a man of God, and thousands testify that he has been used to their blessing during his visits to England and America. We cannot but express the humiliation with which we read the attack upon him:—

"No words can be too strong to express my faith in the absolute sinlessness of our blessed Lord, not only as manifested in his will and actions, but as inherent in a nature free from the faintest shadow of a taint of sin.

"To my own mind the truth of Christ's sinlessness appeared so much a matter of course, so self-evident, that the thought never entered my mind that the expression 'fallen nature' [as used in reference to our Lord] could be taken to mean anything else than our nature, apart from sin, as suffering from the consequences of the fall.

"I have tried simply and frankly to state what appears to me the truth as I have found it in Scripture. I have no wish to ask others to accept my views as the best, or the complete expression of the truth of God, in regard to the blessed mystery of our Lord's human nature. But what I think I may ask is, that the impartial reader shall judge whether there is anything in this statement inconsistent with the most perfect faith in the absolute sinlessness of Christ's human nature, with the utmost loyalty to Holy Scripture, and with the most tender jealousy for the honour of our blessed Lord.

"I know well with what tender and reverent fear Evangelical Christians regard our Lord's Divinity, and how any expression that brings out his actual likeness to us in temptation, is cause of suspicion and fear. And yet I cannot but believe that as we are led by God's Spirit deeper into the truth of Christ's humanity, we shall fall down in a deeper admiration of the great mystery of godliness, and a deeper adoration of our blessed 'Immanuel—God with us.' They will be found consistent with the most perfect faith in his Divine glory, and his absolute human sinlessness and perfection.

"In writing as I did I had not the slightest thought of propounding or propagating a theory; I simply sought to emphasise that reality of our Lord's temptation in which his sympathy with us has its root and its value. What I have now written has only one object—to make plain what my meaning was, and to show how fully I am one with God's saints in holding fast the great verities of our faith. I needly hardly say there cannot be a moment's hesitation, now I have said in what sense I use the expression "fallen nature," in my substituting for it in a new edition of my book "our human nature." And if it please God to restore me to my study and to quiet I shall gladly give what has been said most careful consideration, and strive to put what I wish to say into such words as may have the approval of all who love the Lord.

"In conclusion, I commit myself anew to the love and prayers of all God's children. Let us remember that wherever there is danger of error, it is not so much argument as love that must meet and conquer it. It is the work of the Holy Spirit to guide into truth; He can use us for each other only as our hearts are filled with true love towards each other. May our God use even our differences of thought and expression to make us more intensely one in the spirit of love and intercession."

DARJEELING.—Rev. R. Wright Hay, writing on Oct. 8, says: "The convention is over, and we are praising God for a time of great blessing. There were missionaries from various parts of India, and several who are preparing to enter Tibet present; and a great overshadowing of Divine power was granted to us. So that we are believing that a widespread blessing will result, through the labours of those, to whom these quiet days of waiting upon God were given. Please to offer thanksgiving with us."

PENTECOSTAL LEAGUE.

The secretary of the Pentecostal League sends to us the following account:—

Exeter Hall was filled afternoon and evening on Wednesday, October 30, with enthusiastic audiences, on the occasion of the autumnal gathering of the Pentecostal League. Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C., the founder of the movement, presided, and explained the objects of the League. He said: "The League, which is not yet five years old, already numbers many thousands in this country alone, and is spreading with almost equal rapidity throughout the world. It is not a sect, but the very reverse. It is not a teaching order. It simply unites Christians to pray for the Holy Spirit, who alone can teach. It is an interdenominational and international league of prayer for the Holy Spirit. The great need of the churches, as well as that of individuals, is to be filled with the Spirit. This is acknowledged by the spiritual leaders of all the denominations, of whom a very large number are members of the League."

Addresses were afterwards delivered by Rev. E. W. Moore and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, representing the Church of England and Nonconformist wings of the great Holiness Movement. Mrs. Reader Harris also spoke. The chairman concluded the evening meeting with an address on "How to receive the Holy Spirit," which was listened to by the immense audience with rapt attention. At its close several hundreds rose to their feet, and remained standing during Mr. Harris's closing prayer, in silent testimony that God had spoken to their hearts. Not one of the thousands present will easily forget that closing scene.

[Surely the purpose for which the various spiritual gifts were bestowed was to build up the Church, which is the body of Christ. It really seems strange that this Divine arrangement should be supplemented by a League, membership of which must be obtained through Mr. Reader Harris. Is not our brother taking rather much upon himself?—Ed.]

SIGNS OF BLESSING.

I have thought it might encourage others to relate the following:—

At this season it is usual for our missionaries to conduct special missions in their different halls throughout the city. The one held in Llanrwst-street Hall, which has just finished, had the appearance from the beginning of decided blessing. Not only were the meetings well attended, much beyond the usual, but the power of God upon the people was manifested. It was with difficulty the people could be got to leave on the last two nights, so earnest were they to join in prayer, and to help the seekers. The missionary, describing the Saturday night meeting, said, "I have never felt such a power of God before."

In another hall it was noticed one night that some of the people were weeping in the street as the workers left the hall. In others there seems to have been a deeper work than is usual, and several of the missionaries have been led to pray more that God would really work a work that would manifest Him as the worker. J. Barnabas Bain.

Liverpool Town Mission.

MR. W. J. ORSMAN, of the Costermongers' Mission, writes that at Costers' Hall they are busily preparing for the winter's work, and especially the feeding of the poor children. The poorest children of the elementary schools are selected by the head teachers and directed to the Costers' Hall, where they are freely supplied with a good breakfast of cocoa and bread-and-butter. The many-sided operations at the Mission are now in full swing; the work is moving forward, but the need of funds is sorely felt. The superintendent's address is Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—On Thursday, Nov. 28, the day of intercession for foreign missions, the committee will hold a meeting for prayer at Sion College, from 3 to 5 p.m. In a circular just issued, the topics for praise and prayer are grouped under five heads:—(1) "Native Christian Workers"; (2) "Native Converts"; (3) "The Jewish, Mohammedan, and Heathen World"; (4) "European Missionaries"; and (5) "Ourselves"—that is Christian kings and governments, and the various "powers that be" in the Churches. Copies of the circular may be had from the Mission House, Salisbury-square, E.C.

A CALL FROM MATEBELELAND.

Rev. W. A. Elliott, 54, Kirkgate, Shipley, until lately a missionary of the L.M.S. in South Africa, writes to us:—

"I am moved to appeal on behalf of the L.M.S. missionaries in Matebeleland, South Africa. I have had three or four letters lately from my brethren out there, all full of the same pitiful tale: 'We want at least six native teachers to locate at once.'

"Our Society's funds are exhausted. May God touch some hearts to respond. For thirty-three years the Matebele Mission was carried on in great weariness and amid heaped-up discouragements, with a statistical result of five converts, three men and two women. The two women have married two of the men, who are acting, as is the third, as native teachers. For many years these converts have maintained their faith in the face of trial and persecution. Now that the rule of Lobengula is overthrown, the people are free as never before, and many of them are clamouring to be taught. In the dark days liberal estimate would give thirty people as the average congregation on Sunday; at the second station it would be less. Now I hear from both stations of 'splendid congregations.' Then the daily school was an intolerable weariness, with only two or three spasmodically regular attendants; now I hear of over fifty children at Hope Fountain and twenty at Inyati regularly coming for instruction.

"Mr. Helm writes:—'There are plenty of stations, and any number of people on our own ground, with others who can be easily reached in the neighbourhood. But, short-handed as we are, what can we do? We ought to have a few artisans and a lot of native teachers, and at least one lady teacher.' The heart of Mr. Reed is so stirred at the call of the people for instruction that he speaks of giving up his salary to help to provide native teachers in the more obvious centres. He has opened a new station, but as he has only recently joined the Mission, he cannot yet do much in verbal instruction. Yet he says the people come and sit waiting to be taught.

"It seems hard after thirty-three years of ploughing and patient sowing, now that the fields are white to harvest, that there are almost no harvesters. A native teacher would cost I suppose about £30 per annum, perhaps less. Contributions may be sent 'for Matebeleland' to the L.M.S., 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C."

PROGRESS IN BERLIN.

For the past fifteen years we have been privileged to work for the Lord in Berlin, and from very small beginnings the work has grown steadily year by year. Now there are three centres, at each a well-organised mission church, at Moabit, Charlottenburg, and Potsdam, where a goodly number regularly gather in fellowship for prayer and worship at the table of the Lord, and the Gospel is being preached to attentive audiences. Three Sunday-schools are being conducted by voluntary helpers, themselves being fruits of the Mission, some even of the Sunday-school. Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, mothers' meetings, and missionary meetings are being held regularly; also temperance work has been commenced and carried on for the past two years with encouraging results. Some who received spiritual life and light at our Gospel services, and some training in connection with our Gospel work, are labouring now as evangelists and pastors in other parts of Germany; some have gone to America, and are honoured of God in the conversion of sinners.

From the beginning of our work in Berlin, our house has been open to many English friends, some of them residing as boarders with us; others passing through Berlin were thankful for Christian fellowship in a foreign country. Our work has been carried on in dependence on the Lord for means and everything that is needful, and although our faith and patience have often, and of late more than usually, been tried, yet our God has been faithful and provided all things needful. Very graciously and gently He has led us onward step by step, and many souls have been won and eternally blessed through the work of our Mission.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY in London this year has produced £61,500; and every participating hospital will in consequence receive a further grant from the fund equal in amount to three-eighths of the previous grant to each institution sent in August last.

Letters to the Editor.

THE BASIS OF CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Sir,—The division among Christians is patent to all and sadly true, and is doubtless a stumbling block to many. Though John xvii. 21 includes every single soul throughout the wide, wide world who is trusting the precious blood of Christ alone as his or her salvation, yet visible oneness on earth is absolutely unattainable. The Word of God does not go beyond telling us to "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," Eph. iv. 3. The unity of the body is surely alone in Him.

It is sad to see men professing Christianity playing with Rome, and addressing a fellow mortal sinner as "Holy Father," a title which alone belongs to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Oh, for more grace to "walk in the light even as He is in the light." And the more this is daily true of each blood-bought individual so much the more will those who are only nominal Christians "take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus and have learned of Him."

The parting words of the Lord Jesus Christ were, "Preach the Gospel," which will, as long as the present dispensation lasts, prove more potent in saving sinners than futile attempts to make one outwardly visible Church. S.

DEFECTIVE PREACHING.

Dear Sir,—The letter on defective preaching in your issue of October 24, was doubtless written with the best intentions, and contains much with which in general, all will agree—as to the necessity of speaking the truth in love—which one would judge, was pre-supposed by your correspondents of an earlier date.

The style of preaching to which "M.E.T." seems to have been exposed—namely the terrors of hell apart from the full and free proclamation of the love of God to sinners—was, in itself sadly defective, but should not be confounded with something quite different, which your other correspondents recommend.

But has not "M.E.T." very much mistaken the side of truth which is needed at the present day. We are exhorted to "discretion" and "love" in dealing with the question of future punishment, but surely, at few periods in the history of the professing Church, was there less danger of these being lost sight of. Surely it is not to-day that Gospel-preachers need to be restrained from too faithfully warning sinners of the risk they run in neglecting God's great salvation. Is there not a danger rather of a mere human kindliness which shrinks from giving offence (sometimes mistaken for the love of the Spirit), closing the lips to such subjects altogether?

On all sides the truth of future doom is either openly attacked or insidiously undermined. Is it, then, needful at the present crisis, to discourage those of the Lord's servants who still walk in the old paths, from faithfully warning the careless and undecided to flee from the wrath to come? It is true that "our Lord never terrified one who was trying to learn with the terrors of hell," nor would anyone advocate such dealing with an anxious soul. But there are some whom we are exhorted to save with fear, pulling them out of the fire.

May I point out that your correspondent's statement that "our Saviour in no case warned of hell, except when He was speaking to the hardened... formalists about Him," is not according to the facts. It would not have been amiss, one would think, before making a statement so likely to mislead, to consult a Greek Concordance. It would then have been seen that only on one occasion, Matt. xxiii. 15, 33, does our Lord speak of hell to the formalists described above, but on all the other occasions when He uses the word, He is speaking to his disciples, e.g., Matt. v. 22-29, 30, xviii. 9, Mark ix. 43-45, Luke xii. 5, etc.; thus clearly instructing those who, when He should have left them, were to be his witnesses by word and pen.

Seeing these things are so, is it not clearly his will that we should present this solemn subject, when preaching, in its true proportion? Nor should the thought that our love to sinners falls far short of that of our Lord, deter us from faithfully warning them in dependance on his Spirit, of a real and awful hell. Truly we need to wait on God for his love and power, if our warnings are to be effectual, but do we need it less when preaching of the love of God, if sinners are not to be lulled to sleep in a fancied security? UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our Own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

The Oxford Y.M.C.A. are about to lose their able and most valued president, Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., who is removing to London. The present condition of the Association is very largely due to his earnest and constant advocacy and work on its behalf. He is also president of the P.S.A.

Rev. H. Price Hughes paid his annual visit to Oxford last week, and preached at Mansfield on Sunday, as well as addressed a meeting of the "Cabinet Club" on Saturday, on "Christian Socialism."

Dr. Sanday's inaugural lectures on the Trinitarian Creed promise to be very helpful to truth by their careful consideration of God's Word and its meaning in the face of modern theories.

A valuable lecture on "Persian Missions," by Mizpah Norollah, a Persian convert, was given in the Examination Schools on Monday in aid of the Oxford cot in the Jerusalem Mission Hospital. This effort will still further deepen Oxford interest in Jewish missionary work.

The cause of the Church Lads' Brigade was championed on Monday by Lord Chelmsford and Rev. C. G. Lang, and strong testimony borne to its influence over working lads. It is said by its advocates to be wholly free from a wrong spirit of militarism.

DURHAM.

A students' C.M.S. meeting was held a few days back, the Ven. Archdeacon Watkins, D.D., in the chair. The special speaker was Lieut.-Gen. Brownlow, well-known in C.M.S. circles. He said that some good people look at missionary work as part of a great evolutionary scheme for merely civilising the world; while those who really understand missionary work regard it as contributory to the fulfilment of Christ's Second Coming, when the Gospel has been preached to all men.

The C.M.S. meeting was addressed on Tuesday, November 5, by Rev. W. C. Whiteside, a missionary from India.

The Durham University Christian Union is gaining ground through its daily prayer meetings and the Sunday lodging-house work; both of which are real bonds of Christian union to the members.

The wide esteem in which Rev. H. E. Fox is held was seen in the large and representative gathering in the Town Hall last Friday, when he was presented with a testimonial and an illuminated address. The Mayor and Canon Tristram gave addresses, and Mr. Fox feelingly replied.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The esteemed director writes praising God for the abundant opportunities of the past summer and autumn, in tents and halls, and adds:—

The work at various watering-places also been very encouraging. Multitudes on the sea-shore, in town thoroughfares, and on village greens have thus heard the word of life, the results of which are with God. Some of our number have gone forth to carry the Gospel into foreign lands, including my own eldest daughter, now labouring in the perilous climate of East Africa, while others are being led to give their lives to similar work abroad.

Now we are fairly launched on the winter's work in many places, with every prospect of extended usefulness. Certainly never was the door more widely open, nor, on the whole, have we found a readier ear for the Gospel amongst the masses. There is thus still a solemn call to all who have personally proved the power of the love and grace of God in Christ Jesus our Lord, to enter these doors and make known to our perishing fellow men "the unsearchable riches of Christ." This, by the gracious help of God, we are purposing more than ever to do, but we ask the hearty, prayerful, and practical co-operation of all who have assisted us in the past, and of all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, both for increased spiritual power and increased supply of funds, in which latter we shall need much assistance this winter.

IRISH NOTES.

A large choir from Dr. Stephenson's Homes, London, under the direction of Sisters Dora and Kathleen, has been visiting Limerick, Waterford, and other cities and towns in the south and west of Ireland, and has been everywhere well received.

A work of revival has been going on for the past three months in Dunkineely, co. Donegal, in connection with the labours of Rev. Jas. Dickson, Methodist minister. Several weekly meetings have been established, family worship has been begun in not a few homes, and large numbers have signed the pledge.

The anniversary of the Dublin Central Mission, of which Rev. Wm. Crawford is the superintendent, has been held, and the report which was presented at it showed that the work of the mission during the past year has been carried on in all its departments with unabated energy and success. Several were led to Christ, and many signed the temperance pledge.

A three days' holiness convention was held in Belfast last week under Methodist auspices. Rev. W. H. Tindall occupied the chair at each of the meetings, which were very largely attended, and soul-stirring addresses were delivered by Revs. Saml. Chadwick, of Leeds, C. C. Morgan, of Birmingham, Mrs. Penn-Lewis, of Richmond, Surrey, and others.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Mr. Josiah Spiers is conducting a mission for young people in Dundee.

Rev. C. W. Fleming, of Corstorphine Free Church, has been appointed assistant to Dr. Stalker at Free St. Matthews, Glasgow.

Mr. Quarier states that he still requires £45,000 to complete his scheme in connection with the consumptive hospitals for Scotland.

A temperance council for the eastern division of Scotland has been formed. It was decided to advocate the early passing of a Scottish Local Veto Bill.

A meeting in Aberdeen last week, in connection with Wesleyan Foreign Missions, was addressed by Rev. W. Holdsworthy, of Mysore, and Rev. A. Triggs, Ceylon.

The Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland has recently received a number of accessions to those under its care; 450 children have now to be provided for, and increased help is needed.

Dr. J. Hood Wilson, of Edinburgh, in a recent address to Christian workers, dwelt on the value of open-air preaching. The Church should aim at getting a higher standard of this class of work.

The Mizpah Band of Glasgow held its annual social meeting last week, when there was a goodly gathering under the presidency of Lord Overtoun. Mr. Gipsy Smith was present, and sang as well as spoke to the men.

The death is recorded of Rev. M. N. Goold, senior pastor of Buccleuch-street U.P. Church, Dumfries, in the seventy-eighth year of his life and the forty-ninth of his ministry. He was an able, devoted, and energetic minister; his classes for young people were very popular, and a means of much good.

An interesting and fruitful work has been carried on during the past few months in the district of Laigh Cartside, Johnstone, under the labours of Mr. T. Metrustry, student at Dunoon College. There have been some very striking cases of conversion. Weekly meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life have also been blessed.

A writer in The Scotsman says the time is ripe for making many absolutely necessary and long deferred practical amendments in the Scottish licensing laws. One of these is the right of appeal from the licensing justices to judges of the High Court; another, that no member of the inferior licensing court should be allowed to sit on the court of appeal and review his own judgment.

Professor Johnston, in opening the class of Biblical criticism at Aberdeen University last week, made some very discriminating observations on this subject. He urged that if people looked on the Bible merely as a book to be criticised, and made the basis of speculative theories, and did not use it as a means to personal sanctification and communion with God, their investigations would be of little account.

MASHONALAND.—May I through your paper ask for prayer for this spiritually-neglected country? The whole country is given up to worshipping money. Drink and immorality are the great curses out here. Pray that there may be a great outpouring of God's Spirit over the whole country. (1) In rousing up the few Christians there are in the country to a sense of their responsibility and privilege in witnessing for Jesus. (2) That there may be a mighty conviction of sin in many hearts, and that men may "turn from idols to serve the living God." M. W.

THE Y.M.C.A.

GLASGOW ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting and conversazione of the Glasgow United Young Men's Christian Association took place on Tuesday week in the St. Andrew's Hall, with a very crowded attendance. The Right Hon. Lord Overtoun took the chair, and said that great meeting ought to kindle the enthusiasm of all in the work and life to which they were called. It was a new call to them to be men, to love their God, their country, and their neighbour. They all appreciated manliness and pluck, and these qualities were much wanted both in secular and Christian life. When Peter was writing to the Church, he pressed on those to whom he wrote to have faith in Christ. Without that foundation no Christian character could be built up. A house had two important parts —the foundation and the superstructure. It was good to make sure of the foundation. But some people having laid the foundation stayed there. Peter had spoken of seven courses of polished stone for God's building. These were virtue, courage, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love. As to the first course they were called to add to their faith, virtue, which really meant courage. The early Christians had that virtue; but there was little in these days. Religion was too much a poor, coughing, timid thing; it held its tongue for fear of giving offence, and crept out when the wind was not in the east. Courage that had a grip in it was needed—that courage whereby when a young fellow who professed Christ was called hard names he did not flinch but stood his ground boldly. In a great Scotch song were the words, "Wha would be a coward knave?" Should not that spirit breathe in sacred song? Love to Christ would make them fearless to danger.

Mr. W. M. Oatts said the total membership at June 30 was 9568. There are 237 meetings for the study of the Bible and for Christian fellowship. Evangelical services are held at six different points in the city, and work carried on every Sabbath in eight large lodging-houses. A missionary society meets every Wednesday night, and last year six of the members left for the foreign field. The Sabbath-school in the Southern Section Rooms has fifty teachers and 400 scholars. There are five reading-rooms, attended by over 1000 young men daily, and libraries in the Christian Institute. Sectional rooms and many of the branches have furnished thousands of readers with good literature. Young men coming from the country have been welcomed and guided, and members leaving Glasgow have been introduced to Associations in other parts of the country and of the world.

Rev. Dr. Stalker said the feature of the report was the visibility which the Association had attained, or was about to attain. On the south side there was about to rise a splendid suite of buildings; something of the same kind was being attempted in Govan; and in Bothwell-street they were soon to have one of the finest buildings by which Glasgow would be distinguished. They were now within measureable distance of a vast restriction of public-houses. But when the publicans were restricted, the question was what was to take their place? Undoubtedly, the public-house, being an agency for selling drink, was a great centre of social intercourse. If it were abolished, there must be something to take its place. Many things and many kinds of buildings and institutions, where human beings could meet socially, would be needed. It was a good thing that their building was early in the field. He did not think the Association would fall under the woe when all men spoke well of them. No institution came under a sharper criticism. They should have their ears open to that criticism—they might learn from it. Sometimes the criticism meant that the Association should give up its very soul and essence and become wholly different from what it was—that is, that instead of an evangelistic and spiritual agency, it should become a literary, social, and athletic agency. Well, they could not consent to the essence and soul of the Association being lost. They would never consent to it being anything different from an evangelistic and spiritual agency. But at the same time they should seek to do all they could to adapt the Association to the needs of those outside. While they cultivated the spiritual, they should not forget the intellectual and physical.

Archdeacon Sinclair expressed his delight to be present as a kind of ambassador from headquarters in London to bear their greetings and their hearty congratulations on this the anniversary of the Association. Having an interest in young men, the Archdeacon had visited many associations, and having considered the work of the Glasgow Young Men's Association he must say he was filled with a sense of admiration, and he did not think they had anything to show in any part of the kingdom that could be compared with it.

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. W. H. Aldis, of Basingstoke, has been appointed general secretary at Bournemouth.

The half-yearly meeting of the Manchester district will be held in the large building of the Waterfoot Association on Saturday, Nov. 30.

A new Association has been formed at Redditch, Colonel Milward, M.P., has accepted the presidency, and Mr. W. H. Silk the hon. secretaryship.

The Honiton Association opened on Friday new premises. Dr. Hingston, Sir J. H. Kennaway, Rev. J. H. Copleston and others took part.

Islington and Highbury Y.M.C.A., 198, Upper-street, N., annual meeting of Missionary Union, Tuesday, Nov. 19, 8.30 p.m.; address by Rev. Alfred Bax.

The Liverpool Y.M.C.A. committee, after collecting some £2,500 to pay off a deficit some years ago, has just raised nearly £5,000 towards an endowment fund.

Mr. Frank Anderson, of Exeter College, Oxford, has been appointed Y.M.C.A. secretary to work amongst the students of the colleges in the Bombay Presidency.

The opening of the winter session of the promising young Association at Stowmarket was made the occasion of a tea and public meeting. A large number assembled, and a most successful meeting was held, presided over by Mr. J. V. Webb.

Aylesbury Association reported at its annual meeting an increase of fifty-four members in the year. Lieut.-Col. Horwood, the president, occupied the chair, and the vicar, the Wesleyan minister, and others took part in the proceedings.

At the meeting of the National Council at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, it was unanimously decided to accept the invitation of the Derby Association to hold in Derby the British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s for 1896, which will take place in June.

On Wednesday evening a public meeting was held in the Corn Exchange, Lincoln, in connection with the twenty-sixth anniversary of the Lincoln Association. The annual report stated that at the last anniversary an increase in the membership was reported of from 150 to 362. During the past year 154 new members had joined, making a total membership of 516.

The annual meeting of the Hastings Y.M.C.A. was held on Wednesday evening, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Seagram. Mr. W. Hind Smith attended on behalf of the National Council, and the secretary, Mr. J. G. Green, presented a very satisfactory report. Successful drawing-room and members' meetings were held in connection with the Ramsgate Association the following day.

The Newcastle (N.S.W.) Association seems to be all alive, judging by the report of "a month's work" sent us. The Gospel mission is being much blessed, so also the temperance meeting and efforts among seamen. Attention is being given to relief and distress—for owing to the recent crisis many are out of work. Moreover, extension work is going on, and new branches are being formed in the district.

The members of the Belfast Y.M.C.A. Bible-class have presented Mr. D. A. Black with a solid silver salver and illuminated address, in recognition of his having completed his tenth year as teacher of the class. This is the largest Bible-class for men in Ireland. The new buildings for the Association are progressing rapidly. There is every expectation of the buildings, which are to cost £16,000, being opened free of debt.

The first meeting of the Scottish National Council for the year was held at Stirling on October 10. There was a large attendance of the members of Council. Lord Kinnaird was re-elected hon. president; Mr. John Stevenson, Townhill, was elected an hon. vice-president Mr. R. Henderson Smith is to be in the Dumfries district in November, and Mr. William Burnside is evangelising and visiting associations in the Glasgow district.

The annual public meeting of the Morpeth Y.M.C.A., held in the Town Hall last week, was presided over by Mr. G. B. Bainbridge, Espley Hall, president, and a valuable address was given by Rev. Rd. Leitch, M.A., Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England. The rector of Morpeth (Rev. H. J. Bulkeley), the mayor (Mr. J. R. Hood), and others took part, and a very satisfactory report was given by Mr. W. S. Wilkinson, the acting president.

The Bristol Association has just held its annual meeting, which, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. J. Storrs Fry, was presided over by Mr. S. D. Wills. The report stated that there had been an increase on the year of forty-two members, the total membership now standing at over 700; also that a legacy of £717 had been received under the will of the late Mr. Richard Ash. Addresses were delivered by Rev. E. P. Neep, M.A., and Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P.

The Kingston and Surbiton District Young Men's Christian Association has inaugurated its autumn and winter session with a series of social and other gatherings, all of which have been successful and well attended. For some time past steady work has been going on in the Association, and it is gratifying to note that the membership has increased considerably. The freehold of Warwick Lodge has been secured, and the premises have undergone thorough restoration and renovation, the comfort of the young men having been studied in every possible way.

The annual meeting of the Derby Y.M.C.A. was held on Tuesday evening in the Victoria Hall. There was a good attendance, an exceptionally large number of young men being present. The proceedings were most enthusiastic throughout. Excellent addresses were delivered by Lord Kinnaird, Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., Mr. H. H. Bemrose, M.P. (president), and others. Mr. Francis Ley, J.P., one of the principal supporters of the Derby County Football Club, and president of the National Baseball League, took the opportunity of speaking very vigorously on the gambling question, and appealed to the Y.M.C.A. to do its best to make and keep athletics pure from the degrading vice.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Miss Barter is to conduct a Mission to Women from Nov. 4 to 11 in connection with the Hatcham branch, 62, Lewisham High-road.

About 200 members and friends of the Finsbury Institute gathered at a "Social" given by Mrs. Frederick Smith, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

The report of the Y.W.C.A. Home, 36, Rutland-square, Dublin, is bright with hope as to the result of the work amongst the 260 young women who have stayed in the house, and the large numbers who have attended the various meetings.

Mission services are to be conducted at the Central Institute, 316, Regent-street, on Wednesday evenings during November by Lieut.-Col. Oldham, Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow, and Dr. Harry Guinness. Much blessing was received by the members through the recent "Quiet Days," Miss Williams will be glad of fresh helpers at the Missionary Working Party on Friday evenings.

New premises, to be known as Latimer House, 106 and 108, Welford-road, have been opened in Leicester. On October 31 a reception was given by the Mayoress (Mrs. Geo. Green). There was a large attendance, and the visitors expressed great satisfaction at the bright and cheerful aspect of the rooms, the whole of the house being thrown open for the occasion. The institute rooms are open every evening, and there is accommodation for fourteen or sixteen boarders.

Miss Ardill, referee of the S.W. district, recently convened a meeting of her secretaries at the house of Miss Minchin. After prayer by Mrs. Cave, difficulties were discussed, followed by a half-hour's Bible study. Miss Ardill pressed home the message that if we want more of the presence of God in our work we must be prepared for more of the presence of God in ourselves. Prayer by Mrs. Sydenham Dixon closed the meeting. The tea hour followed, and all felt that the gathering had been most helpful.

The Sydney Y.M.C.A. organ says:—"The inter-colonial conference of the Young Women's Christian Association, just held in Sydney, is a distinct advance movement of that admirable institution. As Miss Reynolds, the energetic world's secretary, said, while there is no definite link betweenthe Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. they have a general similarity of purpose and intention, and there is a readiness to render mutual assistance. We were therefore gratified to hear about Miss Reynolds's visit, and to hear the hopeful tone she adopted with regard to the operations of her Association. We congratulate the Sydney branch on its successful career, especially in the face of much discouragement and many disadvantages.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—At the monthly meeting on Friday last reference was made by Mr. J. T. Isaac to the fact that the founding of the Rest was due, under God, to the unflagging zeal of the late Mr. R. Radcliffe. This work, which was specially dear to the heart of Mr. Radcliffe, is at present labouring under a deficit of some £60, although the amount required to sustain it is by no means heavy.

WORK IN SPITALFIELDS.—Mr. J. Sharpless sends a brief statement of his work from house to house, carrying the Gospel to dark and ignorant souls, and ministering to the Lord's hidden ones, who are to be found in the strangest and most out-of-the-way corners. Here and there he finds aged widows, infirm saints, and not a few respectable working people, suffering by reason of sickness or lack of employment. Many former helpers have passed away, and great difficulty is felt in getting others to fill their places in supporting this quiet work. Full particulars may be had of Mr. James Sharpless, 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Colchester.—A mission has lately been held here by Mr. Gerald Coultas, and God has owned the testimony of the evangelist in bringing souls to a knowledge of Himself.

Burlington Chapel, Ipswich.—Six days of special services have been conducted by Rev. C. B. Sawdey. It has been a very successful mission, growing in numbers and filled with much power.

Ireland.—Mr. J. J. Browne, missionary to public-houses, has returned from Ireland, where he held successful meetings in Greenore, Carlingford, Newtownhamilton, Newry, and Warrenpoint. Besides the Gospel services, he spoke on behalf of the London City Mission.

Hackney Wick.—A successful mission is being carried on in the Tyndale Mission Hall, Brookfield-road, Hackney Wick, E., by Mr. J. Wooldridge. The streets are being missioned, and souls are being saved. The Gospel is being carried to the poorest of the poor. Prayer is asked during these services.

Mr. Ernest Bailey has concluded a fortnight's mission in connection with the Evangelisation Society in the mission hall, adjoining St. Catherine's Church, Nechells, Birmingham. The meetings resulted in much blessing. Several persons, especially men, were spoken to at the close of the after-meetings, all of whom received definite blessing.

Ballymena.—A mission has recently been held in this northern Irish town by Mr. W. R. Lane. For some days a spirit of reserve on the part of the people was manifested. The workers betook themselves to earnest prayer, and the answer was seen in a breakdown during the latter part of the mission, when numbers yielded to the Spirit's power and made confession of Christ.

Folkestone-road Hall, Walthamstow.—Mr. J. S. Harrison has concluded a month's labour in this place, and we believe God has richly blessed the testimony borne. The addresses to Chrlstians have been stimulating and helpful, and the Gospel has been accompanied with much power, a number having been led to Christ. We ask continued prayer for blessing on our brother's work.

Vale Mission Hall, Guernsey.—Mr. B. H. Angel has concluded a three weeks' mission in this hall, with blessed results. The meetings have been largely attended. The whole neighbourhood seems to have been moved. Many of the Lord's people have testified to the great blessing they have received through the mission, and many of the unsaved have been brought to know Christ.

PETER M. VAUDIN.

Conference Hall, Stratford.—Mr. Chas. Inglis preached here during all the Sundays of October, and every evening during the first full week. It was most gratifying to see the large number of people who seemed in real earnest about their soul's salvation. About eighty passed through the inquiry room, many of them very hopeful cases. The preaching indeed was with demonstration and power. On Sundays the Hall, seating 1900, was crowded, and the solos sung by Miss Inglis were much appreciated.

Leigh, Kent.—Mr. Monro Collings concluded on Friday a seven days' mission here. The way had been well paved by earnest and continued prayer on the part of the Church, and the intense words of caution and exhortation have already begun to bear fruit. Mr. Collings is holding a special mission for men only in connection with the Y.M.C.A., Aldershot, for which much prayer is desired. Many are feeling the need of getting hold of the young men in this important centre, and already there are signs of success.

Kemnay, Aberdeenshire.—Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Govan have concluded a twelve days' series of meetings here. The speaking and singing of the Gospel have been indeed "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." The attendance grew, in spite of severe weather. The meetings, held in the Public Hall, were characterised by most earnest, practical, and impressive Gospel preaching. A considerable number of young people made a hopeful profession of having been led to accept the Saviour, and we look for further results.

Gipsy Smith's mission at Swansea came to a close on Sunday, Oct. 20; the Memorial Chapel, Walton-road, being full to overflowing. Hundreds being turned away, lingered about the doors hoping for admission. Prayer has indeed been answered, there has been showers of blessing, and many are praising God. The inquiry room was filled night after night with anxious inquirers, both old and young, and many were sent rejoicing on their way. The evangelist goes to Scotland next week for a mission, and after Christmas to America. Prayer is asked for him that God will continue to bless this converted gipsy in winning souls for the kingdom of our Lord.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. George Fuller, who for many years laboured among the poor of Poplar, has now joined his relatives at Melbourne. He writes of spiritual service to which he has been led in some of the poorer churches in the colony, and he has also helped in work among the Chinese and Scandinavians. His health is greatly improved.

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler.—We are glad to hear that our good friend, although advancing in years, is still full of earnest activity. On Saturday week he was addressing medical students in Philadelphia, and the previous night he was speaking at a Y.M.C.A. convention. He is reported as "Never better in health, and never busier or happier."

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Henry E. Scott, of the Blantyre Mission, Domasi, who have been home on furlough since February, sailed for Africa in the Hawarden Castle on November 1. The absence of Mr. M'Gown from the station in bad health, and the short-handedness of the Blantyre Mission staff, consequent upon recent bereavements, have moved Dr. Scott to cut short his furlough.

OBITUARY.

MR. J. H. HAMMON.

We hear with regret of the death of this earnest young man, who had for a number of years been associated with the Christian press, and was pretty widely known in connection with our contemporary Word and Work. For some time he did good work in the East-end, but weak health has of late hindered his activity. All who knew him personally esteemed him for his Christian character and faithfulness.

REV. HUGH GOLDIE, OLD CALABAR.

The United Presbyterian Church have lost their senior missionary in active service by the death of Rev. Hugh Goldie, of Old Calabar, West Africa. He had reached the venerable age of fourscore, and has now died in the field, after having spent forty-eight years of missionary service in Calabar. He had prepared a grammar and a dictionary of the Efik language, and translated the New Testament into it, besides having built up a flourishing native church in Creek Town, which was his station.

REV. T. G. P. HOUGH.

In the calling home of this faithful labourer, who had been vicar of Ham, Surrey, for forty-eight years, the villagers and inhabitants of Ham Common have sustained no ordinary loss. It is not given to every parish to have in their midst, for close upon half a century, such a minister of Christ as was Mr. Hough. He was an "Evangelical clergyman" of the highest and best type, a bold and eloquent expounder of Holy Writ—carrying out in his daily life what he taught on Sabbath from the pulpit. From first to last he has adorned the doctrine of a crucified Saviour, besides taking a lively interest in all which concerned the temporal prosperity of his parish. His emphatic testimony when first stricken with a mortal and dreaded malady, was this, "My whole trust is in God's faithfulness." In that hope he still lived and has died, being fully sustained and kept in peace till consciousness failed. J. R.

MR. ROBERT NELSON, MALVERN.

Many will learn with regret that Mr. Robert Nelson, of Waveridge Lawn, North Malvern, entered into rest on October 30, aged ninety-seven. Our aged friend was connected with the Open Brethren, and until quite recently took an active interest in Bible study and Gospel work. He was the author of several books on Scripture and its teaching, and occasionally contributed to the columns of The Christian. Mr. Nelson was a man of God; and has, we are sure, left a very fragrant remembrance behind him in Malvern, where he had lived for a great many years.

A friend writes to us:—"The remains of Mr. Nelson were interred on Saturday last. The funeral was very simple. The hymn 'When languor and disease invade,' was sung, partly at the house, and partly at the cemetery gates. Other hymns were also sung, and appropriate portions of Scripture read. Mr. Anderson, of Birmingham, an aged acquaintance of Mr. Nelson, made a few remarks at the grave, at which the hymn was sung beginning 'Salvation to our God.' The arrangements were made by Mr. Nelson himself before his departure; instructing the brother who carried them out, he said. 'We will sing the hymn, and then we will proceed to the cemetery.' Several clergymen and ministers were present."

MR. CHARLES POLLARD lately offered to the temperance society, Kettering, the sum of £40 per annum for three years towards securing a town missionary. Mr. and Mrs. John Metcalfe have been engaged for the work.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The last Lord's Day in November is to be widely observed as Temperance Sunday.

The Lichfield branch of the C.E.T.S. has been holding special services during the past week.

The banquet to Lord Rosebery at Scarborough was conducted on "strictly temperance lines," no alcoholic liquors being provided.

A united all-day Conference has been held at Newcastle for the more vigorous furtherance of temperance work in Northumberland and Durham.

The South Essex Band of Hope Union has held a series of conferences at Plaistow, Ilford, and Barking; interesting papers being read, followed by stirring addresses.

The East and Mid Surrey Temperance Mission has started a series of Pleasant Sunday Evenings in the Hanover Assembly Rooms, Kennington Park. The object is to provide a counter attraction to the public-house.

The Manchester Women's Christian-Temperance Association and Police-court Mission held a day of prayer on October 23, in connection with the social evils of the drink traffic. The meetings commenced at 10 a.m., and were continued throughout the day with intervals, until 9 p.m. Several earnest addresses were given by ministers of churches and chapels, and also by other friends, and all present felt that the Spirit of God was truly with them to bless them.

The Railway Temperance Union held its annual meeting at the Brunswick House Institute, on Thursday, 24th ult.; Mr. Robert Sawyer, the president, in the chair. Speeches were delivered by Colonel Williams, Mr. Jones, Mr. F. Eardley Wilmot, and others. The audience was most striking, and included many men whose countenances indicated intense earnestness. A conference was held during the afternoon, when the best methods of developing the work of the Union were discussed.

During last week a number of meetings were held under the auspices of the Women's Total Abstinence Union. On Monday afternoon, October 27, a good gathering of women assembled at Wanstead, to hear an address from Mrs. Hawkes. On Wednesday, October 30, a large gathering of teachers convened by the Battersea Women's T. A. Society, took place in the Town Hall, Lavender-hill, Rev. J. R. Diggle, presided, and earnest addresses were delivered by Viscount Morpeth and Mrs. Hawkes. At Forest Hill, a crowded drawing-room meeting was held on Friday afternoon, at Mrs. Stanley's, Mayow road. A week's temperance meetings in and around Romsey, arranged by the local W T A. Society, and addressed by Mrs. Eynon, have been held with encouraging results.

The annual meeting of the Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission was held last week at the Temperance Institute, Birmingham. The hon. sec. read the report, which showed that seventeen missions had been conducted, at which a total of 1271 pledges had been taken. At the thirty-four women's meetings the average attendance was fifty-four per meeting, or 1836 per week, and 227 had signed the pledge. Other special efforts resulted in 285 pledges being registered. In the police-court department, Mr. Gaule had induced 617 to sign. Each of the five superintendents of the women's work gave reports upon special cases, and showing the blessings that had attended their labours; and the police-court missionary detailed cases that had come before his notice in the lock-up.

THE LONDON POLICE COURT MISSION.

On Thursday afternoon a well-attended meeting was held at the Mansion House in support of the London Police Court Mission. The chair was taken by Bishop Barry, who indicated briefly the claims of the mission to public support. In the first place, the mission was of the greatest assistance to the magistrates, who by handing over suitable cases to the missionaries were enabled to temper justice with mercy. That, of course, applied not to the habitual drunkard, but to the many who were only just entering on the abyss that led to habitual drunkenness. Again, the mission, by rescuing one individual from drunkenness, rendered a dual benefit to society, for it restored a respectable member and took away a dangerous member of society. From the religious point of view, moreover, the society claimed support, for it preached the practical power of Christianity in word and deed. The secretary then read the report, which explained the extent of the work during the year, and earnestly appealed for more personal help as well as financial assistance. Mr. A. F. Govett, treasurer, drew attention to the fact that many police-courts were as yet without a missionary, and appealed for the money to extend the work of the mission. The missionary from the Westminster Police-court explained the work of the mission in the courts.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Children's Treasury of Pictures and Stories is an established favourite. There are in its pages many excellent readings for little people. (1s. Nelson.)

The Christian Pictorial. Vol. V. (Alexander & Shepheard.) The half-yearly volume of this well-known illustrated weekly must interest many by its varied contents and pictorial peeps at current events.

Our Own Gazette. Vol. XII. Edited by Mrs. S. J. Menzies. (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co.) This handsomely-bound volume contains much to interest and aid young women all over the land, together with notes on Y.W.C.A. matters. The editor contrives admirably to combine the readable and interesting with the healthful and evangelistic.

Good Words, edited by Dr. Donald Macleod, is a monthly of many attractions. The annual volume contains serial stories by W. Clark Russell and S. R. Crockett ("The Men of the Moss-Hags"), very readable papers—biographical, historical, and social. There are many sketches of travel, also religious meditations. The latter include studies in the life of St. John by Dr. Stalker. The illustrations are numerous, and of a high order. (7s. 6d. Isbister.)

The Sunday Magazine for 1895 (Isbister & Co.) contains Christabel R. Coleridge's story, "The Tender Mercies of the Good," and several shorter tales. Among the Biblical papers is a series by the Bishop of Ripon, on the Sermon on the Mount, entitled "The Great Charter of Christ." There are several "Talks with Notable Persons," and very readable papers on "Women in the Mission Field," by Rev. A. R. Buckland. The illustrations are excellent.

The Religious Tract Society continues to cater excellently for the boys in its Boy's Own Paper, the annual volume of which (price 8s.) will be eagerly welcomed by many. Handsomely bound, admirably illustrated and full of readable and engrossing tales, by writers who know how to interest boys, it forms a splendid provision for the long dark winter evenings. The Girl's Own Annual. (8s. Same publishers.) This attractive volume, containing the year's numbers of The Girl's Own Paper, will fill a useful niche in the boudoir library, or what corresponds to that in humble homes. Every department of an intelligent girl's life is ably catered for.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Three pretty narrative books that come from the Wesleyan S.S. Union, Ludgate-circus, will bring delight to the junior juniors. The Autobiography of Chow and Joan's Puppy, by Liliputian (6d.), are two charming dog stories. A Knotty Point and The Old Plate's Story, by W. J. Forster (8d. each), provide much instruction and entertainment combined.

Three useful shilling books, suited for somewhat older juniors, are published by the same house. Donald's Ambition, by Alice Briggs, graphically recounts the adventures of a Highland lad; but we refuse to certify the correctness of the Scotch spelling. The Ruby Necklet, by Beth Richardson, tells of temptation to gratify a taste for ornament, and how it was overcome. Chrissie's Faults, by Jeanie Ferry, is a tragic temperance tale.

A High School Girl, by Mrs. Henry Clarke, M.A. (1s. 6d.) A story, as the title indicates, of Newnham or Girton girls, whose life is not all the higher studies, but has strains in it of the sweet simplicity of home. Martha's Trial, by Mabel Quiller Couch, and Three Golden Words, by Mr. J. A. Smith (6d. each), are pleasing gift books for scholars. (Sunday School Union.)

Brought to Jesus (2s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.), by Mrs. G. E. Morton, is a splendidly-coloured picture-book for youthful readers, illustrating the teachings of our Lord, and scenes in his life and ministry. As the little ones look at the pictures and read the finely-printed letterpress the elder folks will pray that the hearts of the young readers may be drawn out in loving trust and obedience.

FOR SENIOR CHILDREN.

Gerard Mastyn. By C. H. Burrage. (2s. S. W. Partridge & Co.) A new edition of a book which has met with success. It is a pleasing temperance story such as the boys will be glad to read.

"Probable Sons." (1s. R.T.S.) The word "probable" is the baby synonym for "prodigal," and the story tells of wanderers restored by childish influence. The "zephyr cloth" binding is a novelty.

Brownie; or, the Lady Superior, by Eliza F. Pollard (S. W. Partridge & Co.), is one of the "Home Library," a most remarkably cheap series of illustrated tales for the young. Three hundred and twenty well-written, lively pages, with capital full-page illustrations, in most attractive boards, for two shillings!

Banners and Battlefields, by Edith Greeves (1s. 6d. Wesleyan S.S. Union), sets forth various phases of life's moral conflicts, in terms that can be appreciated by young soldiers in the army of the noble and true. Willie's Secret, by J. W. Keyworth (3s. Same publishers), is a capital tale for boys, showing how true courage and fidelity to the right does not lose its reward.

Two excellent posies of stories for boys and girls, by Mrs. M. S. Haycraft, are published by C. H. Kelly, 2, Castle-street, E.C. They are, With a Gladsome Mind, and other stories, and Pink Roses, and other stories (2s. each). While Mrs. Haycraft pays due attention to her art as a story-teller, she does not lose sight of the lessons to be gathered through that interesting medium.

Two books to be commended to intelligent young readers come from the Sunday School Union. The Story of Princess Alice, by Eliza F. Pollard (1s.), is one that must ever be dear to loyal Britons, who, at the same time, value true worth manifested in any station in life. Stories of North Pole Adventure, by F. Mundell (1s. 6d.), will fascinate as well as instruct courageous boys, and implant in them those seeds of enterprise which have made Britain's sons so famous in history.

Fur and Fur Garments, by Richard Davey (3s. 6d. Roxburghe Press, 3, Victoria-street, Westminster), is a learned dissertation, with illustrations on the history of this fashionable article of attire.

The Millennium, or World to Come, by the late John Wilson. A new edition has been issued of this work, which lucidly expounds Scripture teaching regarding the Millennium, and its relations to preceding and succeeding dispensations. (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Nisbet.)

Under the unwieldy title of In a Mule Litter to the Tomb of Confucius, Rev. A. Marshall, F.R.G.S., describes in pleasant and animated style the incidents and observations of a tour in North China. En route he visits mission stations, sees many temples, and notes with observant eye certain strange and curious customs and characteristics of the people. (Nisbet & Co. 2s. 6d.)

In the Footprints of St. Paul. By Rev. E. J. Hardy. (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) As the title indicates, we have here a series of glimpses of places mentioned in connection with the travels of the Apostle of the Gentiles. These are pleasantly penned and well illustrated. Most of the papers have appeared in The Quiver, but they will be none the less welcomed by Sunday-school and Bible-class teachers.

In the new issue of The Friends' Quarterly Examiner (West, Newman & Co. 1s. 6d.) the "Expansion of Quakerism" is discussed by Charles Sharp, who maintains that "In expansion lies hope for Quakerism." Papers are also devoted to Count Campello, Our Lighthouses, George Fox at Launceston, African Slavery, The Opium Question, and other subjects of more or less general interest.

The Universal Portrait Gallery (Cassell & Co.) This is a collection of the portraits of celebrities of both sexes and of many lands, accompanied by brief biographical sketches. It is pleasant to gaze upon the faces of persons whose names have long been familiar, and an additional value is imparted by the facsimiles of autographs which help to make up a very interesting and handsome volume.

Glimpses through Life's Windows: Selections from the writings of J. R. Miller, D.D. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) Many valuable works have issued from the pen of the well-known American pastor, and the compiler of this chaste little volume seems to have taken the cream of them all, and presented it in a form that should tempt many readers. The portrait of Dr. Miller, which appears as a frontispiece, will be treasured by many.

Manitoulin. By H. N. B. (3s. Simpkin & Co.) This strange-looking word is the name of an island to the north of Lake Huron, where the Church of England Mission is carried on among Ojibway Indians and lumbermen resident there. The writer gives a most interesting account of the people, and of the vicissitudes of Church work among them. The book has a smack of Sacramentarianism about it that is not at all to our taste.

Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable (Cassell & Co. 7d. per part). The new serial issue of this admirable handbook of current colloquialisms is now completed. It is brought thoroughly up to date, and forms, for the journalist especially, a mine of wealth in the selection of literary coin. The "bibliographic appendix," containing an exhaustive list of modern authors, dead and alive, with their principal works, is exceedingly valuable for reference.

The Biblical Illustrator. 1 Corinthians, Vol. II. (7s. 6d. Nisbet.) Beginning with chapter x., this volume completes the Epistle, with a treatment as full and helpful as its excellent predecessor. The outlines are of a very useful order, being gathered from a wide range of literature. Mr. Exell's industry is marvellous, and if the work proceeds at the rate now attained, the New Testament will soon be entirely covered. There is surely no other body of homiletic matter at once so rich in suggestion and serviceable in form. The "Illustrator" is a great help to hard-worked preachers and teachers.

Three Great African Chiefs. By Rev. Edwin Lloyd. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) The three chiefs sketched in this very readable volume are, of course, our now well-known visitors from Bechwana, Khama, Sebelé, and Bathoeng. The author writes from personal knowledge gained by a residence in the country as a L.M.S. missionary. His account of the different tribes and of the three chiefs, with their predecessors, is highly instructive, and ought to awaken much interest in those African peoples now emerging from heathenism and beginning to appreciate the worth of the Christian faith. Especially is it to be desired that the appeal of our dusky visitors as to the prohibition of the liquor traffic among their people may be heard and practically heeded by our Government.

Jesus is Coming This substantial pamphlet, by W.E.B., of Chicago, has been issued in German, French, Chinese, Japanese, and Tamil, and is now in its sixty-sixth thousand. It emphasizes with much clearness a truth which is too generally overlooked by Christian teachers. From Genesis to Revelation the Scriptures are shown to tell of the peace and prosperity which will be brought to earth by the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ. As we read, we cannot but join in the prayer, "Come, Lord Jesus." Without endorsing in every detail the author's interpretation of passages on which conflicting views are held, we are pleased to give a hearty commendation to his work, which will prove of real service to such as are beginning the study of prophecy. (6d. Partridge & Co.)

The Missionary Review of the World for November (1s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) opens with another "Miracle of Missions" article by Dr. A. T. Pierson, narrating the story of John Williams and his successors in the South Seas. Rev. W. G. Puddefoot follows with some helpful thoughts on the "Importance of Frontier Missions" in the United States; South America and its Missions are treated of in three articles, accompanied by a map and diagrams. "Brazil Through an Evangelist's Eye," by Rev. D. G. Armstrong; "Progress in Brazil," by Rev. W. A. Waddell; treated more generally in the Field of Survey, by D. L. Pierson. There are other articles of great interest. The department of general intelligence, with its pithy and pointed paragraphs, will be especially valued by those who seek pertinent thoughts and apt illustrations for missionary papers and addresses.

THE BIBLE; THE SAVIOUR; THE WAY OF SALVATION. By an Octogenarian. (3d. R. W. Hunter, 19, George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh.) This pamphlet is an earnest "defence of the old theology," and is commended in a preface by several well-known Edinburgh ministers.

WHAT IS AN ISRAELITE OF THE NEW COVENANT? is a pamphlet containing a dialogue between two Jews, translated by the late Rev. J. A. Adler, from the original Hebrew of Herr Joseph Rabinowitch, of Kischeneff. (2d. C. E. Greenwood, Elim, Copers Cope-road, Beckenham, Kent.)

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND ALMANACK is a useful publication, compiled by Mr. Henry Miller, of the Church Association. It gives valuable information regarding the Ritualistic conspiracy, as well as tables which will prove of service to members of the Church of England. (1d. Shaw.)

Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston are issuing a series of FLAG MAPS (8d.), so contrived as to occupy and amuse the children, while storing their minds with geographical knowledge. So far as we have tried it, we think a larger map would serve better, the present size being too small to fix the positions of towns, rivers, etc., accurately.

The Church Association (14, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.) has issued a new edition of Mr. Walter Walsh's pamphlet, THE SECRET WORK OF THE JESUITS IN THE PROTESTANT CHURCH OF ENGLAND (3½d. post free). The pages outline the inner working of disloyal organisations, and furnish a list of the "priests-associate of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament."

PARIS CITY MISSION.

President - LORD KINNAIRD. Treasurer - F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Ten devout, earnest Missionaries—eight French and two English—NOW CARRY A KNOWLEDGE OF THE GLORIOUS GOSPEL TO THE POOR OF PARIS, teaching from room to room, and in public places, defending and circulating the Holy Scriptures. The spiritually dead are aroused, and the superstitious enlightened by the old and pure religion of the Lord Jesus.

Its model is the London City Mission, in constitution and action.
Twelve Pastors, Ministers, and Laymen form its Committee, including Pastor Theodore Monod, and the Rev. H. E. Noyes, D.D.
The small and over-pressed French Churches contribute half support for their agents, and their cry to British Christians is "come over and help us."
The home-call of three generous friends leaves us anxiously poor, and the Committee urgently ask for present help. Information will be given, and contributions gladly received by the Hon. Secretary, J. M. WEYLLAND, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, London, N.W.

PREVENTIVE FOR INDIGESTION.

Highest Award at Food and Cookery Exhibition, London, May, 1895.

"Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery."

The public are cautioned against accepting from Bakers spurious imitations of "HOVIS," which, having met with such unprecedented success, is being copied in many instances as closely as can be done without risk.

The "British Medical Journal," 11th Jan., 1890:—

"Hovis Flour and Bread.—We have examined samples of Hovis Flour and of Hovis Bread and Biscuits. Hovis Flour is the invention of Mr. Richard Smith, who has patented his process of preparation. We have made baking tests with the Hovis Flour, and have obtained very satisfactory results with it. The flour, bread, and biscuits are free from irritating particles and from adulterants; they are of very pleasant flavour and taste, and the bread is of good texture."

If any difficulty be experienced in obtaining "HOVIS," or if what is supplied as "HOVIS" is not satisfactory, please write, sending sample (the cost of which will be defrayed) to

S. FITTON & SON, Millers, MACCLESFIELD.

Bakers recommending another bread in place of "Hovis" do so for their own profit. BEWARE!

REVIVAL IN A GIRLS' SCHOOL, AFRICA.—Mrs. Caroline L. Goodenough, missionary of the American Board, Johannesburg, writing to the New York Independent, says:—"Blessed news has reached us of a work of grace in progress at the kraal girls' school at Umzumbe, Natal. The story of what God's Spirit has wrought, reads like the wonderful miracle of nature that we see unfolded before our eyes every spring—it has been so quiet, so silent, so natural. It began in much prayer that the pupils might be truly awakened to a sense of sin. Then it became apparent that God was dealing individually with these souls. Often one or two would seek their teachers privately for prayer and counsel. Several passed through a time of distress on account of sin and at length found peace at the Cross. There were some very bright conversions, and the tender feeling in the school deepened until the one engrossing subject so filled all hearts that it seemed best to waive the usual routine of study and turn the evening lesson-hour into a prayer-meeting.

CONSUMPTION.

THE GRAND OLD MEDICINE OF NEARLY 70 YEARS has maintained its position as the first medicine in all Chest Complaints.

As a preventative of mischief, it should be taken at the first appearance of Cough or Cold. As a safeguard against Influenza, and in subsequent weakness of the lungs, it has been used with wonderful results.

Ministers and Public Speakers have declared it to be invaluable for hoarseness, and "Splendid for the Voice."

So, also, in Asthma, it has been the means of wonderful relief.

But the renown of this celebrated medicine in all these cases has been eclipsed by its success in cases of

PHTHISIS PULMONALIS, or CONSUMPTION,
Aptly called the "Scourge of England."

Interviews with patients, new and old, by Mr. Congreve's Commissioner, are published every alternate week in most of the weekly journals.

Mr. Congreve's book on Consumption and Chest Diseases may be had post free for one shilling, from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Notes and Comments.

We remind our readers that the L.M.S. week of thanksgiving and self-denial begins on Sabbath next. It is to be hoped that the special effort will meet with encouraging results.

Before our next issue is published, the meetings to be addressed by Rev. Andrew Murray at Regent-square Church and Exeter Hall will have begun. Particulars will be found in another part of the paper. May a rich blessing attend the closing utterances of our friend before he returns to South Africa.

Arrangements are being made for public meetings to be held in the morning, afternoon, and evening of Friday, December 13, in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, to consider the present position of the opium question, and to determine the further action to be taken by the friends of national righteousness, in order to bring our opium trade to an end.

We have received very many letters from friends in reply to our recent "Notes" about the help which our readers might render in extending the circulation and usefulness of The Christian. One correspondent writes :—

I am only a working woman, but have for years read and appreciated your paper, and feel perhaps it would be some little work for God if I could do something in this way.

This friend goes on to say that she will take in an extra copy to send to one of the Editors in India referred to in last week's issue.

A Sunday-school secretary writes :—

I have only recently become a subscriber, and much appreciate the usefulness of The Christian, and the help it must be in many a home.

He undertakes to supply each teacher in his school with a specimen copy.

The president of the "Good Literature Committee" of a Christian Endeavour Society writes for a parcel of specimen copies. We shall be glad to send to other "Good Literature Committees" wherever the officers are willing personally to attend to the distribution.

An evangelist writes that wherever he goes he recommends The Christian to ministers and Christian workers. There are many evangelists in this land and abroad who could serve us and the cause of the Gospel by doing likewise.

For the encouragement of those who are sending copies to poor and lonely in the Lord's vineyard at home and abroad, we give the following, which are only specimens of letters that constantly reach us. A missionary in Turkey writes :—

I receive both enjoyment and profit from its perusal. Please accept my thanks.

A Baptist minister in Kent, who is "quite unable to buy books," expresses his thanks "for The Christian so long sent and so much valued." In addition to these testimonies from those receiving The Christian gratuitously, a Free Church minister writes from Scotland :—

The Christian we cannot do without, in our manse and in the homes of our people.

These cordial expressions we greatly value, and we insert them here as we desire that those who co-operate with us in widening our circle of influence should know that their efforts are appreciated, and bring stimulus into the homes and lives of earnest workers.

The situation thickens in the near East. Whether from unwillingness or inability to act, the Sultan seems to have lost control of his forces. We hear of an attack on a C.M.S. station at Nablous, the ancient Sichem, Palestine; of the American missionaries at Bitlis being in grave personal peril; of the imprisonment and torture at Marsovan of Rev. J. Knadjian, lately a student at Hackney College. It is satisfactory to know that the great European powers continue of one accord in pressing on the Sultan the imperative necessity for reforms; but if force has to be resorted to, no one can possibly foresee the end.

The triumph of the Tammany ring in the New York City elections last week is a severe disappointment, after the recent revulsion of popular feeling in favour of a pure and clean-handed administration. Surely the party of reform must either have relaxed their efforts, or disagreed among themselves. The advocates of righteousness might learn a lesson from their opponents as to the value of cohesion and of unceasing vigilance.

Bishop Ryle is persuaded that there is not much private reading of the Bible in these days; and for evidence he points to the enormous ignorance of true religion which everywhere prevails, ignorance of the meaning of conversion, faith, grace, justification, and sanctification; these terms have no more meaning to many so-called Christians than Arabic words. He also points to the utter indifference with which they regard false doctrine. "They talk with perfect coolness of others having become Roman Catholics, or Socinians, or Mormonites, or Deists, or Agnostics, as if it did not signify much, and was all the same thing in the long run." Yes; that is part of the spurious charity of our times. Truth and error are of equal value, only phases of thought. Were the Bible a better known book, and better understood, this would be impossible.

It is Dr. Horton, a thorough believer in the Higher Criticism, who says that "to do the work of personally saving the lost demands a spirit that in its central faith is settled and beyond the reach of doubt." Again he says that "a Salvation Army can never advance theology, but it can save souls." There is something healthy about this confession. It ought to lead to great searchings of heart in some quarters. The fact is, Dr. Horton speaks like a man with a double consciousness; on one side he is for change, for unsettlement; on the other he feels the effect of it on Christian work. But his way of reconciling himself to the good that is done by means of unenlightened persons is noteworthy. "They live upon their Bible, and draw out of its treasures things new and old; they teach the redemptive love of God in crude enough forms; they often shock delicate sensibilities; but God uses them, and we must be thankful."

Shall we ever get the noble Christian ideal of our national calling substituted for that base idol of brass, and clay, and iron, called "Imperial Destiny"? While some think that we have been set in the midst of the earth to subdue it, to make its peoples subservient, to gather and to use its riches, thus tempting ourselves into pride and oppression, others believe that Christ has bid this nation arise and win the world for Him; and that if we fail to go and preach the Gospel to every creature, then our glory will have departed, and our vineyard will be given to others. The heart swells at the thought of England being the missionary to the nations; would that it were so. But before we get the nation we shall have to get the churches. And how far are even they from entering into the Master's purpose? But it must be pressed home upon them.

Two meetings were held in the City of London last week which presented some marked contrasts. One was to do honour to a rich man who has made a large fortune in South Africa, and who had stepped in to prevent a financial panic; the other to receive a Christian minister who has returned from a visit to some South African churches. The millionaire spoke only of diamonds and gold. The export of diamonds from Kimberley has risen from a million and a half sterling in 1876 to five millions this year, while the production of gold had risen from 1,470,000 ounces in 1893 to 2,290,000 ounces in 1895. He predicted that within the next five years the goldfields of the Transvaal would yield an amount equal to twenty-four millions sterling. These figures look large, but we have richer mines at home in the industry of our people. If we could get the drink money we should every year be at least a hundred million pounds richer. Sobriety would do more for us than gold and diamonds.

But what had the minister, Rev. D. Burford Hooke, to say? That Johannesburg, which, ten years ago, was a place with twenty native huts, is now a town of 100,000 persons, 60,000 Europeans and 40,000 natives. The cemetery already has 4,000 occupied graves, mostly the graves of young men. The Presbyterian minister of Kimberley during the time of the great boom, in three years buried two hundred young Englishmen, killed by fast life there. Sunday in Johannesburg is the day of pleasure. The effect of the life of the Europeans upon the natives is terrible. A gold-miner who had a great deal to do with mines, said: "The natives come to us as niggers; they leave us as devils." Others confirmed that description. No wonder that Khama dreads the coming of the white man as worse than a plague.

But Mr. Burford Hooke, who made these statements, showed another side again when he told of the devotion of ministers of the Gospel and of missionaries, when he said that all the deacons in the out-of-the-way churches can preach, and that on Saturday nights they go out in bands with younger members of the churches to conduct services. These are gathering a richer harvest than enormous dividends.

If such a paper as The Financial Post has been brought to declare that something must be done to check the scourge of strong drink, it shows that the economical argument is beginning at last to tell. Some day financiers and public economists will denounce the drink trade as a piracy on every honest trade. Meanwhile the religious people, represented in an important conference held under the presidency of the Bishop of London, are determined that something shall be done. The election has brought no respite to brewer or publican.

Did Dr. Parker speak too strongly the other day, when, in pleading for Christians to give a tenth of their income to God, he said that "if all the Christians of the world would do this, instead of whining over our financial difficulties, and making Christ a mendicant in his own Church, we should have gold upon gold, millions thick, and be waiting for the appeals to which we may respond in the name and the power of the grace of Christ"? Was it too strong to ask for a tenth of the substance? Surely it erred in weakness and timidity of demand. Some give a great deal more, but the majority must give a great deal less. Was it too strong to say that we "whine over our financial difficulties"? No, a great deal of pleading has to be done, and the needs, which ought to be patent enough to every eye, have to be set forth in moving language. Was it too strong to say that Christ is made a mendicant in his own Church? No, Christians are begged to do their duty and to enter on their privileges. They should be commanded.

The visit of Khama and his friends has, so far as we can see, been crowned with substantial success. He remains under the protectorate of the Queen, and will have power to keep the drink traffic out of his dominions. True, it will require all his vigilance and firmness, but so long as he has the authority, we may be sure of his exercising it. There seems to be a reasonable hope now that his people will be able to develop a stable Christian kingdom in the very heart of South Africa, a place which badly needs some moral soundness. Khama's visit has done more than serve his dominion; it has given a new interest to Christian missions, and has done much to impress on all classes at home the necessity of moral trading with native tribes, if we are to trade constantly and successfully. The gain to us appears to be even greater than that to him and his people.

There was one sentence in Lord Salisbury's speech at the Mansion House on Saturday which deserves to be remembered. He said that the Sultan was not "exempt any more than any other potentate from the law that injustice will bring the highest to ruin." It is clear that the Turkish Ruler has been personally responsible for the unspeakable anarchy of the past months in his dominions, and his throne is being shaken to its foundations as a consequence. Meanwhile it is reassuring to know that the great powers are for once determined to act together for the high purposes of maintaining European peace, and of defending the defenceless Christians of Armenia. In this action they should be upheld by the earnest prayers of all who love righteousness and peace. And we should pray also that the significant hope thrown out by the Premier in the concluding sentence of his speech may be speedily fulfilled, that in this sense of international co-operation we may in due time "put a stop to that condition of armed peace which presses now on the industry of the world." The welfare of the nations is absolutely dependent on the realisation of this great end of international disarmament.

There has been an interesting and important discussion in some of the American papers on the Church Prayer Meeting, and how it can be improved. Both the leaders of prayer meetings and those in the pews have freely contributed their views. It is clear that no single cause can account for the decadence of this important institution either in America or in this country. The length of most prayers, their frequent coldness and lack of freshness, their "intellectuality," their formality and repetitions—all these are rather symptoms than causes. Deep down lies an unquestionable lack of spirituality in the lives of many of our church members, and this is probably the most widespread and vital reason for their lack of interest in the privilege of prayer. If we were more devotional in our private lives, and lived in the atmosphere of the Spirit's presence, we should be more easily forced and quickened when we come together for fellowship. Words become cold, and praise turns dumb, in the uncongenial air of worldliness in which many nominal Christians spend their lives; and in their lack of fervour lies a deepening influence on others who fail to free themselves from the blight. We must live in the friendship of God personally if our meetings are to be full of the power of the Holy Ghost.

We spoke some time ago of the reason there was for believing that there is a regular system of destroying infants prevalent in London. It is now attracting the attention of an evening paper. Lady Henry Somerset may well say, in view of the revelations which have been made, "to think of, nay to know, that little babies are moaning in misery, dying by inches, is emphatically a subject in which women must feel deeply interested." Lady Henry expresses the opinion of all who have given the subject any thought, when she says that no child ought to be handed over with a lump sum to the charge of another person, that any case of adoption should be registered; and all lying-in houses ought to be registered. Men may cry out against any uncovering of this terrible sin in our midst, but their cries should only make the determination to go on to the end all the stronger.

THE NEGLECTED CONTINENT.—The November issue of The Church at Home and Abroad, a mission organ of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, contains valuable articles on South America. The total population is estimated at about thirty-seven millions, of whom five millions are Pagan Indians. The predominant religion is Roman Catholicism, and only about four millions of the entire population are within the range of present missionary effort. For 400 years the Romish Church has had almost undisputed sway, with the result that the people are in great darkness, the slaves of superstition, and idolatrous in their worship. The Presbyterian Church has stations in Brazil, Chile, and Colombia. The total number of missionaries of all societies working on the South American continent is about 400. The Protestant adherents number about 100,000, of whom 70,000 are in the Guianas, principally in Dutch Guiana, where Moravian efforts have been attended with remarkable success.

TIBET.

Dear Sir,—As I find so many friends look to your columns for news of the Tibetan Mission Band—formerly of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission—perhaps you will kindly insert the following:—

Mr. Cecil Polhill Turner, their leader, is now in England, and about to proceed to Scotland to hold meetings in Glasgow, Stirling, Kirkcaldy, Lochgelly, Nairn, Peterhead, Fraserburgh, Aberdeen, and possibly other places. Any friend of the Mission wishing to communicate with him can do so by addressing him to care of the China Inland Mission, Newington Green, London.

The men under his direction having made fairly rapid progress with the language, are now able to hold Tibetan services both indoors and out; and with a view to making the most use of their powers, as well as to give them further experience, Mr. Polhill-Turner, ere he left India, divided them into three parties, that they might take up work amongst the Tibetans on the border in three different places. One of these parties, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie and child, and Mr. Stumbles, remain at the headquarters in Kalimpong; another party, consisting of Messrs. Johansen, Amundsen, and Moyes, are stationed at Ghoom, where they are carrying on work amongst Tibetans, commenced by the Scandinavian Alliance Mission; and the third party, consisting of Messrs. Soutter, Neave, and Sorrensen are to itinerate in northern Sikkim, preaching the Gospel amongst the encampments of Tibetans to be found there.

Thus all are in readiness should the door into Tibet at any moment be opened.

We shall be glad of the fellowship of all friends interested in Tibet both in prayer and giving. Whilst earnest and intelligent prayer is valued more than all else, there is also the ministry of giving for the temporal support of these workers, and for this a sum of £700 a year is required. There are no home expenses.

Mr. Polhill-Turner proposes to return to India with his wife and children about the end of the year. Early in 1896 it is hoped that Mr. Hudson Taylor will (on his way home to England) visit them in Kalimpong to confer with Mr. Polhill-Turner as to the future movements of the party, in case the door from India should still remain closed.

I am glad to say that all the party, including the Mackenzies' little girl, are in good health.—Yours faithfully,

William Sharp,
Hon. Sec. and Treasurer of Tibetan Mission Band.

BOURNEMOUTH.

A week of prayer was held at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, commencing on Monday, November 4. The attendance throughout the week was good, notwithstanding severe weather.

Mr. E. C. Newbery, who has been working in Italy and on the Riviera, was present at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Sunday, November 10, and gave two addresses. In the morning his message was an appeal to the people to trust God as being able to do beyond what they ask or think. His illustrations were exceedingly humorous, and yet very effective. In showing how much we suffer through our doubts, he told of a man who had to cross a frozen river in Canada, and who tremblingly put his foot on the ice, fearing lest it should not bear his weight. So fearful was he that he crossed the ice on his hands and knees, and got to the other side greatly exhausted with his effort. He looked back, and saw two horses crossing the river, and drawing a sleigh, loaded with pig-iron, while the driver sat whistling in front. How much he had suffered through his unreasonable doubts! The illustration is not likely to be forgotten. In the evening the message was on Decision; and several persons confessed Christ at the close of the service.

THE CHRISTMAS CARD AND SCRAP-BOOK MISSION aims at supplying Christian workers with cards, etc., suitable for distribution. Last year 6364 cards, wall-texts, and booklets, as well as scrap-books for hospitals, were forwarded to various missions. Many who have, lying by them, old cards of last season, almanacks, and so on, might render great service by sending them to Miss E. W. De Salis, Oatlands, Burghill-road, Sydenham.

Controversial Methods.

It is greatly to be deplored that religious teachers should sometimes stoop to the use of methods calculated to excite the ridicule of the ungodly, and to injure the cause they have at heart. That our brother, Mr. Reader Harris, has done this, most of our readers will think. The London Echo, in commenting upon his offer of £100 (to be paid to the fund of the Keswick Mission) to any "Keswick speaker" who forwards Scriptural proof of "the necessity of sin in the Spirit-filled believer," describes it as "backing his opinion" against that of the Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe; and suggests that it may be necessary to extend the sporting columns of our daily press in order that opposing religious teachers may be able to "back" their different opinions. We are grieved to find that one who claims a specially advanced position on holiness should expose himself to such a rebuke.

Mr. Harris's method seems to us not only an error of judgment, but (what is far worse) a violation of the spirit of brotherly love. Mr. Webb-Peploe is well known in the best Christian circles, and few will question that his reputation for integrity of character and for devout and intelligent acquaintance with the Scripture, is quite equal to that of Mr. Harris. The offer of Mr. Harris suggests that Mr. Webb-Peploe is either ignorant of Scripture on the subject of sin in the believer, or that he distorts the meaning of Scripture texts by not reading them in the light of the context, or that he wilfully misrepresents what he knows to be Scriptural teaching. Any one of these three suggestions can only be made against a Christian brother when eagerness to win a controversial victory has crowded out that love which thinketh no evil, and the exhibition of which is recognised by all as necessary to practical holiness.

We must add that this lack of brotherly love, accompanied by an overweening confidence in his own opinions, appears just as conspicuously in the article on "Sin and Its Remedy," which appears in the November issue of Tongues of Fire, immediately following the paragraph in which Mr. Harris makes his remarkable offer. For example, he describes Mr. Webb-Peploe as "the repressive Prebendary"; his teaching on the subject of holiness as that of "a preliminary seminary" in contrast with "God's Holy Ghost college" which he claims to represent; and the statements of those who differ from him are called a "blasphemous slander." Previously the position of those against whom he contends is quite misrepresented, and then they are charged with "blasphemous falsehood." We deplore the use of such phrases. They have the sound of contemptuous sneering, of impertinence, of wilful misrepresentation of a brother's meaning. Christian courtesy, to say the least, should have prevented Mr. Harris from either speaking or writing such words. Zeal for what he regards as the truth does not justify or even excuse them. A departure from the spirit of love is a more serious breach of holiness than the holding of a different opinion from that of Mr. Harris on the interpretation of Scripture.

Into the matter of the dispute we do not now enter, further than to say that the article on "Sin and its Remedy" boldly and confidently advances interpretations of Scripture from which, after devout and prayerful study, we entirely dissent. For example, we cannot accept its alteration of Ecc. vii. 20, and 2 Chron. vi. 36, where it substitutes the words "may not sin" for the words "sinneth not." And we venture to suggest that neither Mr. Harris himself, nor Dr. Steele, whose words he quotes, would have proposed such a correction if there had not been a theory to defend. The conflict between the flesh and the Spirit which Paul describes in Gal. v. 17, is said to cease when men are filled with the Spirit. We again dissent, not from the Scripture, but from Mr. Harris's interpretation. When James says (iii. 2), "For in many things we offend all," he does not include himself, says Mr. Harris. We are quite convinced that he does. The attempt to apply 1 John i. 8, not to the persons mentioned in verse 7, but to men in general and to the Gnostics in particular, is to make confusion of the whole passage.

For these differences of judgment we are quite prepared to be relegated to what Mr. Harris calls the "elementary school of the prophets," while he claims for himself a position, and perhaps a prominent one, in "God's Holy Ghost College." We again remind Mr. Harris that our quarrel is not with any Scripture statement, but with his interpretations. The fact that he is dogmatic in announcing them does not render them true. He must learn to distinguish between Scripture which is Divine and infallible, and his interpretations which are human and liable to error. And we earnestly appeal to him to show a little more regard for the devout judgment of holy men who differ from him, and to avoid the use of such means as tend to degrade the subject of holiness in the eyes of thinking persons. George Wainwright.

Bournemouth.

There is a further and very solemn consideration which it can scarcely be supposed that our brother and his coadjutors have sufficiently taken into view.

In consistency with the article referred to above, Mr. Harris must be supposed to regard himself as having passed over or passed through the "elementary school," the "preliminary seminary," and to be a Professor in "God's Holy Ghost college." He must suppose himself to have escaped the condition in which the Apostle James says, "In many things we all offend." And (the Apostle John (i. 7, 8) notwithstanding), he must be understood to "say that he has no sin," and that, nevertheless, the words do not apply in his case, "he deceiveth himself, and the truth is not in him."

Then the painful conclusion must follow, that the offer to back his opinions with £100; and the terms which have above been shown to be lacking in argumentative fairness, and Christian courtesy, and brotherly love; and the ad captandum method, the "playing to the gallery" of the whole article —are all sinless, and according to holiness.

And further: As a sinless life is a life in the Spirit, as the only way of escape from walking in the flesh is to walk in the Spirit, and as Mr. Harris's contention must be taken to mean that he lives and walks constantly, undeviatingly, and perfectly, in the Spirit, therefore the proposal to back his own opinion with £100; the want of fairness, of love, and of courtesy; the tone and character and claim of the article—must all be attributed to the Spirit of truth, the Spirit of grace, the Spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound (or wholesome) mind.

This, indeed, is the great fallacy of "perfectionism," that they who "say that they have no sin," are obliged in consistency to defend all they think and say and do as being absolutely sinless and holy, and to attribute all their thoughts, emotions, words, and actions, to the Spirit of Truth and Holiness.

No apostle ever made such a claim. James said, "In many things we all offend." John said, "If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Paul expressly repudiates the claim when he says, "I judge not mine own self. For I know nothing against myself; yet am I not hereby justified; but He that judgeth me is the Lord. Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall everyone have praise of God"—God will appraise all his counsels and all his conduct.

With a very deep sense of responsibility to God and men these protests are made. We have sought to avoid sarcasm, bitterness, and the imputation of motive; we do not question Mr. Harris's sincerity in what he teaches; but recent and ancient church history painfully proves that the self-deceiving claim to sinlessness paves the way for pride, pharisaism, and in some cases to aggravated and abominable sin.

Speaking of Job. iv. 17, 18, Mr. Harris says, "To build upon this passage the teaching that God cannot or will not destroy the works of the devil, is to argue from a false premise and to attempt to prove a blasphemous falsehood."

This is really a flagrant instance of the suggestio falsi. Neither Mr. Webb-Peploe nor any of the "Keswick speakers" doubts that the purpose for which "the Son of God was manifested—to destroy the works of the devil"—is in constant operation, and in due time will be perfectly fulfilled. But they are not guilty of an attempt to prove a blasphemous falsehood, because they believe that the "all" of James iii. 2 includes the Pentecostal League platform, and that if Mr. Reader Harris and his followers say they have no sin they deceive themselves, and the truth [in this matter] is not in them.

We are not partisans of the Keswick platform. We increasingly deplore the use of such terms as "Keswick teaching," because, even if it were the truth always and everywhere, unmodified either by the excess or the limitation of human infirmity (which it does not claim for itself, and no one will claim for it), even that would confer no title to label the eternal truth of God with a local and transitory name. "Keswick teaching," if the name survives this generation, will, perhaps modified for the worse, become a "Keswick sect" in the next. Nevertheless, a league which is a very sectarian sect already, must not, in the name of sinless holiness and of the Holy Ghost, attribute to "Keswick" what it does not hold or teach, and then charge it with "blasphemous falsehood."

Does Mr. Reader Harris himself really think that there is the difference between him and Prebendary Webb-Peploe of a sinless man on the one hand and a teacher of blasphemous falsehood on the other? If not, will he not confess his transgression and the sinfulness out of which it sprang, and seek grace for the future to walk softly. "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

God in his mercy send us the union for which his Son our Saviour prayed; but there is nothing more disuniting than the self-righteous spirit, which says, "Stand by thyself; I am holier than thou." M.

The Sin of David's Life.

(2 Samuel xi-xii.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

O Father, I have sinned! I have done
The thing I thought I never more should do!
My days were set before me, light all through;
But I have made them dark—alas, too true!—
And drawn dense clouds between me and my Sun.
Septimus Sutton.

The Chronicler omits all reference to this terrible blot on David's life. The older record sets down each item without extenuation or excuse. The gain for all penitents would so much outweigh the loss to the credit of the man after God's own heart. These chapters have been trodden by myriads who, having well-nigh lost themselves in the same dark labyrinth of sin, have discovered the glimmer of light by which the soul may pass back into the day. "Thy sins, which are many, are forgiven thee; go in peace."

I. The circumstances that led to David's sin.

The warm, poetic temperament of the king specially exposed him to a temptation of this sort; but the self-restrained habit of his life would have prevailed, had there not been some slackening of moral watchfulness, some failure to trim the lamp.

For seventeen years he had enjoyed an unbroken spell of prosperity, in every war successful, on every great occasion increasing the adulation of his subjects. This was fraught with peril. The rigours of the Alps are less to be dreaded than the heat of the enervating plains of the Campagna.

In direct violation of the law of Moses—which forbade the multiplication of wives on the part of Hebrew kings, "lest their hearts should turn away"—we are distinctly told that, when established at Jerusalem, David took unto him more concubines and wives; sowing to himself the inevitable harvest of heart-burning, jealousy, quarrelling, and crime, of which the harem must always be the prolific source; besides fostering in David himself a habit of sensual indulgence, which predisposed him to the evil solicitation of that evening hour.

He had also yielded to a fit of indolence, unlike the martial spirit of the Lion of Judah, allowing Joab and his brave soldiers to do the fighting around the walls of Rabbah, while he tarried still at Jerusalem. It was a mood to which Uriah administered a stinging rebuke when he refused to go to his own house whilst his comrades and the ark were encamped on the open field.

One sultry afternoon the king had risen from his afternoon siesta, and was lounging on his palace roof. In that hour of enervated ease, to adopt Nathan's phrase, a traveller came to him, a truant thought, to satisfy whose hunger he descended into the home of a poor man, and took his one ewe lamb, although his own folds were filled with flocks. We will not extenuate his sin by dwelling on Bathsheba's willing complicity, or on her punctilious ceremonial purification, while she despised her plighted married troth to her absent husband. The Scripture record lays the burden of the sin on the king alone, before whose absolute power Bathsheba may have felt herself obliged to yield.

One brief spell of passionate indulgence, and then!—his character blasted irretrievably; his peace vanished; the foundation of his kingdom imperilled; the Lord displeased; and great occasion given to his enemies to blaspheme! Let us beware of our light, unguarded hours. Moments of leisure are more to be dreaded than those of strenuous toil. Middle life—for David was above fifty years of age—has no immunity from temptations and perils which beset the young. One false step taken in the declension of spiritual vigour may ruin a reputation built up by years of religious exercise.

A message came one day to David from his companion in sin that the results could not be hidden. It made his blood run with hot fever. The law of Moses punished adultery with the death of each of the guilty pair. Instant steps must be taken to veil the sin! Uriah must come home! He came, but his coming did not help the matter. He refused to go to his home, though on his first night the king sent him thither a mess of meat straight from his table, and on the second made him drunk. The chivalrous soul of the soldier shrank even from the greeting of his wife whilst the great war was still in process.

There was no alternative but that he should die; for dead men tell no tales. If a child was to be born, Uriah's lips, at least, should not be able to disown it. He bore to Joab, all unwitting, the letter which was his own death-warrant. Joab must have laughed to himself when he got it. "This master of mine can sing psalms with the best; but when he wants a piece of dirty work done, he must come to me. He wants to rid himself of Uriah—I wonder why? Well, I'll help him to it. At any-rate, he will not be able to say another word to me about Abner. I shall be able to do almost as I will. He will be in my power henceforth." Uriah was set in the forefront of the hottest battle, and left to die; the significant item of his death being inserted in the bulletin sent to the king from the camp. It was supposed by David that only he and Joab knew of this thing; probably Bathsheba did not guess the costly method by which her character was being protected. She lamented for her dead husband, as was the wont of a Hebrew matron, congratulating herself meanwhile on the fortunate coincidence; and within seven days was taken into David's house. A great relief this! The child would be born under the covert of lawful wedlock! There was one fatal flaw, however, in the whole arrangement, "The thing that David had done displeased the Lord." David and the world were to hear more of it. But oh, the bitter sorrow, that he who had spoken of walking in his house with a perfect heart, with all his faculty for Divine fellowship, with all the splendid record of his life behind him, should have fallen thus! The psalmist, the king, the man, the lover of God, all trampled in the mire by one dark, wild, passionate outburst. Ah me! My God, grant that I may finish my course without such a rent, such a blot! Oh to wear the white flower of a blameless life to the end!

II. Delayed repentance.

The better the man, the dearer the price he pays for a short season of sinful pleasure. For twelve whole months the royal sinner wrapt his sin in his bosom, pursed his lips, and refused to confess. But in Psalm xxxii. he tells us how he felt. His bones waxed old through his roaring all the day long. He was parched with fever heat, as when in Israel for three years there was neither dew nor rain in answer to Elijah's prayer, and every green thing withered in the awful drought of summer. Day and night God's hand lay heavily upon him.

When he took Rabbah, he treated the people with ferocious cruelty, as if weary of his own remorse, and expending on others the hardness which he ought to have dealt out to himself. We often excuse ourselves from avenging our own sin, by our harsh behaviour and uncharitable judgments towards others. The same spirit, which always characterises the sullen, uneasy conscience, flamed out in his sentence on the rich man who had taken the poor man's lamb. The Levitical law in such a case only adjudged four-fold restoration (Exod. xxii. 1). The king pronounced sentence of death.

Nathan's advent on the scene must have been a positive relief. One day whilst statesmen and soldiers were crowding the outer corridor of the cedar palace, the prophet, by right of his holy office, made his way through them and sought a private audience. He told what seemed to be a real and pathetic story of high-handed wrong; and David's anger was greatly kindled against the man who had perpetrated it. Then, as a flash of lightning on a dark night suddenly reveals to the traveller the precipice, on the void of which he is about to place his foot, the brief awful stunning sentence, "Thou art the man!" revealed the king to himself in the mirror of his own judgment, and brought him to his knees. Nathan reminded him of the past, and dwelt specially on the unstinted goodness of God. It was a sunny background, the sombre hues of which made recent events look the darker. "Thou hast despised his word; thou hast slain Uriah; thou hast taken his wife. The child shall die; thy wives shall be treated as thou hast dealt with his; out of thine own house evil shall arise against thee." "I have sinned against the Lord," was David's only answer—a confession followed by a flood of hot tears — and instantly his scorched heart found relief. Oh, blessed showers that visit parched souls and parched lands!

When Nathan had gone, he beat out that brief confession into Psalm li., dedicated to the chief musician, that all the world might use it, setting it to music if they would. The one sin and the many transgressions; the evil done against God, as though even Uriah might not be named in the same breath; the confession of inbred evil; the ache of the broken bones; the consciousness of the unclean heart; the loss of joy; the fear of forfeiting the Holy Spirit; the broken and contrite heart—thus the surcharged waters of the inner lake broke forth turbid and dark. Ah, those cries for the multitude of God's tender mercies! nothing less could erase the dark legend from the book of remembrance, or rub out the stains from his robe, or make the leprous flesh sweet and whole. To be clean, because purged with hyssop; to be whiter than snow, because washed; to sing aloud once more, because delivered from blood-guiltiness; to be infilled with a steadfast, a willing, and a holy spirit; to be able to point transgressors to the Father's heart—these were the petitions which that weak, sin-weary heart laid upon the altar of God, sweeter than burnt-offering or fragrant incense.

But long before this pathetic prayer was uttered, immediately on his acknowledgment of sin, without the interposition of a moment's interval between his confession and the assurance, Nathan had said, "The Lord hath put away thy sin."

I acknowledged my sin unto Thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid.
I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord,
And Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin.

Penitent soul! Dare to believe in the instantaneous forgiveness of sins. Thou hast only to utter the confession, to find it interrupted with the outbreak of the Father's love. As soon as the words of penitence leave thy lips, they are met by the hurrying assurances of a love which, whilst it hates sin, has never ceased to yearn over the prodigal.

Sin is dark, dangerous, damnable; but it cannot staunch the love of God; it cannot change the love that is not of yesterday, but dates from eternity itself. The only thing that can really hurt the soul is to keep its confession pent within itself. If only with stuttering, broken utterance it dares to cry, "Be merciful to me, the sinner, for the sake of the blood that was shed," it instantly becomes white as snow on Alpine peaks; pure as the waters of mid-ocean, which the stain of the great city cannot soil; transparent as the blue ether which is the curtain of the tabernacle of the Most High.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—In connection with the Irish memorial to the late Rev. R. W. and Mrs. Stewart and their fellow martyrs at Ku Cheng, the workers and friends of the Irish Church Missions have contributed £100 to be applied to the publication of the New Testament in the colloquial dialect in Roman characters, for the Prefecture of Kiong Ning, the estimated cost of which is thus happily provided, so that the earnest wish of Mr. Stewart can now be realised.

PARABLE OF THE TARES.—3.

By Mr. G. H. PEMBER, M.A.*

EARLY CHURCH LIFE.

There must, however, have been in the system of these men some points which to the superficial observer might seem to resemble Jewish institutions, and we must endeavour to discover what these could be. Now the most obvious characteristics of Judaism were the following.

In the first place, the Jewish economy was a hierarchy consisting of a high priest, priests, levites, and laity.

Hence it was, secondly one visible body, as represented by the single seven-branched lampstand.

Thirdly, it carried on a continual offering of sacrifices.

Fourthly, it displayed a prominent ritual.

And, fifthly, its general teaching was, "This do, and thou shalt live."

Now you will notice that all these particulars are diametrically opposed to the law and teachings of the Church, and the fact should urge upon us the necessity of rightly dividing the Word of God, and of clearly distinguishing the dispensations, if we would be free from error.

For the Church is no hierarchy upon earth; all her members are priests, and her only High Priest is in heaven, there appearing in the presence of God for her. She has, indeed, officers; but, so far as Divine appointment goes, these are only elders and deacons, which, from the very nature of their office, can deal with but one congregation.

Again, the Church can never appear as one united body upon earth; that was plainly shown when the Lord revealed the sanctuary of the present dispensation to the beloved disciple: for, lo, the single seven-branched lampstand had given place to seven distinct lampstands, connected only by the common presence of the great High Priest.

Nor does she offer any expiatory sacrifices. Christ, having appeared once at the end of the ages, has put away the sin of those that believe in Him by the sacrifice of Himself, and by one offering has perfected for ever them that are being sanctified. How glorious the thought!

There is no ritual prescribed for the Church, save a public profession of faith in baptism, and a remembrance of the sacrifice once offered for sin in the breaking of bread.

And, lastly, the command to the Church is not, "Do this and live"; but, "Do this, because ye have received life."

By the mention, then, of those who say they are Jews and are not, the Lord indicated the appearance in the midst of the Church of a sacerdotalism which would attempt to defend itself by appeals to the Old Testament. Nor was it long before the plague broke out.

Until the end of the first century, some churches, at least, were Evangelical and truly Apostolic. The Word of God was their only authority, and the burden of their message to men was: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." In these cases, there was no intrusion of the Church into the place of the Saviour, and no preaching of salvation by forms and ordinances.

According to the Didachē, or "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles"—a work written apparently between A.D. 80 and A.D. 100, the ministers of Christ were still divided, as at the beginning, into two classes. The first was itinerant, and consisted of apostles and prophets, who derived their commission directly from the Lord, without any human interference, and demonstrated it by their works and teaching. The second and stationary class included overseers, or elders, and deacons, which were elected by their congregations. This is, of course, in exact accord with the arrangements of the Apostles, since, as you are doubtless aware, the word in the Acts and Epistles which our Authorised Version renders by "bishop," but which literally means "overseer," is merely a synonym for "elder," with which it is sometimes interchanged.

Baptisms, always adult, are ordered to be carried out in a running stream if possible, otherwise in water sufficiently deep for immersion, which might be warmed in case of sickness or cold weather. Baptism by affusion, or pouring on the head, is allowed only in deserts or places where water sufficient for immersion is not to be obtained. There is no hint of such a thing as baptismal regeneration.

The Lord's Supper takes place after an ordinary meal, as at its original institution; and a whole communion service is preserved for us, which does not contain a single allusion to either mystery or sacrifice.

After the thanksgiving for the bread follows this beautiful prayer:—

"As this broken bread was scattered upon the mountains"—that is, as grain—"and, after being gathered together, became one; so let thy Church be gathered together from the ends of the earth into thy Kingdom, for thine is the glory and the power through Jesus Christ for ever."*

You will notice that the idea is the same as that which is expressed in the first Epistle to the Corinthians: "For we, being many, are one bread, one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread."†

Still more important is it to observe the distinction made between the Church and the Kingdom, the former being the training school on earth for the latter in heaven.

And, yet again, we see that these primitive Christians had no idea of the Church as a visibly united body upon earth, but conceived of it as ever scattered here and there to the four winds, until the summons of the Lord should gather its members, the living and the dead alike, into his own presence.

Hence, doubtless, the reason why their eyes found so little to rest upon in this world, but were continually looking for the King from heaven. And how beautifully is this thought expressed in the closing words of their communion service:—

> Let grace appear,
> And let the world disappear!
> Hosanna to the Son of David!
> If any one is holy, let him come;
> If any one is not holy, let him repent.
> The Lord cometh! Amen!

We may add that there is no allusion to any Christian festivals, save the Lord's Day, in this interesting document—not even to Easter. The observing of days had not yet commenced in the Church.

There are clear indications that the Didachē was a book prepared for Jewish converts. Hence we may understand its freedom from Pagan ideas, a characteristic not shared by the Epistle of the Roman Clement, which is instructive as exhibiting some of the ways by which corruption began to creep into the Church. In many points Clement is Scriptural and Evangelical. He speaks strikingly of the blood of Jesus Christ as affording the only means of salvation, but appears to be ignorant of the manner in which it does so; for he mentions only the moral effects of the Lord's death, and has nothing to say of Him as the propitiation for the sins of the world. He is claimed by Romanists as the third Pope, but had no conception of such an office in his own mind. For he describes himself as one of the elders of the Roman Church, and makes it very clear that bishops, in the modern sense of the term, existed as yet neither in Rome nor Corinth.

Nevertheless, it is in his Epistle that we detect the first symptoms of an error which was soon to be widely prevalent, and which owed its origin to a foolish misappropriation of the Jewish Scriptures. For it became the fashion to bring the hierarchy and ritual of the previous dispensation into harmony with Pagan practices, and so to transfer them to the Church. Now of this misappropriation Clement of Rome affords many examples. He argues that the Israelitish high priests, priests, levites, and laity, must find their counterparts in the Christian Church, a theory for which there is no warrant in the New Testament, and which could not fail to result in the establishment of a priestly order.

Moreover, from the fact that special times and a special place were appointed for the offerings and worship of the Law, he urges similar observances upon Christians. But he produces no command of the Master in support of his plea, and altogether ignores the fact that men must now worship the Father in spirit and truth, which are bound by no earthly times or localities.

Finally, his forty-second and forty-third chapters seem to me to suggest the doctrine which has, perhaps, done more harm to the nominal Church than any other, that of Apostolical Succession. And, after describing the appointment of bishops and deacons by the Apostles, he remarks:—"And this they did in no new fashion; for, indeed, it had been written concerning bishops and deacons from very ancient times: for thus saith the Scripture in a certain place, 'I will appoint their bishops in righteousness and their deacons in faith.'" Perhaps you will wish to know from what part of Scripture Clement obtained this quotation. It is a mistranslated and misappropriated version of Isa. i. 26, which in our Bible is rendered, "And I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the beginning."

But, although this Epistle was read in the churches of old, and was frequently fastened together with the New Testament, it contains sufficiently plain indications of human rather than Divine authority. The Corinthians, to whom Clement wrote, had apparently revived their doubts concerning the resurrection, and, by way of reassuring them, he relates, as if it were a fact, the fabulous and absurd story of the Phœnix, and suggests that if God shows forth his power by raising the bird from its ashes every 500 years, we need not fear that He will fail in his promise to raise us up on the great day. The Corinthians must have felt the difference between this teaching and that of Paul. Clement also appeals to the Sybil in proof that the end of the world is near; and we are thus made to perceive, even when listening to this early and comparatively pure writer, that we have passed out of the pale of inspiration and absolute truth.

ACTON.—A new mission hall, known as the Acton Evangelistic Church, has been opened during the past week, as the outcome of mission work carried on for twelve months by Rev. James Oatey. The opening services were largely attended, among the audiences being a good proportion of men. From the outset the work seems to have taken good hold amongst working men and women.

MADRAS PARIAHS.—Mr. W. Raju Naidu writes to a friend:—My work lies among the lower classes, who have little or no conception beyond their bodily wants. These satisfied, they care for nothing else; but I have, by God's grace, slowly but steadily succeeded so far in awaking Christian life among them that I count twenty of these people as followers of Christ. I have also succeeded in arousing a spirit of inquiry which, under the providence of God, must eventually bear fruit. My chief hope, however, rests with the rising generation. We have now seventy boys and girls attending our day-school in one village, and an equal number attending the Sabbath-schools opened in five others. The parents are so miserably poor that they are obliged to utilise the services of their children from a very early age, and when this fact is considered the figures I have given must be encouraging, showing that the parents are willing to sacrifice a good deal to secure the benefits of education. To keep up this zeal I am obliged to offer encouragements, and to this end it is my intention to give the children a treat on Christmas Day. To this end I should be glad of some little help. COLLEGE LIFE.—II.

By CUTHBERT McEVOY, B.A.,

Classical Tutor of Regent's Park, New, and Hackney Colleges.

METHOD.

"You must learn systematically; it is the easiest way, and the only way that takes hold of the memory."—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"Let all things be done decently, and in order."—1 Cor. xiv. 40.

Those whose aim it is to do as much work, and that as well as possible while this life lasts, will do well to give their serious consideration to this simple and invaluable means to their end. The busy man who surprises his neighbours by the enviable facility with which he performs his numerous duties has learnt the secret of method. To acquire this quality is to increase your power, and lighten your care. When method comes in at the door, perplexity flies out of the window.

You are unmethodical. You have no time-table. No notebook for agenda. You rely upon a so-called memory to tell you what to do, and when to do it. You have no fixed hours for work or for recreation, much less any fixed hours for the study of any particular subject. Your general reading is also devoid of system and chaotic: its general tendency you cannot foresee; its results you cannot review. The nature of your recreation is characterised by the same unreasonable fluctuation as your work. To-day you have not taken enough exercise to give the brain its proper rest: to-morrow you will take so much that all your tissues are exhausted. The host of petty duties which accompanies every one of us through life is in your case met with a display of the same irregularity; at one time you perform them with an anxious precision, at another leave them wholly neglected.

The unmethodical habit, if encouraged in one sphere of duties, will invade and possess all others. You will be regarded as a man not to be depended on, unstable in all your ways, consistent only in your inconsistency. In yourself, the habit of unmethod engenders a severe retribution in worry, in a sense of overwork and in paralysis of power. The consciousness that you have not provided particular hours for particular duties is harassing, and will not allow of concentration upon the subject in hand. The performance of one duty is haunted by the consciousness that you might be better employed in performing another. Hence, in all your work, however hard, there is a something wanting. It lacks its true ring. Again, as you feel you need begin work at no fixed hour, it is often indefinitely postponed. A standing debt of work is formed which is either never paid, or if paid, must at some time necessitate an undue protraction of working hours. Hence loss of health, hence complaints of too much work, hence absence from classes, hence failure.

The remedy is simple enough. It costs no money and very little time. A few minutes' occasional thought will put a host of cares to flight and steady all your work, making it, if not an actual delight, yet considerably less burdensome than it was before.

If during your college course you have acquired nothing else but a habit of systematic work, your time has by no means been spent in vain; but it would be almost impossible to acquire the habit without at the same time gathering its fruits. Composure, concentration, thoroughness, these are largely the results of method. All eminent workers in the world's workshop have been methodical. Even Milton, Browning, and Tennyson, had their regular hours of work and recreation. The beautiful saying adapted by Goethe embodies the spirit of method: "Like the star, unhurrying, yet never still." What else is this but the genius of a serene and busy life, moving onwards with quiet persistency; without haste, because each task is foreseen and has its ordained season; without rest, because, for the true man, work is health, and idleness disease?

Hear what is said by a student and a minister, the late Rev. T. G. Rooke, president of Rawdon College: "I would dwell on the immense importance, nay, the absolute necessity of a scheme—a plan of daily and weekly work—framed with a view to the closest possible economy of time and adhered to as stedfastly as the accidents for which one's own foresight and one's own will are fairly without responsibility. . . . First of all, each week-day of mine began at seven punctually, and closed as a rule at eleven. Monday was given to the preparation of the Wednesday evening's lecture and the children's service or inquirers' Bible class on Tuesday evening. Tuesday was given to work not belonging to the pastorate; it might be literary, remunerative or gratuitous; it might be scholastic and tuitional; it might be the writing of lectures for literary and scientific institutions, Young Men's Christian Associations, Sunday-school Unions, and so forth; it might be private study, historical, theological, or linguistic. On Wednesday I began a sermon for Sunday, and sometimes, but very rarely, finished it the same day. Thursday was set apart for official work, not pastoral, of which I had a bewildering abundance, being secretary, treasurer, or president, of seventeen different organisations, e.g., county association, town mission, district, foreign missions, etc.; the united correspondence, reports, and visitation belonging to all which was great, and could not have been got through without careful pre-arrangement and careful fidelity to the arrangements thus made. Friday, like Wednesday, was sacred for pulpit preparation, and it might be needful to take in part of Saturday for this purpose as well; but, if possible, Saturday morning and afternoon were kept for recreation, so that Sunday might be approached with a mind and body refreshed by every healthful and lawful relaxing of the six days' previous strain. I have omitted to say how the evenings of each day were spent after the work at chapel, or at the public meeting or class, was over. The interval was never long, two hours at the most, and this time I gave to friendly intercourse at home or abroad, to reading the newspaper and general literature, and to clearing off arrears of correspondence due for that particular day. I will only add that, but for some such system as I have sketched, and a rigid adherence thereto in spite of far more temptations and obstacles than most of you would guess, I could not have done the work I did, which seemed very great to those outside, but which in review to-day seems little enough, even pitifully so, to me."*

If life work seems in review so small to a busy man of method, how pitifully small will it seem to a man who is the slave of unmethodical habits! Therefore, at once, carefully draw up a time-table and adhere to it. Give play its due place as well as work. Both within their prescribed limits are sacred. By faithfully obeying the laws you have thus laid down for yourself, deeply as you before appreciated the need expressed in Whittier's prayer, you will now appreciate even more profoundly the blessing of its answer:—

Drop thy still dews of quietness,
Till all our strivings cease;
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
The beauty of thy peace.

BARMAIDS AND WAITRESSES.—The tenth anniversary of the Barmaids' and Waitresses' Home and Institute, opened by the late Mr. Samuel Morley, 14, John-street, Bedford-row, was held on Sunday week Miss Morley and Miss C. M. Gough invited the members and boarders to a social tea and praise meeting. Miss Morley, who led the meeting, read Psa. xciii., and gave an address on the Y.W.C.A. text for the day, "Looking unto Jesus." In commemoration of the day, a fund was started for surgical aid for the associates and members, to enable them to obtain when necessary surgical appliances which are often required by them in consequence of the long hours of standing.

GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.

The forty-second anniversary of this Mission was held in the Bethel, Gosport, on Tuesday, November 5, when, in spite of the inclement weather, a goodly number of friends assembled to hear of the Lord's work. The chair was taken by Captain Riley. Letters were received expressive of regret for absence and sympathy with the work from various friends of the work. Capt. Riley in opening spoke especially to Christian workers on four "togethers."

Mrs. Henry Cook gave a general report of the work, which was full of praise to Him who had indeed marvellously helped and provided through the year. It was a great cause for thankfulness to God that the French house at Deauville is again opened, and the work going on.

Miss Gooch told of the summer's work along the coast in the Mission yacht Good News. Emsworth, Shoreham, Newhaven, Folkestone, Ramsgate, Rochester, Lowestoft, Ipswich, Harwich, and Dover, were successively visited, and the Lord's hand was seen all through, giving many seals to his Word and work. The need for such a work is great in many ways. The lightships had been visited in passing, and services held with the lonely men, while they and various ships in the ports were supplied with bags of books.

Mr. Habens, the home missionary, gave an account of the work at the Bethel, lads' reading room, infant day school, the harbour work, and periodical visits to the lightships, all of which was very encouraging.

Mr. Brading, who was formerly a missionary in Algeria, but is now carrying on the work at the Sailors' Rest, Deauville, told of the great need in Normandy for the Gospel, and asked prayer for the work of the Good News, which is now fitted out and well stocked with French Testaments and Gospels for free distribution along the rivers and canals of France.

Rev. W. H. Lovell, Congregational Minister, Gosport, in a few earnest words heartily commended the work to the prayers and sympathy of all. The captain and engineer of the Good News followed with short testimonies to God's favour, and the need of the work. The engineer had been converted on board during the summer.

THE BURDEN-BEARER.

Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee (Ps. lv. 22).

As little child doth gladly place
A weight too much for it to bear
Within the arms of one who pleads
To be entrusted with its care,

So let us too, whate'er the load
Which heart and strength doth sorely try,
Cast now our burden upon God,
And lift to Him our earnest cry.

Like tender Father He will heed,
If only we will tell Him all:
To Him no load can be too great,
To Him no care can be too small.

For He who doth direct the course
Of systems far beyond our ken,
Can never be o'erwhelmed by aught
That seemeth great to finite men.

And yet, because He stoops to clothe
The earth in wondrous beauty fair,
And doth with smallest creature-need
His infinite compassion share,

We, too, may feel that naught we bring
To Him can ever trivial be;
Nor will He count a matter "small"
That toucheth either you or me.

Then be the burden what it may,
Of sin or suffering, want or woe,
Oh, let us cast it all on Him
Who doth its weight already know.

For He true peace can ne'er impart
Till we, like children, find our rest
By pouring forth whate'er disturbs
Into the heart that loves us best.

The Evangelist.

THE JOY OF GOD.

AN EXPOSITION OF LUKE XV.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

This chapter, so familiar to us, might be entitled "The Joy of God." If you look closely at it you will see at once that that is the subject of it all.

See the occasion of it. Publicans and sinners—people leading an evil life; some of them despised and hated, and rightly so—drew near to Christ; while those whose business it was to study and teach the law, drew away from Him, and kept aloof. They so hated the very sight of Him that, finally, they compassed means to bring about his death. These publicans and sinners flocked around Him, but the scribes and pharisees were scandalised. "What kind of man is this? He actually receives despicable persons. He has no sense of propriety; He receives them and eats with them."

Now came the three parables. They all have one purpose, and are strictly parallel to one another; only there is a gradation from the one to the other. First of all He says to them that if a man have a hundred sheep and loses one, he will go after that which is lost, and will leave the other ninety-nine in the wilderness. We must not understand this to mean what we should look upon as a wilderness; sheep could not thrive there; it simply means the open pasture. The shepherd wants to find the one sheep that he misses. He does not miss the others; he has them. Therefore he goes after the lost one until he finds it.

Observe that in this parable the most important thing, or person, is the shepherd, not the sheep. "What man of you?" that is the beginning of it. He will leave the ninety-nine that are safe and go after the one that is lost, till he finds it. When he finds it, what then? Will he drive it before him? No! Or will he lead it after him? Not even that. He finds this sheep, bruised, lame, tired, half dead; he takes it and lays it on his shoulders. He does not find it too heavy. He layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. Where does he carry it? Into the wilderness with the others? No, not at once. He takes it to his own house. "And when he cometh home he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost." "My sheep." It was his even when it was lost. It was his before it was lost. It was lost, of course, but it was his; and it is more than ever his after he finds it. Here then is the point of the parable—"Likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth." Whose joy? It is the joy of God Himself. There is joy in the heart of God, when one sinner who had gone astray is brought back to the fold.

Then comes the second parable, about a woman having ten pieces of silver. Here again notice that all the ten pieces are hers, but she loses one, and she must find it. She lights the candle, sweeps the house, makes a great ado. But she must find it; and, finally, after diligent search she does find it. What then? The same thing over again. She rejoices; and rejoices so greatly that she will not rejoice alone, any more than the shepherd did. It is the woman first, and the coin next. That thought is even more obvious here than in the first parable. The question of the piece of money is quite a secondary one. The whole thing is that the woman has lost it. So she sought for it diligently until she found it. The Son of Man came to seek as well as to save. We do not make enough of that. He will seek diligently till He finds what belongs to Him, and what is lost to Him. Then He rejoices. "Likewise I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God. What is that joy in the presence of the angels of God, if it be not the joy of God Himself, over one sinner that repenteth? We want to know whether such and such a mission, or such and such a conference, is a success. And we generally call it a success if the numbers are large. But if one sinner returns to God that is enough to fill heaven with joy.

Now comes the third and great parable. It is no more a question of a piece of money or of a sheep; but of a man, a son. "A man had two sons." Notice that in the first parable the loss was of one in a hundred; in the second it was of one in ten; now it is one of two. The younger son is not satisfied to live in his father's house as an obedient child. He thinks that now he has got to be a young man he ought to be independent. What shall he do? He knows, it seems, that when he is a certain age, or it may be after his father's death, he is entitled to a sum of money. After all, why should not his father give him that money in advance? It was a strange proposal to make to his father, and to such a father.

What does the father say? He says this: "If you will not live with me as a dutiful and loving son; if you only remain here because you cannot help it; if it is only a question of money with you, I will not have you here against your will. Here is the money." So the father, most reluctantly, yet respectful of the liberty of the son, and unwilling to have a mercenary in the house, gives the son the money that falls to his portion. The son takes a little time to consider, and to make things ready; but very soon he gathers all together and away he goes—far away. He goes to some place where he is unknown, and where his father's name is unknown. Very soon his substance is wasted in riotous living. He lives the life which many a young man would call a large life, and a free life; but it is a very small life, and it is the life of a slave.

After a little while he is ruined—no money, no dignity, no comfort, no health; he has spent all. In verse 13 we read that he "gathered all," and in the very next verse we are told that he had "spent all." When you want to gather all, and to say, "This is mine; everything I can get is mine," by and by you will come to the end of it all.

Then there arose a mighty famine. You say, this is very sad, worse than all that has gone before. Nay; this is the first gleam of light; it is a blessing in disguise. He has to seek for work. He does not seem to have been ready for any very great or intellectual work. He was not very clever or very strong. A man of the country says to him: "You seem to be just about good enough to feed my swine; that is the position for you." His father had never sent him to feed swine; now he accepts the work because he is obliged to. The swine had plenty to eat, but he could not eat their food, and nobody gives him anything.

By and by he says to himself: "How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger." He "came to himself." That is the first thing for any sinner to do, before he goes to God. He considered his life; he saw how guilty it had been; how shameful; how absurd altogether. If he had only half as much to eat as any hired servant in his father's house he would not be in danger of perishing as he is now. What should he do? "I will arise and go to my father." That was a right resolve, but it must have cost him something. He would go to his father and make a clean breast of it. "I will say: Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee; and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants." Is this conversion? Not quite; but it is conviction. He sees what he ought to do, and determines to do it. Now comes the decisive step: "He arose and came to his father."

(To be concluded.)

ON THE BLACKDOWN HILLS.

The new report of the Blackdown Hills Mission is as interesting and stimulating as its many predecessors. Mr. W. J. W. Brealey, the director, rejoices that God has, by signal answers to prayer, provided for the needs of the work. He writes: "During the year the work has been carried on as heretofore in all the various places and districts around us. No mission room or services have been closed for lack of funds or workers. The four Sunday-schools give much cause for cheer as precious seed-plots for Divine truth; nor do we lack proof upon proof that God's blessing is on that work. The day-school and Sunday-school at Bishopswood are increasing in numbers and usefulness." The Infant School at Clayhidon has also been continued, the pecuniary responsibility having been undertaken by Messrs. Müller and Wright, of Bristol. We make some extracts from the Narrative:—

"I CANNOT GRASP IT."

So said a dying young man whom I had called to visit. "I am a great sinner," was his confession, "but I cannot grasp that verse," pointing to his Bible, "John iii. 16. I cannot grasp it." "Nor can I," I replied. "I cannot grasp it in its fulness but I can believe it. "I wish I could," he said. "Suppose I were to tell you something, would you believe me?" I asked. "Certainly."

"God says in his Word, 'If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which He hath testified of his Son.' (1 John v. 9.) 'For God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life.' (John iii. 16.) For, 'God is not a man, that He should lie; neither the Son of man, that He should repent (change his mind): hath He said, and shall He not do it? or hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?'" (Num. xxiii. 19.) The Lord applied the Word; he grasped it by faith, rejoiced in the knowledge of sin forgiven, and passed away in a week, triumphantly entering into the presence of the Lord.

"THIRTY YEARS A HYPOCRITE."

I had been asked to visit a professional gentleman practising in the town. He told me he was a professing Christian, and was certainly very conversant with Scripture; but I had been told of his ungodly life, and therefore sought help of God to use the sword of the Spirit effectually on his conscience. The question of sin and sins was dwelt with, and he said, "You speak faithfully, sir, and kindly, and I look upon you as a true friend. I told you when you first came that I was a Christian, but I must tell you now that I have been a hypocrite for thirty years. I have been living a life of sin, though under the garb of profession. I cannot tell you all, but God knows. Do you think He will pardon a sinner like me if I come to Him? I've been a bad man, indeed I have!"

I assured him of a certain welcome and a Divine pardon, if he would but truly come to God, confess his sin, and yield himself entirely to Him. We both knelt down. I pleaded for him, and he in his turn burst out with agonising prayer, summing up with these words:—"Oh, Lord God, Thou alone knowest all I am, and all I have been. I don't wish to hide anything from Thee. Take me as I am—a leper—in all my sin and vileness. I give myself to Thee; do as Thou wilt with me. Spirit, soul, and body, I give myself to Thee; to be Thine now, henceforth, and for evermore." On bidding me good-night, for it was half-past ten at night, he said, "I may rest assured, on the warrant of God's Word, that He has received and pardoned me, may I not? For He has said, 'Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out,' and God knows I have come to-night as I never did before."

I assured him his trust, if truly placed on the faithfulness of God, would never be found dishonoured, and we parted. Was not this "a brand plucked out of the burning"? "Oh, magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt His name together."

Particulars are given of tent work, care of the sick and poor, also general evangelistic endeavour. Copies of this twenty-fifth "Brief Narrative" may be had from the office of The Christian (price 4d.).

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 17.

"They declared their pedigrees."—Num. i. 18.

It was not enough to be a true-born Israelite, a man must be able to show his descent. The genealogical tables were kept with the greatest care, and there was a holy pride in being able to vindicate the claim of having the blood of the patriarchs in the veins.

It is a blessed thing to be sure that we have passed from death unto life, and are the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. True, our eternal destiny does not hinge on it. Many will doubtless be saved at last, who have spent their lives between hope and fear. But it is very needful for our comfort and growth in grace to be able to declare our pedigree, and to know that we have passed from death unto life.

The Gospel of John was written that we might believe, the Epistle that we might know. But many seek this knowledge in the wrong way, and are exposed to endless questionings. They try to discover the date, place, or experience in the past, when they were incorporated into the Divine family, and because they cannot point to these they imagine that they are still outside. Now for every one that has had a definite experience, there are perhaps a score who entered the Divine family almost as a sailor passes the line of the Equator. You may know that you are born again, though you may not be able to tell your birthday.

If you are trusting Jesus, if the Spirit witnesses with your spirit that God is your Father, if you are full of a holy fear of grieving Him, if you are becoming like Him, if you love the brethren, you may declare yourself his child.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 18.

"The children of Israel shall pitch every man by his own standard."—Num. ii. 2-34.

Our God is a God of order, and it was needful for the order of the camp, whether at rest or on the march, that each man should know his place, and keep to it. But though there were different standards and positions, there was one centre, the ark, and one host of redeemed men.

Each believer has an appointed place in the great army of God. It is indicated by the voice of God, and by the circumstances of our life; and it should be jealously retained. Repeatedly the Apostle bade his converts abide in the calling wherein they were called. Yours may be towards the bleak north of difficulty, or the warm south of privilege. In the home, the country parish, or the difficult foreign post. But, on the whole, you should stay where you are; unless the Captain of our salvation moves you by some unmistakable indication of his will.

The main point with us all is to face the ark, to which the doors of all the tents looked, so that we may ever catch the first symptom of the movement of the cloud.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 19.

"Take the Levites instead."—Num. iii. 45.

Each first-born son was God's. On the day of the exodus, as the first-born of Egypt were stricken, so the first-born of Israel were hallowed. God claimed the right to their service in his Temple, to serve there as priests and attendants. But, instead of them, He accepted the whole tribe of Levi; and for the overplus of first-born sons over the number of Levites, He accepted redemption money, which went to maintain Aaron and his sons. Thus, each first-born son was represented, either by a substitute, or by a money payment.

An appeal to parents.—Would it not be a blessed custom if, in all our churches, the first-born child was, in a special sense, regarded as God's, and trained for some branch of his holy service in the home and foreign field? What a blessing would rest on our homes if this were the custom. It would lead to very definite prayer, that the young soul might be truly converted and led to realise the parents' ideal.

An appeal to first-born children.—Either go yourself into the service of God, at home or abroad, or send a substitute. Consider yourself under obligation to do some special work for Christ and his Church. And if you cannot, earn money to support your representative. This is laying up treasure in heaven.

An appeal to families.—Why should not each family become a missionary society, sending one of its members forth in the name of the rest; who should bind themselves solemnly to hold the ropes?

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20.

"Every one to his service and to his burden."

Num. iv. 19.

Is this what the Apostle referred to when he said that every man should bear his own burden? There are burdens which we cannot share or depute.

The burden of our own existence.—Each of us must give an account of himself to God. We were created for a specific purpose; and our failure to fulfil it cannot be settled on another. God will require each man's soul of himself. You have a charge to keep, a soul to save, and a God to glorify.

The burden of our life-work.—What makest thou in the world? The Maker of all waits for thee to enter his great workshop and become his apprentice and co-worker. To be an idler, or an absentee, will land thee in inevitable disgrace. The appointed place cannot be left vacant, and thy tools untouched, save at thy grave peril.

The burden of the souls of others.—We are our brothers' keepers, liable at any moment to be called upon to give an account of how they fare, and we cannot rid ourselves of this responsibilty by annual donations to charitable or missionary institutions.

The burden of daily intercession.—Jesus bears the burdens of his people as He intercedes for them in heaven, and there is a sense in which we are called to bear up his hands in this holy service. We must consider the work of daily prayer for his Church, for sufferers, and for the world, as part of the burden of the Lord, allotted to us because we are members of his body.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21.

"Without the camp...in the midst whereof I dwell."—Num. v. 3.

What a sublime conception! God dwelt with his people. The tabernacle was his tent amongst theirs, the cloudy pillar was his ensign. To attack them was to come into collision with Him. All the expense and anxiety of the march rested on his shoulders, as the care of a family of young children on a father. How needful it was that nothing should be permitted which could offend Him.

What the camp of Israel was in those long-ago days, the Church is now. It is the host of the redeemed, the representative of God, the pilgrimage of the saints. Amongst his people God still walks, and dwells, and tabernacles. Their griefs, and conflicts, and experiences are shared by their ever present Almighty Friend.

The presence of God in the Church is by the Holy Spirit. He is with her and in her as the Body of which the Risen Lord is Head. When the one Advocate went up, the other came down; when the Second Person in the Holy Trinity ascended to his throne, the Third Person came down to perpetuate his work in the world, through the Church. "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."

How careful should we be in the ordering of our church-life, as well as of our individual lives, so that there might be nothing to offend Him! What will the Holy Spirit think of this? should be alway our first inquiry. We must walk in the paracletism of the Holy Ghost if we would be edified and multiplied (Acts. ix. 31).

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22.

"The former days shall be void."—Num. vi. 12.

How solemn is the suggestion of these words. If the separation of the Nazarite was broken in upon by his sudden contact with death, he might start afresh, but all the days that preceded that untoward event would go for nothing—they would not be counted.

How many days in our life have been made void? Days in which we have learned no new lesson of God, have had no access into his presence, have done no kind and helpful act; have spoken no loving, tender word. It is all-important that even our days of rest from active engagements should be days of learning deeper lessons, of vision, and of reception from the fulness of God.

Each day comes to us fresh from God, like soft metal, waiting to be stamped with our inscription; or like a piece of yielding clay, to be moulded into some shape of beauty or use. Each morning the slate is brought for us to write on, the canvas on which we may paint. But too often we miss our opportunity, and a blurred, marred, confused result is all we have to show.

If you would avoid this, let God plan each day; follow the guidance of his Spirit; do all you touch with your might and for his glory; put away all known sin, and be separate from evil; and in everything learn to submit to his dealings, and to commit yourself to his faithful keeping.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 23.

Moses...heard the voice speaking unto him... and He spake unto him.—Num. vii. 89.

The meaning of this verse seems to be that when Moses went into the Holy Place to speak with God he became conscious of the Divine voice, that opened out to him the thoughts and purposes of God in such a way that he was borne along on the current back to God.

This is the true conception of prayer. We often go to God with our thoughts and desires, and having uttered them we go our way. We do not wait long enough to see the cherubim and the light of the Shekinah, or hear the Divine voice. Thus our prayers fail of their answer. We do not ask what is according to the will and mind of our Heavenly Father, and the heavens seem like brass.

The true conception of prayer is that it originates in the purpose of God, and passes from the Father to the Son, who is also the Head and Representative of his people. From Jesus it is brought into our hearts by the blessed Spirit, who unites the Head with each member of the mystical body; and from the saints it returns to the source from which it came.

If, then, we would pray aright, we should wait before God until the Holy Spirit suggests what we should pray for, and indeed begins to plead within us for the saints. Silence, solitude, waiting before God; the return to God of his own thoughts; the being burdened with the weighty matters that lie heavy on the heart of Jesus—such is the noblest kind of prayer.

THE BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND, which has its branches in Dublin and Belfast, has appointed Mr. J. T. Budd, of 33, Paternoster-row, as its secretary in London and suburbs. Mr. Budd has had over twenty-five years' experience of Christian work in Ireland. The society has been assisting in the evangelisation of Ireland since 1859, and has the support of members of the different Christian denominations.

THE JOHN BOST HOMES.—The annual report of the work at the Asiles John Bost, at Laforce, Dordogne, describes the progress of a deeply interesting institution. The Homes are for orphans and aged persons, imbeciles and epileptics. The applications for admission exceed the places at disposal in most of the Homes, which exist for the purpose of receiving cases such as cannot be accommodated elsewhere. On April 30, when the financial year closed, there were 516 inmates in the various Homes. The director of the work is M. le Pasteur E. Rayroux.

NOVEMBER 24.

THE WOES OF INTEMPERANCE.—Isaiah v. 11-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 11.

In the Song of the Vineyard, with which this chapter opens, the prophet sets forth on the one hand God's special care bestowed on the people of Israel, and on the house of Judah in particular (7), and on the other hand the disappointing return they made for all his goodness. Instead of the good fruit of love and trust and obedience the nation brought forth "wild grapes" (2). What these wild grapes were this lesson shows.

The two great sins of the nation appear to have been covetousness (8) and drunkenness; but the latter of these two is not one sin, but many. It is never alone, and the verses which form our lesson describe the sins which are associated with drunkenness, and the consequences to which it leads. The warnings of Scripture upon this subject are like the lighthouses upon our coast, intended to save men from ruin. The woes express no vindictiveness, but are only an earnest statement of the sure consequences following this vice. No one who wishes to avoid the consequences should trifle with the evil.

No doubt the woes here described are the result of excessive drinking (11). The people are slaves to the habit. They begin and end the day, and even spend the night, in drinking. They drink until every bad passion is set on fire, and they lose all control over themselves. But how do men become thus enslaved by drink? Does anyone begin with the intention of going to such excess? Did not all these victims of intemperance begin to drink expecting that they would never be overcome? Is not everyone who drinks at all in danger? The only certain remedy is that of the Wise man (Prov. xxiii. 31).

The surroundings of drink are such as to make excess easy (12). Music, and song, and social fellowship are utilized to make men forgetful of God and of their own best interests. Many modern music-halls provide entertainment which make it easy to acquire the habit of drinking.

The victims of intemperance are not confined to one class (13, 15). The habit has mastered statesmen, philosophers, poets, and even Christian ministers. An eminent clergyman and man of genius says in one of his published letters: "I must be on my guard, for I find I am getting an ugly fondness for alcohol."

The consequences of this vice in the Israelites were Captivity (13). Already the ten tribes had been taken to Assyria. But was not the captivity to this vice one which they had more reason to dread? Destruction (14). Hell—or the place of the dead—is represented as enlarging herself to receive the numerous victims who perish through intemperance. "When our judges tell us from the bench that nine-tenths of pauperism and crime are caused by drink, and our physicians that if irregular tippling were abolished half the current sickness of the land would cease, and our statesmen that the ravages of strong drink are equal to those of the historical scourges of war, famine, and pestilence combined, surely to swallow such a glut of spoil the appetite of hell must have been still more enlarged, and the mouth of hell made yet wider."—G. A. Smith. Another consequence is daring wickedness (18, 19). Ordinary sinning is not enough for the drunkard when filled with wine. Recall the impiety which brought the sacred vessels into Belshazzar's feast (Dan. v. 2). And the sin is accompanied with bold defiance of God. What care they for God's threats when they are inflamed with strong drink? Perverted judgment (20). This must already have taken place where any can call drunkenness a pleasure. Is not this calling evil good? Equally do they err in their judgment of themselves (21). Many a man is being enslaved by drink who prides himself upon his prudence! He is tottering over the edge of a precipice while he thinks himself safe.

The picture might be made even darker if we remembered the future of the drunkard. And even without this how much we know from our own observation of the results of intemperance! Where are some of our fellow-scholars?

But it must not be forgotten that while total abstinence is a remedy for drunkenness, it is possible to be an abstainer and yet unsaved. The most temperate as well as the most intemperate needs Christ. No youth should start out in life without Him for a companion and friend.

For the Young.

ON SERVING CHRIST.

BY THE LATE DR. McLEOD, BIRKENHEAD.*

By little things great deeds can be done. It was the children who cried "Hosanna." That was a little thing in itself; but it was Hosanna to Jesus, and great because He is great, and as long as the world lasts it will be told.

To show what even one voice could do I will tell you of a German musician who many years ago left his native land for America. Arrived in New York, he could not speak English, but he had a great hunger for music, and one Lord's Day, passing a place of worship, he went in—to enjoy the praise.

Now, this was a church where very little attention was given to music; everyone sang in his own way, and the singing was to his ear so unskilful, and even rude, that it nearly drove him out of the place; but just then his quick ear, in the midst of all the harsh, discordant sounds, heard a young female voice, sweet and clear, but not loud, singing in perfect tune, and gradually, one after another, all the congregation caught the tune from her, and followed till the discord ceased, and the whole congregation were singing in perfect harmony.

Another instance of power given to children to serve Christ is told of a very rich count of Silesia. It is said that somehow he hated Christ and hated the Bible and hated the Church. It is said, indeed, that he made a mock of God and heaven and eternity. Now this rich and evil man had churches on his estate, and, strange to say, he had to appoint the ministers to those churches. And at the time I was telling of he had to appoint one to a church near his own castle. And so bad and unfaithful a man was he that he appointed a man who also hated God and the Bible, and made a mock of heaven and eternity. The two men would sit at the count's table scoffing at all holy things. And at the church there was no one to teach the people about Christ.

Now on the count's estate at that time lived a pious Christian schoolmaster. And when everything in the place was against Christ, he and his household were thinking more of Him and clinging closer to Him. In the evenings passers-by heard hymns of Jesus sung in his house, sweetly sung, in which his children joined.

One evening, as the count was passing this house, he heard a child singing in the garden. She was alone, and her voice was so sweet that the count stopped to listen. As he listened he found it was a hymn to Christ the child was singing. Then the singing stopped, and the count, looking over the hedge, saw that, though she was smiling, she was in tears. Then he asked why she was crying, and she said, "I am crying for joy."

"Joy! for what?" said the count.

"For Christ's love," she quickly replied.

The count said, "But Christ is dead."

"No," said the little girl. "He is not dead. He died, but He rose from the dead, and He is alive again, and lives for evermore, to send blessings and to save."

The child seemed so sure, so bright, and so glad, that her words fixed themselves in the count's mind. Silent and thoughtful he went on his way.

A week after, business called him to take a journey to the borders of Austria, to a village gnadenfrey, where was a Moravian settlement. The chapel bells were ringing, and inquiring why, he was told it was the children's festival. For the sake of hearing the children's singing, he turned into the chapel. The preacher gave out for the text, "Have ye never heard, Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?" Remembering the little voice he had heard in his own village, the hard heart of the count was touched. His wicked pride was brought low, and, as he told afterwards, he found himself shedding tears.

The children had called on him to follow Christ, and the children had won him to obey. He could no longer scoff; he could no longer withhold his heart from his Lord. The words of Paul came to his lips. In sorrow, in sincerity, and joy, he cried, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He found himself at the feet of Christ.

And now the count of Silesia joins with the schoolmaster's family in his village, is a loyal soldier in Christ's army, and marches under his banner. It was a child that began the first change, and Jesus was glad. And it is true now, and here, and everywhere, and always, that a little child can lead a man to Jesus. The greatest things are often done by little means.

> One gentle word that I may speak,
> Or one kind, loving deed
> By me, a child both small and weak,
> May prove a tiny seed;
> And who can tell what good may spring
> From such a very little thing?

Perhaps it would fix this lesson better in your minds if I told you a story about a Norwegian fishergirl, who once in her life did not do all she could. She lived in a cottage by the sea, and she had no mother.

Her father, one day going out to fish, said to her: "When night comes on, light the lamp and put it in the window as mother did, and when the darkness falls I'll see where to land.

The little girl—she was very little and all alone—fell fast asleep as night came on, and so the lamp was not lit, and that night her father, not seeing any light, came ashore at the wrong place and was drowned. But the poor child could never forgive herself, and she said, "All my life long I will keep the lamp burning for others." And she lived in that cottage till she was an old woman. She sat up spinning all night and slept by day. Many a sailor's life she saved. By failing once she learned for evermore to do what she could.

SCHOOL CHILDREN AROUSED.

We had a glorious day on Sunday, Nov. 3, among the children. I opened school as usual, giving out the hymn "I'm not ashamed to own my Lord," and asked all to say that hymn from their hearts. The mighty Spirit of God began to work in such a way that we were all amazed. Teachers and nearly all the school were all in tears; and one after another of the elder boys and girls dropped on their knees, pleading for mercy. We had a prayer-meeting instead of school-teaching, and the place seemed hallowed with God's presence.

In the afternoon God clothed the word with power; as I spoke from Isaiah liii. 5, some were in tears. In the evening the Spirit of God still worked, and everyone stayed to the prayer-meeting. The converts began to pray, and more souls found peace in Jesus. Last night we had a prayer-meeting for the converts and teachers. Christians that had heard the glad news came in, and surely it was good to be there, as one after another testified to the saving power of God's grace, thanked Jesus for saving them, and prayed for their parents and others. Pray for us. We are looking for great things; may we all be filled and led by the Spirit.

THE POOR CHILDREN'S MISSION, in connection with Trinity-road Chapel, Upper Tooting, reports earnest work in the Hearts and Hands League, for interesting young folk in the children of the poor. This society has grown largely and formed several branches, which have given 388 articles of clothing, entertained numbers of poor boys and girls, collected sixty dolls, etc., for sick children, and in other ways aided the R.S.U. operations. Useful work is also carried on at the Beaucroft-road mission and, elsewhere. The secretary is Mr. Leonard Shepherd, 11, Morella-road, Wandsworth-common, S.W.

THE LATE MR. RADCLIFFE.

We give some extracts from the early chapters of Mrs. Radcliffe's forthcoming biography of her late husband:—

AN OPEN-AIR EXPERIENCE.

When quite a youth, Reginald made a special trip to London with the sole object of preaching in the open air in the metropolis. During this visit he first met Mr. and Mrs. Pennefather, with other valued and life-long friends. Looking round for a suitable pulpit in the open air. Mr. Radcliffe wandered to Primrose-hill; there, standing on a seat, he began with his wonderfully clear voice to read the 53rd chapter of Isaiah. This unusual sound soon brought the constable, adorned in claret and gold, who stopped him. Mr. Radcliffe immediately asked, "Where are the bounds of your land?" Being shown the limit, he crossed the hedge and began to preach the Gospel within sound of the people on both sides.

Many years afterwards, in the days when Mr. Radcliffe was so wellknown in Aberdeen, a letter came on a printed circular, as if from Lord Haddo, asking him to speak on the hustings in the northern city in support of his lordship's election. Mr. Radcliffe thought the request so unlikely at such a time, that he asked Mr. John Gordon of Parkhill to show the letter to Lord Haddo. His lordship said it was a hoax; but added, "Tell Mr. Radcliffe I am ranger of the Queen's Park in London, and when he wishes I will give him a permit to preach there."

IN PRISON FOR CHRIST'S SAKE.

At Chester, in May, 1857, during the race week, several brethren were apprehended for preaching the Gospel in the open-air. The people uttered loud cries of "Shame! Shame!" but the preachers were pulled down and taken to the police-office, where they remained about three hours. Major French, a magistrate, having been sent for, they were examined before him; refusing to give bail, he ordered them to be locked up for the night. A constable removed Mr. Radcliffe from the major's presence for this purpose.

The two prisoners, Reginald Radcliffe and Richard Weaver, were locked up in cells side by side, with a division that did not reach to the roof, so that what was said in one cell could be heard in the other. The constable went to Mr. Radcliffe and asked him to go out of prison, saying they were at liberty; but having been taken publicly, Mr. Radcliffe declined to be discharged privately. When the constable went to Mr. Weaver's cell and asked him to go, he replied, "Same as him," "Same as him," pointing to the next cell.

Before they were confined in the cells Dr. C. Watson, of Watergate-street, went to the court, and requested that the prisoners might be accommodated with rugs, otherwise the physical consequences might be serious. Major French said that if Dr. Watson would become bail he would accept him. This Dr. Watson did, without communicating with either of the prisoners. Major French then sent out word by Mr. Hill, superintendent of police, that the prisoners were at liberty to go, but they refused; having been taken publicly through the streets by the officers, they wished to be publicly discharged by the magistrates. After the lapse of about twenty minutes the door was suddenly opened, and Major French, with his own hands, assisted by Mr. Hill, was seen to thrust the prisoners out. The Exchange floor was crowded with gentlemen of standing and position in the city, who deeply sympathised with the prisoners, and expressed their disapprobation of the conduct of Major French and the chief superintendent.

The expelled prisoners were then conducted to the street-lamp at which they had been arrested. Having formed a ring, the Doxology was sung and a short prayer offered by Mr. Radcliffe, after which the people separated quietly. The greatest excitement prevailed amongst the inhabitants, and a prayer meeting held in the Y.M.C.A. room on Friday morning was enthusiastically attended.

The next day the prisoners appeared before the magistrates. After a long hearing, one of the magistrates said, "We have heard the evidence brought before us, and it does not appear to us that a breach of the peace has been committed by any person at present charged." (This was greeted with loud cheers.) Mr. Radcliffe said, "I have no vindictive feeling towards either of the unfortunate officers, or any of the magistrates. I was taken publicly from preaching in the open street, in the open daylight, and before all Chester, as a culprit to Bridewell; and therefore it was I refused to be liberated until it was done publicly by the magistrates. I will never commence an action against any man, rich or poor; we come here simply to to spread the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. We do not come as sectaries. There are amongst us members of the Church of England, and of nearly all Protestant denominations. Some may think that the race week is an unusual time to select for the purpose; but then, it is the most likely time for meeting with pickpockets, prostitutes, and criminals.

A few days later, an inaugural meeting was held by the citizens, in the Music Hall. They gave a great ovation to Mr. Radcliffe; when he entered, all the people rose en masse, and received him with great enthusiasm. He addressed them afterwards. Rev. Verner White, of Liverpool, was present; and there was also my husband's dear and early friend, the Rev. (now Canon) H. Woodward, whose intimate friendship was so valued until their life pathways diverged. Though no longer working side by side, their hearts beat true to each other. In a letter I received in 1894 from Canon Woodward, he says, "My hand will indeed forget its cunning before I forget Reginald Radcliffe." What a noble and staunch friend my husband also had at this time in Rev. R. D. Thomas, of Christ Church, Chester.

Mr. Radcliffe received a beautiful sympathetic address, numerously signed, from the Open Air Mission in London.

PREACH THE GOSPEL.

Go, speak of Jesus! Do not mind,
Although your words are not refined,
The Master will direct you.
And God, in a mysterious way,
Will give you words of truth to say,
And send you succour day by day,
Though all the world reject you.

God never, since the world began,
Upon a warfare sent a man,
But He defrayed his charges.
One prophet was by ravens fed;
Again he in the famine fled
To where a widow gave him bread,
And God her store enlarges.

Then speak of Jesus! Do not wait
On this or that to mend your state.
Your need? God understands it.
Go, preach the Gospel every one—
The son to sire, the sire to son—
Swift with the joyful message run;
'Tis God Himself commands it.

HOWARD-STREET GOSPEL MISSION.—The open-air work has been closed for the season, 156 meetings were held on Sunday and week evenings. The Gospel has been faithfully preached and sung in various parts of London. Thousands of tracts were distributed at each meeting. Sinners have been converted, backsliders restored, drunkards have signed the pledge, and several are now living consistent lives. A good work is going on in the Sunday schools. Last Sunday afternoon six senior girls decided for Christ, and at the evening service three men and four women asked to be prayed for, and left trusting in Christ. John Soames.

BRITISH SYRIAN MISSION.

The annual report of the British Syrian Mission Schools describes a many-sided work. Rev. H. E. Fox in some "traveller's notes," says:—"The gifted and generous ladies who now direct operations have the advantage of being supported by a truly noble band of earnest and consecrated workers. To a large extent this work is educational, and the education is of a very thorough kind. The institution for training female teachers has indeed become the recognised source of supply for most of the Protestant schools in Syria."

In a report of the Beyrout Training Institution, Miss Thompson says: "We have lately had a very interesting instance of 'bread cast on the waters' being found again after many days. Some years ago two pupils from here were married to two brothers, thriving tradesmen in the town. One of them was an earnest Christian, but not being allowed to become a Protestant remained a nominal Greek, though she allowed nothing to prevent her from bearing witness to her Lord to all who had come to the house, whether visitor or priest. Much praying has made her knees padded like a camel's. On Sunday morning, as soon as her husband leaves, she regularly calls her household together and goes through the Morning Service from the Arabic translation of the Prayer Book. She long tried to influence her more worldly-minded sister-in-law, and at last was rewarded by seeing a complete change in her. Early in the spring the latter was attacked by influenza, followed by inflammation of the lungs, but as long as she was conscious she begged to have the Bible read to her. As the end drew near, she sent for her husband and begged him to turn to God, and then told those around her not to trouble her by weeping, for she was full of joy and going to be with Christ. Her death obliged us to spend many afternoons in visits of condolence, and in all we found a hearty welcome and an opportunity of speaking for Jesus, and of having prayer.

"The institution and indeed all our stations are so many parishes. There is always some marriage or some sickness, or, alas! some death, to call us to visit among the many families represented by our children. In one house the young wife lies ill of consumption, and though at school she seemed to care for none of these things, her Bible is now her constant companion, and she has quiet time for reflection, which she would not have were she ill of any other disease, for people have a terrible dread of it, and rarely go near a house where it is known to be.

"The missionary interest of the girls has not diminished at all. Altogether our teachers and pupils alone have contributed upwards of £10 to China and the Congo this year. The poor of Beyrout have not been forgotten either, and collections have been made for them in times of need. I will only add that we have rather more than fifty girls of various Christian sects in training every year as teachers. Any one, then, who will undertake the charge of one of these, has the prospect of providing a home missionary for Syria. Then our little 'foreign field,' the non-Christian part in name, is already kindling many a little lamp in the darkness of a Moslem, Druze, and Jewish home; for these two causes we ask help."

The London office of the Mission is at 27, Homefield-road, Wimbledon, S.W.

SOUTH AFRICA.—Mrs. M. C. P. Goslin, who has spent some years in missionary work in South Africa, is giving lantern lectures on "Black and White Life in South Africa." All who are interested in this region, its importance, promise, and difficulties, and in Christian effort for our own people will find her lectures vivid, lively, interesting, and earnest, giving an insight into many strange men and manners, and breathing throughout a truly Evangelical spirit. Superintendents of Sunday-schools and Band of Hope societies could scarcely choose a better method of providing a thoroughly profitable and enjoyable evening than by inviting Mrs. Goslin, who may be addressed, 125, Cornwall-road, Notting Hill, W

Mr. Benjamin Broomhall.

It is with unusual pleasure that we present to our readers to-day, the portrait of that faithful, honoured servant of God, and of the Church universal, Mr. Benjamin Broomhall, lately the General Secretary of the China Inland Mission. His strong yet genial face is familiar to many of our readers, both at home and in far distant China. His name and work are held in high estimation by multitudes who have never seen him in the flesh, or heard his earnest voice pleading the cause of missions and of humanity.

Born in Staffordshire some sixty-six years ago, Benjamin Broomhall was led to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ in early youth, and afterwards became a local preacher in the Wesleyan communion. He seemed destined for a business career, but God had other plans for Him. When in 1875 he relinquished commercial pursuits, and at the invitation of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor joined him in the work of the China Inland Mission, it was evident that he had found his life-work. He had married Mr. Taylor's sister in 1859. Mrs. Broomhall has not only been a true helpmeet in all matters pertaining to the home, but has in a whole-hearted way, and with unflagging zeal, seconded her husband's efforts on behalf of the great missionary cause. The China Inland Mission had been founded some nine years before Mr. Broomhall joined its working staff, and it had attained considerable dimensions. Mr. Hudson Taylor's long and frequent absences in China made it necessary that some firm and capable hand should hold the helm in the important home work. These requirements were met in Mr. Broomhall, who was aided by the collective wisdom of the London Council of the Mission.

There is a great deal of invaluable work in connection with such an office that never meets the public eye. Mr. Broomhall had his full share of that; but his position was far above that of the mere paid official. He possessed the confidence and affection of his fellow-workers, and of the friends of the mission generally. By the rich blessing of God on the labours and the testimony of its founder, Mr. Hudson Taylor, and of the band of devoted workers in the field, as well as on the skilful conduct of its affairs in England, the China Inland Mission rapidly grew in favour with all the churches. When Mr. Broomhall joined it, there were about forty missionaries at work, including the wives of those who were married. According to latest statistics, the number of missionaries, including associates, is 621. In 1875 the income of the mission was £8000; now it is over £30,000.

A somewhat peculiar feature of the C.I.M from its commencement, has been the desire of its conductors to secure men and women, distinctly chosen, called, and equipped by the Spirit of God for the work. rather than those who have simply gone through a long and costly theological course of study, This plan, has, in seasons of deep missionary interest, resulted in large bodies of candidates coming forward, desiring to be accepted for service in China. During the years 1886–88 the number of such candidates mounted up to 800. The discrimination and wise dealing needed to meet such a state of things are not easily to be measured.

On this point we may quote the words of a well-informed friend, written over a year ago :—

> The amount of care and watchfulness which Mr. and Mrs. Broomhall exercised for a long series of years, in observing the characters and qualifications of candidates for service in China, can never be fully realised, excepting by the few friends who knew the inner life of their home in Pyrland Road. There, for weeks together, they included in their family circle, from time to time, many of the young men and women who ultimately were received into the ranks of the mission; and it would be difficult to estimate the value of their sound judgment and Christian discrimination whilst occupied in this labour of love and patience. Thus they became the intimate and dearly-loved friends of a large proportion of the mission staff now in China.

Since his retirement some months since from the post of General Secretary, Mr. Broomhall has received warm messages from many of these scattered workers, referring to the time of happy home restfulness, and of holy preparation they passed when sojourning under his roof.

(From Photograph by Mr. T. C. Turner, 10, Dartmouth Park, N.)

In addition to his more private secretarial duties, Mr. Broomhall has been active in the public advocacy of the mission cause in London, and in various parts of the country.

Another valued service he was enabled to render to missions was the compilation of the now well-known handbook, "The Evangelisation of the World,"* which has aroused deep interest in the minds of many in the great theme of which it treats, and has increased that interest in quarters where it was already a potent working force. It originated with an account of the "Cambridge Band," who went as missionaries to China; and referred also to the wider topic of the evangelization of the world. The book was afterwards enlarged, especially that part of it which dealt with the larger aspects of the missionary question. Such a body of convincing fact and powerful utterance, selected from many sources, we believe, cannot anywhere else be found in print. We trust a new edition of the later half of the book will become necessary, so that its weighty message to the Christian churches of to-day may be perpetuated. We may add that it has found high appreciation with experienced missionary secretaries such as Mr. Eugene Stock. It has been included by competent authorities in the best ten books on missionary subjects.

In the course of his experience as secretary of the C.I.M., and in his intercourse with returned missionaries, Mr. Broomhall was led to form very strong and decided views as to the disastrous character of the opium habit among the natives of China, and the equally fatal nature of the Indian opium trade, as a barrier to the reception and spread of Christianity among the Chinese. For years past he has been one of the foremost advocates of the abolition of the Government manufacture of the drug in our Indian Empire, and its sale for popular consumption. Twelve years ago he prepared a pamphlet, "The Truth About Opium,"* which helped largely to inform and educate the Christian public mind on this much-debated question. He was one of the originators of "The Christian Union" for prayer and combined effort in fighting the vast evil. He has also edited with great spirit and success the organ of the union, National Righteousness; thus helping to crystallize into effective action the convictions of many earnest Christian people on a subject which affects so deeply our national reputation and the advancement of Christ's Kingdom in the far East. In concluding our reference to this department of Mr. Broomhall's varied and fruitful labours for the good of mankind, we may reproduce a paragraph from the evidence which he gave before the recent Opium Commission; this utterance puts the anti-opium case in a nutshell :—

> Q. Will you give us your impressions generally as formed from your missionary communications, with reference to the effects of opium-smoking?
> A. The information that I have from time to time received and obtained, has left on my mind the profound conviction (1) that opium-smoking in its effects, physical, moral, and social, is one of the most awful vices that ever afflicted the world; (2) that our encouragement of the opium trade has been in its results, commercially, politically, and morally, one of the greatest blunders, and one of the greatest crimes ever committed by any nation; (3) that the rapid extension in China, during recent years, of the growth of the poppy, and of the habit of opium-smoking, threatens the very existence of the country; (4) that there is absolutely no hope for any effective check of the rapid increase of opium-smoking in China while the export of our Indian opium is continued; and (5) that the habit of opium-smoking is one of the greatest hindrances, if not the greatest hindrance to the work of Christian Missions in China.

Early in the present year Mr. Broomhall retired from the position of secretary of the China Inland Mission, which he had filled with such untiring zeal and success for twenty years. Many expressions of the warmest esteem and affection came to him when his resolve became known. The London Council, who for so many years had the benefit of Mr. Broomhall's wide experience and mature judgment, and who worked with him in a course of happy fellowship and unbroken harmony, received the intimation with the deepest regret and sorrow, and passed the following resolution :—

> The Council wish to record by special minute the high estimation in which they have ever held Mr. Broomhall, and their sense of the great loss that the Mission must suffer by his retirement. Few probably are aware of the immense amount of labour accomplished by him in past days, when he was assisting Mr. Taylor in the early and rapid development of the Mission, and when he was, almost single-handed, doing the work now divided amongst several; and they feel that no words of theirs can adequately express all that the Mission owes to his untiring energy and unbounded labours. They cannot but recall how for years it was the privilege of candidates for China to be welcomed into the happy home circle at No. 2, Pyrland-road, where, in Mr. and Mrs. Broomhall, a great many of our members now labouring in China found a second father and mother. The Council also takes pleasure in recording the unfailing courtesy and kind consideration which Mr. Broomhall has ever shown, and most gladly takes this opportunity of acknowledging the great help and assistance he has at all times rendered to the Council collectively. They trust that, whilst looking first and chiefly to God for his approval and his "Well done," Mr. and Mrs Broomhall may in their retirement have the happiness of remembering that there are many in China and at home in whose hearts they will always occupy a warm place.

A number of China missionaries at home on furlough have presented him with a tastefully illuminated address and a massive timepiece, in token of their loving regard; and there have been other tangible expressions of the same sentiment.

Now that our friend is relieved of much exacting detail work, he is set free to devote his energies to the general advancement of the cause he has so much at heart, and which bears so directly on the success of missionary effort. May he be long spared to deal heavy blows at one of the greatest evils of our generation, and to hasten, as God may enable him, the coming of the universal reign of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

We must not omit to add that in addition to his long personal service, Mr. Broomhall has given very practical pledges of his deep devotion to the work of missions, in the fact that four members of his family—two sons and two daughters—are at present in China, working in the fullest spirit of consecration for the great Master whom it has been his own delight to serve and to follow.

REV. WALTER SEARLE.

Rev. Walter Searle, late Secretary of the South Africa General Mission, and editor of the South Africa Pioneer, has resigned his connection with the Mission, and accepted the unanimous and cordial invitation to become pastor of the Congregational Church, Pietermaritzburg, the capital of Natal, recently vacated by Rev. David Russell. There are two branch churches attached to the mother church; one for the native Zulus, who form a considerable portion of the population, and the other for the Dutch-speaking coloured people. There are also out-stations, with a band of local preachers. Around this rapidly rising city there are vast numbers of raw heathen, and several important mission stations, which Mr. Searle hopes to visit.

The present building, which was originally intended for a Sunday-school, is altogether inadequate, and another building is to be erected in front of it, as a church proper, leaving the present building free for Sunday-school work. There is a good school, and a flourishing Christian Endeavour Society. There is also a Church Magazine, which Mr. Searle will edit. His address will be:—The Congregational Manse, Pietermaritzburg, Natal.

MISS CHILD'S WELCOME HOME.—There was a full muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew at the Welcome Home, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, on Tuesday week. Miss Child gave as the motto for the month, "Thou art with me" (Psa. xxiii. 4), and in her usual happy style applied the words to the Christian sailors as a support and strength. Some fourteen or more sailors gave testimony of the power of God to keep them under all their difficulties, persecutions, and temptations. Some testified to being the means of conversion among their shipmates. A prayer-meeting followed. Lady Ashburton was present, and evidently enjoyed the proceedings.

WORK AMONG FRENCH PRIESTS.

THE ABBÉ BONHOMME.

We recently gave, from the pen of M. Eugène Réveillaud an account of the secession of the Abbé Bonhomme, from the Church of Rome. M. Bonhomme determined to remain at St. Palais, near Pons, and preach the Gospel in the very parish in which he had been a representative of the Papal system. M. Robert, pastor of the Eglise Réformée at Pons, writing to acknowledge the kind sympathy which some of our readers have extended to the ex-priest, says:—"As you know, M. Bonhomme explained from his pulpit that his conscience obliged him to leave the Church of Rome, and intimated his intention to remain among his parishioners as a preacher of pure Gospel. We at once took a hall at St. Palais, first for lectures, and then for religious services. The first of those lectures, given before 250 people, made a profound impression. Romanists from the neighbouring villages, headed by a popular speaker, resolved to interrupt M. Bonhomme, and then to annihilate the religious movement; but all turned against them, and M. Bohomme received

AN ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION.

A fortnight afterwards, at Champagnolles, we had about 800 people, and the meeting was held on the square before the church, where M. Bonhomme had preached the Gospel of Christ so faithfully that he had displeased the Ultramontanes and their bishop.

"The following Sunday M. Réveillaud gave a second lecture at St. Palais before 200 people. Our antagonists remained at home this time, and the eminent speaker was loudly applauded. At St. Quentin and at Belluire (where all the members of the municipality were present) we found the same sympathy and the same desire among our 150 hearers, that we should organise, not only lectures but Protestant worship. The lectures, together with the gross attacks which the Papist papers made upon M. Bonhomme, caused such excitement in the department that delegations came from ten other places begging us to go to them also. The Bishop of La Rochelle, rather alarmed, went to the Prefect to ask whether he could stop the scandal!

"Prof. Bertrand, director of the Mission to Priests, came down, and presided at the opening of the religious hall at St. Palais. His address was frequently applauded by 120 or 130 hearers, especially when he recalled the fact that instead of the present Roman Catholic churches there were formerly large, numerous, flourishing Protestant churches, and that the dust in the Charente-Inférieure is nothing but the ashes of Protestant martyrs. The following Wednesday, with the help of ex-priest Goubies and ex-priest Bonhomme, he gave a most interesting lecture at Champagnolles on 'The Travesty of the Gospel by the Roman Catholic Church.' There also he could judge de visu the excellent disposition of our country hearers. He left with the full conviction that no region is better disposed than the Charente to receive the Gospel.

"Subsequently, public worship was begun at Champagnolles; and formal request for regular services was made by others who attended from a distance. M. Bonhomme is as active as he is religious; he gives himself with zeal to the propagation of the Gospel, which has at last brought peace to his soul. I do my very best to help him, but we cannot answer to all the calls. Christians who have at heart the advancement of the Kingdom of God should seize the present opportunity to found mission stations in a department in which torrents of Huguenot blood were formerly spilt."

ANOTHER CONVERT.

Another priest who has come out of Rome is the Abbé Bourrier, priest of the parish of Saint Martin, Marseilles, who, in a letter addressed to his bishop, says: "Age, experience, and above all an earnest study of the Gospel and the Christianity of the early centuries have largely modified the views and prejudices in which I was trained. I have been compelled to recognise that I was born into a Church in which human accretions and interests have distorted the simplicity of the Gospel. I am unable to find in its dogmatic subtleties, any more than in many of its practices and rites, the beautiful religion of Christ.

"You have known, monseigneur, these troubles of conscience, which for several years have been the plague of my life. You have not forgotten my anguish when, some ten years ago, I tried to break the bonds, so strong and tender, which held me to all that I had known and loved up to that time. You then requested my adhesion to the creed of Pius IV., and I gave that adhesion. I submitted to the tests which you were pleased to apply. I have not realised the peace that was promised me. You know how to make men suffer; you do not know how to give peace.

"Loyally and bravely have I striven to bend my reason and my will to the exigencies of the Roman faith. My ministry has extended over twenty years, for ten of which I have been struggling with my own conscience. At length I am compelled to see that it were at once impossible and culpable to continue that struggle. I leave the Roman Church, not by the gate of scepticism or unbelief, but because of my faith in Jesus Christ, the only Saviour and one Mediator (Acts. iv. 12; 1 Tim. ii. 5). In your church you have multiplied saviours, and, according to passing fashion, made use of divers and sometimes fantastical means of salvation. The success and popularity of these exhibitions have completely misrepresented the great principles of the Christian faith—the Incarnation and the Atonement. Hence you no longer present the Gospel which has been revealed—that which the Apostles preached to the nations, and which I must prefer above any other gospel that may be brought me, even by an angel from heaven (Gal. i. 8).

"Had I been able to find this Gospel in Romanism, I should not renounce a position which secures me worldly honours with the material advantages of an agreeable and easy life. If I had not faith, I could try, as so many others do, to harmonise my ministerial functions with a conscience calmed by casuistic subtleties; and I would not expose myself to the injury and hatred which will doubtless attend any present action. But I believe it is better to say with the Apostle Paul: 'What things were gain to me those I counted loss for Christ' (Phil. iii. 7). Faithful to my vocation, I shall consecrate the remainder of my life to the service of God, right happy to be able henceforth to preach my Saviour with fidelity to his word and freed from the fear of men."

THE GLEANERS' UNION.

THE anniversary of this enterprising auxiliary of the C.M.S. was held last week. The roll of membership now amounts to 80,000. Various conferences of workers were held for the consideration of business matters.

The public gatherings were an afternoon conference and an evening meeting in Exeter Hall. After the report, read by Mr. E. M. Anderson, came words by home and foreign workers. First, Mrs. Hannington, the widow of the martyred Bishop, who drew a contrast between the position of women in China and those in our own land. In a solemn word to parents she showed that while God spared not his own Son they too often refused to spare their own children for foreign work. Miss Bradshaw, representing the Irish branches of the Gleaners' Union, had a word of encouragement for home workers. The spiritual life of missionaries, she urged, is regulated by the lives of Gleaners at home; and if we acted up to our duty more spiritual results in the mission-field could be obtained at once without more men or more means. Mrs. Herbert Knox, speaking for foreign workers, vividly sketched some of the needs of China, showing the marvellous openings there are for women's work, and these facts she bade her sisters ponder in the light of the question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Miss Askwith (of the Sarah Tucker School, Palamcottah) pictured India, its size, and the density of its population. Her description of Tinnevelly was particularly effective, and she showed that, so far from the population there being, as was sometimes supposed, wholly Christian, there were only 250,000 Christians, whereas the population numbered two millions and a quarter. Miss C. Lambert (F.E.S.) spoke of China, and many were the encouraging incidents she gave of the blessing attending the work of the schools in the Fuh-kien province. But the need is awful, and upon this head she pressed home the urgency of our Lord's last command.

Exeter Hall was crowded in the evening by an enthusiastic audience. The Bishop of Coventry, who presided, opened with a few weighty words, Rev. E. H. Hopkins followed with a devotional address from Heb. xii. 2.

The missionary speakers were Rev. W. P. Buncombe, of China; Rev. Douglas Hooper, of the Niger; and Mr. G. L. Pilkington, fresh from Uganda, who spoke with remarkable vigour, though he confined his address to telling a few interesting incidents concerning the work of the Holy Ghost on individual lives. He took for granted that everyone knew that many had been brought in; he set himself to show that the work is deep. The examples he quoted were full of encouragement, and showed that the Waganda are deeply taught Christians. One, a lad seventeen, told his companions, "God is the teacher, men cannot teach"; while another was heard to pray, "Oh Lord, we have only the bare line; Thou hast the hook." These cases are typical of many, and they seem to show that the term applied to the Waganda in jest, that they are "the people of the Holy Ghost," is true in earnest. An address by Rev. W. E. Burroughs concluded the proceedings.

THE NEW TREMONT TEMPLE, BOSTON, U.S.A., of which Dr. Lorimer is the pastor, will be opened very shortly. The dedicatory services, which will cover an entire week, will be of the most interesting character, and will, it is predicted, mark an epoch in the religious history of Boston. It is expected that Mr. D. L. Moody will conduct services in the Temple every day during the week following the dedication.

PETERBOROUGH.—The workers of the open-air mission in this town held an interesting conference last week in Christ Church, the president, Rev. R. C. Frew, in the chair. The secretary, Mr. Reece, read the report, which was very satisfactory. A very encouraging statement was made of the good work done on the Market-place. A scheme was laid before the meeting as to the mode of procedure in the work of the mission during the winter months. Mr. Williams, who had been carrying on work in the lodging-houses and also in the workhouse, gave an interesting account of his labours among the poor and homeless. His position was then considered, and his work added to that of the general work of the mission.

AFTER FIVE-AND-TWENTY YEARS.

THE friends of the North-East London Gospel Missions were enabled to celebrate the thirtieth year of the work and the twenty-fifth year of Mr. Chorley's supervision on Wednesday, November 6, at Earlham Hall, Dalston. Mr. ALBERT A. HEAD presided, and the large hall was well filled.

After prayer and a hymn the chairman read sundry Biblical exhortations to praise, which found hearty response in the proceedings which followed. Mr. CHORLEY contented himself with reading the balance-sheet for the past year, which told its own story of progress and encouragement in the fact that the receipts have exceeded by £500 the highest previous record. In concluding the financial statement, he thankfully referred to the help he had received.

Early in the evening place was given to Mrs. FRANK BEVAN, who had come from a distance that evening specially to tell all present how deeply she was interested in Mr. Chorley's work, and to express Mr. Bevan's regret that another engagement prevented his attendance. Mrs. Bevan made special reference to the Lancing Homes, which now occupied so prominent a place in the good work under review.

Perhaps the most touching story of the evening was that of the lady who spoke to the visitation work, telling of heart-rending scenes, in which suffering was being silently borne as would make heroines. Mrs. Davis asked the friends present if they had any old bed-clothes to send them along. The meeting rose in sympathy with the spirit of the request, and while the children sang a sweet refrain a collection was taken and the proceeds (over four guineas) handed at once to our friend amid hearty rejoicing.

The evangelistic work in London and Lancing was well represented by Messrs. Fisher, Read and Saunders. Much encouragement and not a little blessing were reported. Good things were also said of the work among the rough match-factory girls and children generally. Great cause for rejoicing was also found in the things told by a city missionary and a South London Bible-woman as to the blessing reaped by the poor ones they had severally sent to the Lancing Homes. Hearty counsel was tendered to the workers by Mr. McCall, and earnest notes of Gospel invitation to the unsaved were sounded out by Ned Wright. Communications would be gladly replied to if addressed to the director, Mr. W. Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N. Workers for the Factory Girls' Institute at Bow and for other centres are very much needed.

THE WORK AT COSTERS' HALL.

THE densely-crowded district of Hoxton, to which Mr. W. J. Orsman and his more than 150 voluntary helpers give attention, is certainly one of the poorest districts of London. Costers' Hall at Hoxton has been a Christian house to a large number of street-traders. There they meet for the worship of God on Sundays, while the religious and business meetings of the week all show how Christianity tends to raise even the poorest. Mr. Orsman says that the funds are practically exhausted, so that if the winter work is to be still carried on with vigour, subscriptions will need to be forthcoming. Costers' Hall has for several winters past been a chief station for giving breakfasts and dinners to Board-school children, who would otherwise go hungry to school.

A great deal is done in the way of visitation, and many very poor persons are Christians who are thankful for attention, or even for a small gift. Left-off clothing for children and adults is urgently needed. The donkey and pony shows, held at the People's Palace, have been very effective in promoting the kind treatment of animals owned by street-traders, but South London is said to be in need of improvement in this respect. It is therefore proposed to hold a show of donkeys and ponies in the southern suburbs next summer, about £100 being needed for the expenses. Mr. Orsman's address is Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WINCHESTER.

"MANY thanks for your kind letter. You will be glad to know, as I am to tell, that I am now a Christian. Your kind words on board touched my heart, and I could not forget them; they led me to decide for Christ before reaching India. My chum says he would like a letter from you too, please; he wants to be good, and says a letter like what you sent me, will help him."

This cheering message from India has just come with several more letters, proving that God is not unmindful of His work through us on board the troopships. Do our friends sometimes pray for us in this scarcely "year-old" development of our mission owing to the troopships being all removed to Southampton. We need prayer. The work is for eternity, and very special are the opportunities afforded for speaking "words of life" to the hundreds leaving their friends and native land—many to return no more. Hearts made tender by partings and farewells gladly receive a last kind word, and when told of the "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother" have, in many cases, accepted Him as their Saviour, and are thus placed beyond the reach of danger. But not only do we try to benefit our soldiers and their families on board the troopships; we do all we can for them before they leave.

Several missions have lately been held and attended with much blessing. Mr. G. H. Lord, of Buckhurst Hill, has been with us twice, and in the Soldiers' Home and Branch Hall, Shawford, has given his interesting and instructive lecture on Palestine, throwing much light on Bible truths. Eastern customs and manners were explained and made impressive by native scenes, costumes, and illustrations. The lessons thus taught and truths received through eyes and ears found their way to many a heart, never to be forgotten. Messrs. T. Johnson, J. Samme, and Pastor J. Waite have also conducted missions, very valuable and thoroughly appreciated. Mr. Samme is with us now. Will our friends and subscribers think of us, especially at this busy season, and send help to carry on this great and increasing work? Think of the huge correspondence with those who leave us! The gifts of Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel literature! The many useful articles needed by numbers! The constant meetings! The continuous demand on mind and body, and time and means! The endless stream of departures and arrivals! Our poor and sick, our widows and orphans, all coming for a share of sympathy and help, and all needing food, and clothes, and shelter. L. AND E. PERKS.

A UNITED TEMPERANCE CONFERENCE.

AN important Temperance Conference of representatives from the various Christian bodies and denominations, including the Church of England, the Congregationalists, Baptists, Presbyterian Friends, Methodists of various names, and the Scotch churches, was held on Wednesday week in London House, the Bishop of London presiding. The object of the gathering was to discuss Temperance legislation. The following resolutions were adopted after full consideration:—

(1) That this Conference desires to recognise the importance of vigilant and firm administration of our present licensing laws; and, while cordially appreciating the progress which has already been made in this respect, under the influence of a more enlightened public opinion is convinced that much remains to be accomplished by a fuller use of existing legislative powers.

(2) That in the opinion of this Conference the following reforms are ripe for legislation: (a) The more effective treatment of habitual inebriates; (b) further restriction of Sunday trading (England); (c) registration of clubs; (d) raising the age under which the sale of alcoholic liquors to young persons for their own consumption is illegal; (e) determining an age under which delivery of alcoholic liquors to very young children shall be illegal; (f) shortening of the hours during which public-houses shall be open on week days.

(3) That in the opinion of this Conference the further and more difficult problems of licensing reform can best be dealt with tentatively on the principle of local option.

(4) That since such various methods involve the consideration of acutely controversial questions, her Majesty's Government be petitioned to appoint a Parliamentary Committee of both Houses to inquire into the matter.

(5) That to the same Committee the following important subjects should be referred:—(a) The tied house system; (b) The expediency of placing beer-houses licensed before 1869 on the same footing as other public-houses with regard to renewals of licences; (c) Grocers' licences; (d) existing system of appeal in cases of decisions affecting the renewal of licences from the licensing justices to quarter sessions.

CONVENTION IN EDINBURGH.

The annual Convention in Edinburgh for the deepening of spiritual life is being held this week. On the platform and throughout the hall there was abundant evidence of the true catholicity of the audiences thus brought together. There were to be seen the familiar faces and forms of the Keswick speakers surrounding Mr. Robert Wilson as chairman. The Convention has been looked forward to in a special manner this year on account of the expected presence of Rev. Andrew Murray.

The week began with weather of a character favourable to the attendance of the more feeble and aged, who might otherwise have been denied the privilege of being present. The meetings are held in the Free Assembly Hall. From Tuesday till Friday four meetings are being held each day.

On Monday evening the audience were invited to join in prayer for a work of the Holy Spirit. Mr. Wilson read the first eight verses of Isaiah vi. He said the prophet had in the earlier chapter been denouncing the sin of Israel, but now when the Lord shows him Himself he is utterly crushed in the dust. It was desired to begin the Convention with deep humiliation before God; the blessing is for those who are tempted of self and sin.

An address followed from Rev. George H. C. Macgregor, who spoke from Psalm li. 3, "My sin is ever before me." He said that if the convention were to result in the deepening of spiritual life, and the promotion of practical holiness, the first thing God must do with us is to deepen our sense of sin. The height to which we rise in holiness is proportionate to the depth into which we sink into self-abasement. He wanted to dwell on the awfully solemn and humbling fact of the presence of sin in the believer, through his whole mortal life until the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. But we must draw a vital distinction between the presence and the power of sin. In regard to the power of sin, our Lord has taught us that there is deliverance here and now. There is a place for conflict in the Christian life, but God has made provision for our being always and continuously victorious over all the power of the enemy. As to the presence of sin, the teaching of the Bible is different. The closer we draw to God, and the more perfectly we have formed in us the image of his dear Son, the more keenly we will feel the presence of sin.

The Holy Spirit convinces believers of sin by giving them a revelation, of the glory of Jesus Christ; so that we come to know what holiness really is. Until we see God, we will not be smitten down in the dust. The sight will cause us to abide in Jesus more closely than we have ever done. Second, the Holy Spirit also convinces the believer of sin, by giving to him new powers of spiritual and moral discernment, so that we come to know what sin really is. We must give over excusing ourselves. The path of conviction of sin is the path of contrition of spirit, the path of continuous blessing, and of uninterrupted victory.

A MISSION AT BROCKLEY.

A blessed ten days' mission, extending from October 20 to 30, was held at the Wesleyan Church here, by Rev. J. Grange Bennett, Connexional evangelist. The Gospel meetings were preceded by a week of united prayer and open-air services, in which the local pastors cordially joined. The district was systematically and thoroughly visited, in order to make known the services. The responses to the invitations given were very encouraging; large numbers flocked to hear the Gospel messages, which were most earnestly and lovingly delivered.

The mid-day prayer-meetings, and the afternoon consecration meetings, were seasons of heart-searching and sanctifying power. A gratifying feature of the mission was the large numbers who assembled for the special meetings for men and for women. Multitudes were convinced of sin, and many decided to become disciples of Jesus Christ. It was also a great encouragement to the workers, and to the Christian parents to see so many of the young people come out definitely on the Lord's side.

SHOREDITCH TABERNACLE.

Rev. W. Cuff and his people this week celebrate the twenty-third anniversary of the pastor's service in the densely-crowded quarter of London in which the Tabernacle is situated. Rev. A. G. Brown preached at four o'clock on Monday afternoon. Mr. Cuff's twenty-three years' work in Shoreditch and Hackney-road has left its impress on the neighbourhood. The old Providence Chapel has given place to a tabernacle, schools, class-rooms, etc., which have cost a total of £28,000. The debt at present owing is £3500. There is a strong determination on the part of the people to pay the total amount and so free the entire property from debt by the time that the pastor celebrates his twenty-fifth anniversary in 1897.

In the course of a brief address, at the Monday evening meeting, Mr. Cuff welcomed the chairman, Mr. C. Acland. As regarded themselves and their work, he was glad that he had in the main the same men around him who were there twenty-three years ago. The enthusiasm of to-day was what it had been at the beginning, and they never had more cause for thankfulness than at present. Year after year the work had gone on improving. The secretary showed that they were within sight of the end of the debt; and all seemed to be greatly encouraged by what even the very poor were endeavouring to do to aid the common cause. The chairman gave a characteristic address, and insisted that the power of the Bible, or of Christianity, was not waning. On the contrary, men were craving for light which might help to solve the mysteries of life, and for that they had to go to the Bible. Addresses by Rev. E. G. Gange and others followed.

WEAVER BROTHERS AT READING.

A gospel mission has been conducted by Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, London-street, Reading. The mission was opened on Saturday evening, Oct. 19, when a meeting of workers was held, under the presidency of Rev. J. A. Cheeseman, the superintendent of the Reading circuit. The missioners addressed the meeting, and, in a few well-chosen words, urged the friends to do their best to support them in the work.

During the week-evenings the interest was well sustained. The crowning day, however, was the second Sunday. A good audience attended the morning and afternoon meetings, but the evening service was the most crowded of any, and the building was packed with people eager to hear the missioners. Each evening during that week the interest increased. A large number from other churches in the town, and non-attendants at any place of worship were attracted to the meetings. Many entered the inquiry-room, and before leaving acknowledged Christ to be their Saviour.

On Wednesday last week a thanksgiving meeting was held, and attended by about 1000 persons. From a statement made by the secretary, Mr. Benjamin Wise, we gather that over eighty names were taken of those brought in during the mission. The Weaver Brothers sang and spoke at this gathering, and were listened to with rapt attention by the audience. A tea preceded the meeting, at which 350 sat down.

MOROCCO.—How true it is that "His compassions fail not!" One morning in the hot summer of 1894, a Sous lad from near Tarodant lay dangerously ill outside the Medical Mission Dispensary at Darval-Baida, Morocco, groaning piteously for help. As in the case of the child Ishmael left to die in the burning desert, the Lord had compassion upon the starved and half-naked boy, and sent a willing servant to his succour. The result of two months' careful nursing was restoration to physical health and strength, reception of the Gospel of God's grace unto the heart and life, confession of faith in Christ as the Son of God and his Saviour, followed by some persecution for the truth's sake from Moslem companions. Praise God, this is not a solitary case. An institution is earnestly desired in which to train up bright and promising young converts for evangelistic work in the interest of dark North Africa at present inaccessible to European teachers.

WOMAN'S MISSION TO WOMEN.

Twenty-one agents are now working under the immediate direction of the committee of the Female Mission to the Fallen. These missionaries visit the streets at night, "seeking the lost" and distributing tracts containing an affectionate invitation to call upon the missionary as a friend willing to advise and help. No fewer than 27,221 women have received help from the Mission since it was established in 1858; 8834 have been placed in homes; 2272 have been restored to their friends, others have been helped to emigrate or marry: while 7872 have been provided with situations.

Female missionaries only are employed in the work, and each missionary has a certain district specially allotted to her, and thus all parts of the Metropolis are reached. The hospitals, the prisons and the workhouses are visited, and also the houses where these young women live. Cases of attempted suicide, and others brought before the magistrates at the various Metropolitan Police-courts, receive special attention. Mission houses, each with a staff of workers, are now established in the north, south, east, and west of London.

This work has been a blessed means of restoring many an erring sister to a life of respectability and real happiness, and to be a blessing instead of a curse to those around. Unfortunately this good work is suffering from a want of funds, and reduction of the staff of mission workers seems well nigh inevitable unless help be forthcoming. The secretary is Mr. Maddison, 32, Charing Cross, S.W.

PASTORS F. H. WHITE AND CHINIQUY.

When Mr. Scott and I passed through Montreal we called on Pastor Chiniquy, and we learn by a letter from our dear friend, Pastor Frank H. White, that we had scarcely been gone half-an-hour before he also called. Mr. and Mrs. White have been passing through severe trial on account of his own health and that of their two sons. He writes:—

"I have seen much of Chiniquy, and am more than ever impressed with his simple earnestness and entire devotedness. He is deeply respected in this city, and still feared by Rome; but they dare not now whisper aught against his character. He had a stone or two thrown at him by the mob at Quebec recently. The people crowd even to look upon the old man; and while now and then one and another may be heard muttering, 'The old apostate,' they seem rather proud of him than otherwise. He was preaching nearly every day last week to large crowds in the country. He is in his eighty-seventh year, as fresh and vigorous as a young man. He is a true orator in French. We must stand by him to the last. He is now clearing off a debt on the little church for French Canadians."

L'Aurore, a French-Canadian periodical, says:—"The Roman clergy, who do not love Father Chiniquy, ought to ask themselves very often how it is that God so marvellously prolongs his days. How often have they prayed the Holy Virgin and all the saints of the calendar to remove him from this world? These prayers have no effect, and the venerable old man continues his grand work of evangelisation. At the request of the synod of the Church of St. Jean, M. Chiniquy has consented to make a tour in the Province of Ontario in aid of the church building fund. May God preserve his life and strength, and give him success in this important but difficult work."

SUNDAY REST FOR ITALY.—A recent issue of L'Italie states:—"A month or two ago a committee was formed in Rome with a view of obtaining Sunday Rest. This committee decided to constitute a league which—it goes without saying—in order to exercise its functions, will form a third committee. At this rate nothing will ever be done. What is wanted is for ten or a dozen persons to set themselves seriously to work to obtain tangible results; that is to say, to succeed in convincing those who have work done on Sunday that it would be to their interest to give a day of rest to their employés. In thus gaining ground step by step they would create a habit which everybody at last would be bound to respect, and in a few years the desired end would be obtained."

Letters to the Editor.

THE LATE MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

A REMINISCENCE.

Dear Sir,—The last Christian, containing the event of the home-going of my much-beloved spiritual father, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, has spoken volumes to me, as doubtless to many still on the earth.

It unites the first and Thursday's issue of your valuable paper with all its wealth of blessing in years between, recorded and unrecorded in its pages, as I recall the arrival of its first sheet at Arndilly House, Speyside, for Mr. Radcliffe. I remember his commendation of it right and left, as a work of faith in God as to what He was about to do, a work that deserved the encouragement of all who knew the value of God's true revival work.

There is no spiritual movement, or true development of spiritual life or teaching in the unity of the Spirit and the atmosphere of love of all who are one in Christ, that I have since heard of, that Mr. Radcliffe was not used to plant these in so many hearts, in turning multitudes from idols to serve the living and true God in the power of the Holy Ghost, and to wait for his Son from heaven.

It will need many intercessors for the heathen to pray as he prayed for "Christ's heathen" and to love and help the Master's work as he did.

May his death speak in Mrs. Radcliffe's coming record as his life has done, and great glory will be brought to Him who was so manifestly his "all in all."—Yours sincerely, H. L. Gibbon.

CARING FOR THE WIDOWS.

Dear Sir,—A servant of God, who labours much among the poor, has called attention to the sad condition of many widows in populous places. The pressure in the struggle of life is so great, they are in too many cases almost starved or forced into the workhouses and their children taken from them. In a large number of cases this is not at all necessary. In towns the rent of rooms is exorbitant. I have heard of as much as 4s. 6d. paid for a single room in the East of London. The money thus extracted from the poor widow mainly goes to the middleman, who makes large profits.

It would be a very simple matter for every congregation to have a widows' house, which could be often obtained from the ground landlord on better terms than the middleman has it. A Christian widow could be put in charge and live rent free, and the remaining rooms let out at nearly half the rate generally paid by widows.

Another difficulty the widows have is that they pay a good deal for someone to "mind the children," but in the widows' house the woman in charge would have a sort of little crèche for them.

Another economy will be that much will be saved in firing, as coals can be laid in at summer prices; and further, there may be one kitchen fire for the whole house, and so coal saved in each room. Where the congregation is too small to take a widows' house, a little nucleus of Christians might easily arrange this.

I brought this plan before a few Christian workers lately, and the project was received with approval; and one who is chairman of a large East End Union thought the guardians would be disposed to give payments at so much a head for widows and children, who would be thus looked after by responsible people; and so avoid the great charges caused by forcing all into the workhouse, and making and perpetuating a pauper class.

I could give an example. Suppose an eight-roomed house were secured at £30 per annum, two rooms would be for the widow in charge; the remaining six rooms could be let at 2s. 6d. a week —15s. a week, or £38 per annum, which would nearly cover rent and taxes, and a very small sum would be necessary to disburse the incidental expenses.

Many will say that widows often cannot pay 2s. 6d. a week. My answer is they must get help from some source, and this help would go much farther in the widows' house, as they would save on an average (1), say 1s. a week in rent; (2) be able to earn more money by having their children looked after, or save the money they give for having the children "minded"; (3) they could save 2s. a week in firing by having coals at summer prices, instead of ruinous retail winter prices; (4) above all, they would be cared for by Christians, who would themselves get blessing by caring for the fatherless and widows in their affliction.

I am aware that circumstances and rents will vary infinitely. In some cases house rent would be higher, in some lower, but, as a rule, room rent bears some proportion to house rent, and in any case, I contend that money given in relief to widows will be far more profitably expended in a widows' house than in doles which go too often to the public-house, or are insufficient to prevent the break-up of the family in the workhouse.

There are thousands of widows who need help, and many who would be glad to help them more if they had a certainty that their help would be applied wisely, and for the temporal and eternal welfare of the needy and forlorn ones.—Yours,

Radstock.

THE USE OF MONEY.

Sir,—There is a powerful article by Mr. Spurr in your number for Oct. 31 upon the sin of "Mocking God." In the general spirit of that I entirely concur, but I think he hardly understands the operations of commerce sufficiently when he condemns with such severity what he calls "idle money." He says, "There is an enormous amount of idle money reposing in Christian coffers." I much doubt this. An extremely small fraction of the wealth of this country is in the form of "idle money." I doubt if one per cent. of the national wealth can be so described. Nearly all the bank deposits are lent for industrial purposes. Hardly any person really keeps money "idle"; almost all is used, either directly or indirectly, so as to produce interest, and it can scarcely be so used without helping to keep that industrial machine going by which the nation lives. If the wealth which keeps the industrial machine going was withdrawn, millions of people would starve. If a miser hoards up a million, and lodges it at the London and Westminster Bank, it is again lent out for commercial purposes, which are just as beneficial to the country as if the owner of the money had directly employed it himself. I do not say the miser is right in accumulating so much wealth; very likely he is ruining his own soul through covetousness, but he is not guilty of keeping money "idle."

The question of "stewardship" is most important, but it rests on different grounds. It is a question of the best disposition of a man's property. Much capital is most beneficially employed in giving maintenance to the population in useful industries. Were it possible to withdraw that capital from those industries, and leave the people to starve in order that it might be given to foreign missions, it would neither be right nor expedient; it would be like the Jews who said of their money, "It is Corban," i.e., dedicated to the Temple, when they should have maintained their aged parents. Each Christian has to decide with scrupulous care what proportion of his means should be employed for industrial and family purposes, and what should be given specially for religious purposes. I say specially for religious purposes, for the wise and Christian management of a great industry, from which perhaps 1000 families gain their living, as for instance the works of the late Sir Titus Salt, may be as truly according to God's will as the bestowment of the money for foreign missions. If foreign missions could get those vast sums that Mr. Spurr refers to, it is doubtful if the spiritual work would really gain. When the Christian Church came into possession of great wealth in the time of Constantine its spiritual power rapidly declined; and if ten or twenty millions were left to foreign missions, I believe a multitude of parasites would be fostered, and many unreal missionaries would enter the field as a lucrative profession.

This is not said so as to weaken the force of the solemn appeal made to the men of wealth to use it as servants of God. This is most needful teaching, and entirely according to Scripture, but surely there is some misapprehension as to the really useful and necessary function that wealth performs in the economy of national industry.—I remain, yours faithfully, Samuel Smith.

PROTESTANTS AND THE POPE.

Dear Sir,—It is time that the Christian public protested against the folly of Protestants sending letters to the Pope. What are they doing? They are simply bolstering up the power of a man who is hated in Italy, who is regarded as the most subtle and the most dangerous enemy Italy has, and who officially is the head of a Church from which twenty millions of Italians have virtually separated themselves, and who justly regard it as a wicked mundane institution, the great bane of the country.

Italians have often said to me, "The first step towards making a man truthful and honest is to get him outside the influence of a Church that offers him salvation in sin for gold." Professor Mariano, who is not a Protestant, said some time ago, "The Papal Church is the antithesis of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, for it tells me my salvation depends on my receiving the offices of the Church, independent altogether of my personal character. I may be anything I like, and living as I may; that does not touch the question. But I open the Bible, and I learn that it depends on nothing of the kind, but on a change of heart, wrought in me by the Holy Spirit through faith in Jesus Christ."

A frate said the other day to an Italian family that I happened to call on immediately after he had been to see them, "God can never pardon a Protestant or a Jew, no matter how good he may be, because he is outside the true Church, and God will never condemn a Catholic, no matter how wicked he may be, because he is inside that Church." This was said in presence of the mistress of the house and her young children. She looked at him, and said sternly, "Then there is either no God, or God is a wicked Being." The young boys of a school here said the same thing to their professor after confession last Easter. So let the Christian public of England remember that when the Pope crys out against the atheism and infidelity of the Italians, it means simply that they have ceased to believe in the "wicked god" of the Papal Church.

Indeed it is notorious in Italy that men and women who are Papists, who are clericali—in contrast to the bulk of the nation, who are what I may call Catholic-Protestant—are distrusted. And so the press of Italy that once divided the world into Christians and Protestants (by the first term meaning Roman Catholic), now speak of Christians and Clericals, by Christians meaning those who follow Christ, and by Clericals all who adhere to the Pope. It is surely, then, ludicrous and wrong for Protestant Christians to go cringing with the language of sycophancy on their lips, to one who officially represents "spiritual wickedness in high places." I am not speaking of the Pope personally. He may be a good man. Only to my mind the wonder is that if he is such a good man, he should not become a better, and cease to represent a Church that is the enemy of Italy, and, has history as always shown it to be, of humanity.

And then there is this other aspect, in which the conduct of those who approach the Pope is to be regarded. They do an act of discourtesy towards the kingdom of Italy. The Pope is politically the worst enemy Italy has. His occupation, and by that I mean the occupation of the ecclesiastics around him, is mainly, almost exclusively, the harassment of Italy. I have heard of plottings and schemings, of intrigues to stir up internal strife, and to estrange the friendliness of nations from Italy, that recall the treason of the Duke of Norfolk and Ridolfi in the time of Queen Elizabeth. The Pope is simply, politically, a rebel, plotting for the destruction of the country that gives him hospitality. The Government of Italy relieved him of the temporal power that he might be free to attend to spiritual matters, instead of which the ungrateful creature throws the latter to the winds and spends his time in trying to recover a mundane sovereignty that, as the newspapers of Italy repeat in chorus, was destroyed for ever on the 20th of September, 1870. Well might Signor Bovio give to the Pope a motto which Fra Paolo Sarpi gave him long years ago, "My kingdom is of this world."

Those good men who have lately sent petitions to the Pope have identified themselves unwillingly with the cause of rebellion, and with a system the antithesis of Christianity, and have done an act of discourtesy and hostility to the young kingdom of Italy, politically and religiously. Besides, unless the press of Italy is deceived, and unless the general public of Italy is deceived, the famous letter of the Pope's was neither more nor less than a political move in order to throw dust in the eyes of Protestants; and the good honest sincere Christians in England and Scotland who have taken it seriously get only laughed at by the designing men of the Vatican (whose tool the Pope is) for their pains.—I am, yours faithfully, Alexander Robertson, D.D.

Venice, October 30.

HEREDITY.

Dear Sir,—Among the many insidious ways in which morals and religion are either attacked or sapped in current literature, the abuse of the theory of heredity is a notable and lamentable one. In the hands of the Christian, or even of the fair-minded rationalist, this theory (even if true in the crude and unbalanced form in which it is presented) could seldom do harm, as it tells as much for as against moral responsibility. If the evil habits of ancestors have been transmitted in the form of augmented evil tendencies, surely any excuse for sinning founded on this assumption is utterly swept away by regard for posterity, and the bounden duty to cut off the dire entail by a self-denying and godly life, and, as far as possible, to convert the evil inheritance into a good one.

With the Christian writer, moreover, this theory in its modern form will only cause increased emphasis to be laid on the need to be ever seeking fresh supplies of grace, and of overcoming evil by good. Some of the smart articles in the journals of the day, and many modern essays and novels, unexceptionable in other respects, are utterly vitiated by the way in which all idea of sin (as transgression and iniquity for which the perpetrator is at any rate to a great extent responsible) is eliminated. Wickedness is no longer a wrong, it is simply an inherited disease, and, still worse, it is a disease for which the victim is under no obligation to seek a cure!

If the abuse of this theory is thus perilous in the writings of serious men, what may we expect in the flashy productions of the contributors to the so-called Society Press? Yesterday, in the waiting-room of a professional man, I took up a recent number of The World, and came across some very clever verses, in which the writer apostrophises individually, and in a bantering strain, the various ancestors, whose "failings" he supposes himself to have inherited. The last verse concludes thus:—

"So when I try to be a saint
I hear the 'Hereditary Taint',
Say, 'You'd better sin a little,'
And I do."

Such writers are not likely to read or heed rebuke. But we plead with all who have any conscience to weigh well their words when dealing with this modern mode of presenting the old dogma of natural depravity, to view its bearings on all sides, and in proper relation and subordination to other established truths, both natural and revealed.—Yours, etc. E. R. G.

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

Considering the wet weather, there was a fair attendance of friends in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Friday evening, November 8, to bid "God speed" to four new workers who were sailing the next day for South Africa on board the Lismore Castle. The chair was taken by Mr. Thos. B. Miller, chairman of the council. Mr. Arthur Stileman and Mr. Albert Head, members of council, each addressed the meeting, speaking briefly of the work. The singing of "Moment by Moment" brought back the two quiet days held in the East-end, when Rev. Andrew Murray was the means of so much blessing to so many.

The secretary, Mr. Arthur Mercer, spoke of "more prayer" being the Mission's greatest need at the present time. Each of the four workers—Nurse Seal, of Leicester; Miss Apps, of London; Miss Ellis, of Liverpool; and Miss N. S. Heard, of Cork—had a message to those present. The meeting closed with a powerful and telling address from the Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, on Joshua v. 13-15. Throughout the meeting the presence of God was felt.

The South African Pioneer, organ of the Mission, will be issued at 1d. a month, in 1896; it can be ordered from the office of the Mission, 14a, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon, or from Messrs. Marshall Bros.

GOOD TIDINGS FROM PAISLEY.

Mr. McKenzie, evangelist from Campbeltown, has had a fortnight's mission in the Free Martyrs' Church, Paisley. In view of the mission, meetings for special prayer were held. A large band of workers was organised, and, with the ordinary mission workers, the members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour threw themselves heart and soul into the work.

God was faithful to his promise. He gave to Mr. McKenzie, and those associated with him in the special effort, a glad time of rich harvesting. There was no long time of waiting for the "showers of blessing." Night after night a second inquiry meeting had to be held, and it tasked the full strength of every Christian worker in the church to deal with the many who remained behind to ask for help and light and leading. The work continued, in the power of the spirit, for the full fortnight, the interest never flagging and the fruit never failing, when Mr. McKenzie had to leave for Glasgow to take up his work in the east-end of that city.

The minister, Rev. A. Macmillan, assisted by several of his ministerial brethren, continued the work for a third week, and still God kept adding the blessing. At the thanksgiving service the large hall of the church could not accommodate the people who had received spiritual enlightening and stimulus, who came together to praise God for his marvellous goodness.

A large number of young people came under the saving power of the truth. While only one here and there of the older people were moved to openly acknowledge the Saviour, whole seats of younger folks came out for Jesus. It was wonderful too, to see how the missionary spirit of the Gospel laid hold of the young converts. No sooner had they decided for Christ then they set themselves to bring others to Jesus. Next night, a brother, a sister, a companion, a fellow-worker in the mill appeared by the side of the young disciples, to whom they had spoken of Christ; in almost every case the friend waited behind to inquiry meeeting, and only departed after making the great decision.

From the young men and women of the congregation the work has been passed on to the boys and girls in the Sunday-school. There God is claiming the lambs of the flock, and a time of wonderful blessing has fallen to the teachers and their classes. Without any pressure on the part of the superintendent or teachers, the children are waiting Sabbath after Sabbath to be spoken to about salvation. Minister, missionary, elders, and mission workers, in the joy of this wonderful awakening, see only the hand of God in it all, and feel that the work is truly of God's Holy Spirit.

REV. G. C. GRUBB IN MANITOBA.

Accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Campbell and Mr. E. C. Millard, Rev. G. C. Grubb reached Winnipeg on October 10, and were heartily welcomed by friends who had been eagerly expecting them, and praying for a blessing on their work in this city.

Mr. Grubb came to hold two missions in Winnipeg, one at St. George's Church, the other at Holy Trinity Church. As he arrived the archdeaconry of the Diocese of Rupert's Land was holding its sessions in St. George's Church, consequently several of the country clergy were in the city. On the evening of his arrival Mr. Grubb preached the closing sermon to the archdeaconry. He spoke from Eph. iii. 19, with power and directness, a heart-searching sermon, on the knowledge of the love of Christ, which the Holy Ghost alone is able to impart.

The mission in St. George's was from October 12th to 21st. The prayers offered were richly answered in fulness of blessing on all the meetings. Daily increasing numbers of people flocked in to the services morn, noon, and night, till on the last Sunday and the closing Monday the church was too small to contain all who came. The children's meetings held by Mr. Millard, and the Bible readings by Mrs. Campbell were also channels of much blessing.

The second mission, to be held in Holy Trinity Church, from October 26th to November 3rd, will also be concluded before this news reaches England. Prayer is desired for Mr. Grubb's following missions at Chatham, London, and Ingersoll.

EVANGELICAL SCHOOLS OF PISA.

From a very small beginning twenty-six years ago these schools now comprise infant and elementary classes for boys and girls in Cisanello, San Michele, and in the Female Institute in Pisa, in which there is also an evening school during the winter for factory girls.

The daily religious instruction is entirely based on the Bible. The pupils learn to sing Gospel hymns and repeat many texts of Scripture, and although most of them are the children of Roman Catholic or infidel parents, yet at the close of every term the Holy Scriptures are very willingly accepted by the elder pupils as a gift. In this way even Jewesses have received a copy of the Old and New Testaments, and at Christmas each pupil receives an Italian Christmas letter of the C.L. Mission.

Much attention is given to needlework in the girls' classes, and in those of the boys to gardening and manual work in leather, wood, and metals; and the varied characters of this branch of the instruction makes Miss Carruthers' Institute the only one of its kind which exists in Italy.

Miss Carruthers has received special marks of encouragement from the Italian Government. Three years ago the gold medal of merit was conferred on her for her services on behalf of popular education, and the present Minister of Public Instruction addressed a most kind letter to her last spring, showing how highly her schools are appreciated, and giving at the same time a token of his approbation of her graded method of manual work by sending a silver medal to the teacher of it.

It may also be mentioned that recently, on September 20, when Pisa was celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the entrance of the Italian troops into Rome, the military band, which was stationed close to Miss Carruthers' Female Institute, played "God Save the Queen."

Amid these varied tokens of encouragement, Miss Carruthers is at present in much financial trial from the heavy taxation on the school-buildings and income tax on the teachers' salaries, as well as from other causes. It is therefore earnestly hoped that Christians who take an interest in the spread of the Gospel in the "Land of the Papacy" will come to the aid of these old-established schools, so that they may be maintained in their usual efficiency.

Reports, with names of referees, can be obtained from Miss Carruthers, 7, Westover-villas, Bournemouth.

AFFAIRS IN MADAGASCAR.

Your readers may be glad to hear what some of us, who are most interested in Madagascar, are hoping for as to the future of mission-work there under the changed Government. The last few years, and particularly the last few months, have been an anxious time for us, because the shadow of war, with its unknown termination, has been hanging over us. Nevertheless, many have found it impossible to believe that a French Protectorate must prove an unmitigated evil. On the contrary, while sincerely regretting the circumstances, we have seen that something was absolutely necessary to be done on behalf of the oppressed lower classes, who have long suffered, and lately more than ever, through the corrupt government of the country.

Now that, notwithstanding prayer on the part of the Malagasy, and of European interests, a French Protectorate is established, surely it would prove a want of faith in God, who has allowed the country to fall into their hands, and an ungenerous doubt as to the French carrying out their treaty with England as to missions in Madagascar, if we were to anticipate nothing but evil in consequence. We cannot but regret that the French will find it their duty to advance the cause of the Jesuits in preference to that of Protestants; but surely God is able to keep the people if we trust Him.

No doubt our best policy is to be thankful for the great advantages that we hope for in better roads, quicker travelling, and general improvement in the country, and the much-needed better government of the oppressed people. We are also hoping that, in consequence of Christianity becoming less fashionable in Madagascar, our Church members may become, if fewer, more sincere, and that out of what many of us may have feared as an evil, God will bring real good to the people whom we love, and to whose service some of us are devoting our lives. The Sunday Friend. Volume xxi. of this little serial is as bright as the best of its predecessors. There are pictures for the young, and readings for elders as well. The annual volume will take happiness into many a home. (Marshall Bros.)

Hand and Heart. This family, social, and temperance illustrated magazine forms a useful and pleasing volume for fireside reading. The Day of Days annual provides a miscellany of Sunday literature. (2s. each. "Home Words" Office.)

The Silver Link is an attractive monthly for home and school. The fourth annual volume (2s. Sunday-school Union) contains serial stories by E. M. Edwards, G. E. Linford, and Mrs. Haycraft, some excellent sketches and articles, also poetical and musical contributions.

STORY BOOKS.

Tommy at the Zoo. (Nelson & Sons.) This brightly-coloured book for the children will make a capital Christmas gift for the tiny dots, who will find in its coloured plates and amusing verses great delight.

A stirring boy's book is provided in Leaves from a Middy's Log. By A. Lee Knight (Nelson & Sons). This particular midshipman has plenty of exciting adventure, and his story, while wholesome and well written, is just of that character which boys love and read eagerly.

Mr. George Stoneman sends a couple of children's books—Elma and Gordon Stuart, by Mary Ann Topping, a simple story of Scottish village life; and Under the Deep Blue Sea, by Katherine M. Yeo, a fairy story of wonderful adventures in the fish world, with some interesting facts about fishes.

Cormorant Crag: A Tale of the Smuggling Days. By George Manville Fenn (5s. Partridge). These pages are at times exciting to the point of tragedy. It is hoped that few of our boys will be so venturesome as Vince and Mike, who not only ran terrible risks, but involved themselves in quite desperate situations.

The Religious Tract Society issue a number of story books admirably suited for gift books. Amongst these Benzoni's Children (2s.), by Jessie Armstrong, a touching story of two Italian child singers and acrobats; The Stranger Margaret (2s.), by Mary Hampden, a brave young woman who conquered by love and patience a somewhat unruly and wilful family; Little Miss (2s. 6d.), by M. B. Manwell, the tale of a sweet little one—long kept out of her rights by the somewhat familiar expedient of a lost will; but eventually, after wholesome trial, she is secured in her rights and all ends well.

THE MARTYRS OF KU-CHENG.

The widespread sorrow and sympathy awakened so lately by the tidings of the ruthless murders at Ku-cheng, will secure for the memoir before us an eager welcome. Under the simple title, Robert and Louisa Stewart, the author, Miss M. E. Watson, has penned a brief sketch of these devoted missionaries, together with an account of the massacre. In an introductory chapter, Mr. Eugene Stock gives a characteristic narrative of the part taken by Mr. Stewart, as his companion in a missionary tour to the Antipodes, affording ample illustration of Mr. Stewart's singular devotion to, and endurance in the cause of missions. Nor was it mere public advocacy, for in the subsequent chapters this consecrated couple are seen at work among the Chinese. From letters, journals, and reports, most interesting and telling incidents are gleaned, showing the way in which love and patience broke down prejudice and won a hearing for the Gospel; to read these is to gain fresh ideas of the constant self-forgetfulness, all-enduring patience, and burning zeal which go to make up the missionary's life. (Marshall Bros. 3s. 6d.)

LIFE OF MISS TUCKER.

A Lady of England: The Life and Letters of Charlotte Maria Tucker. By Agnes Giberne. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This is a sympathetic record of a devoted life. For forty years "A.L.O.E." wrote books for young and old, nearly a hundred volumes being included in the list. At the age of 54, however, she left her beloved land and kindred to combine mission work in far-off India with her singularly useful literary impulse. For eighteen years she toiled in the East, never once leaving her ministry among Hindu women to seek rest and pleasure among fond friends in England. Her life at Batala, so beautifully simple, is, in reality, the story of the planting of Christianity there. The Church of England Zenana Missionary Society had in her an honorary worker who was an example of faithful perseverance, and the full result of her labour and influence cannot be told, but "the day will declare" it. The letters given in this very readable biography afford a good idea of the disposition, so bright and sincere, of "A.L.O.E.," of whom there are excellent portraits, taken at different periods of her very useful life.

A NEW LIFE OF ST. PAUL.

Saint Paul: His Life and Epistles. By Cunningham Geikie, D.D., LL.D. Two Vols. (6s. each. Nisbet & Co.) Among the many valuable lives of the apostle this deserves to occupy a high position. It is marked by the thoroughness which characterises all Dr. Geikie's works. He succeeds in making his readers acquainted with historical facts which add considerable interest to the Scriptural narrative; and his graphic descriptions of the places visited by the apostle make his book a constant delight. Tarsus and Antioch, the cities of Cyprus and Rome are so real that the reader seems to be in the company of the apostle as he moves from place to place bearing witness for Christ.

It has been too hastily assumed by some that Paul was acquainted with Greek literature because once or twice he quoted from Greek authors. Dr. Geikie is not alone in correcting this mistake. The only quotations from Greek authors are, says Dr. Geikie, "mere proverbial expressions, which needed no acquaintance with the literature of the language." "Of Greek literature, in the ordinary sense, they (the Jews) were proud to know nothing; the abhorrence of it, as heathen, leading in the end, during the last war, to its formal prohibition, the Rabbis issuing a command that no child should learn Greek" (page 88.)

This fact has an important bearing upon the training of theological students now. The apostle exerted his mighty influence, not by the skill which he possessed in dealing with the learning and literature of the day, but by being "a man of one Book"—"mighty in the Scriptures." There was never a more urgent need than to-day for men who "know nothing save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," and who, like Paul, preach this one subject in the power of the Holy Ghost. To follow the apostle through his noble and self-denying life of service; his missionary journeys, with their varied experiences of encouragement and of persecution; his loving care for the churches called into existence through his labours; his faithfulness and independence, yet affectionate sympathy in his intercourse with other apostles—all this is not possible in this brief note. The story is well told in these volumes—probably never better. We commend them to Bible students. They abound with instruction, gathered from all sources by most patient and painstaking labour, and are written with a simplicity and grace of style that makes reading a delight.

Little Rests by the Way, by E. H. G. (Elliot Stock). A cheap edition of a daily portion book, admirably suited to the children.

Eye-Teaching in the Sunday School, by R. W. Sindall, is an illustrated handbook which will be of real service to those workers among the young who use the blackboard and other means of ocular instruction. (1s. 6d. Sunday School Union.)

Japan: Its People and Missions. By Jesse Page. (1s. 6d. Partridge). A very readable work on a subject of widespread interest. The information, gathered from many sources, has been admirably digested, and there are many illustrations.

The Gospel Plan, drawn up by the late Hugh Taylor, M.A., is a compilation presenting fundamental truth in the form of Scripture quotations. The type is large, so that the old may easily read; and that the work supplies a want is clear from the fact that it is in its fourth edition. (1s. Elliot Stock.)

God's Toys. By H. K. (1s. Horace Marshall & Son) is a very touching plea, in lively story form, on behalf of Dr. Bowman Stephenson's Children's Home, and the work done in connection with it. There could be no better object; and it would be difficult to frame a more pathetic bit of advocacy than the writer has given us.

John MacGregor ("Rob Roy.") By Edwin Hodder. We welcome a cheap edition of this deeply interesting biography. Young and old should read it, so bright with incident, and in many ways very instructive. There is a portrait, also numerous illustrations and facsimiles of sketches, etc. (3s. 6d. Hodder Brothers, 18, New Bridge-street, E.C.)

Miss L. T. Meade gives in The Minister (Jarrold & Sons 1s. 6d.), a vivid sketch of a minister who is consecrated to service among the poor. Like many such his salary is small, and his harassed wife is tempted to use her pen in a way which hurts others and brings trouble into the home. The story is one which takes hold of the reader by reason of its firmly drawn characters.

Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster have issued a new large print edition of The Clue of the Maze: A Voice Lifted up on behalf of Honest Faith (1s.). Other works very attractively produced are Words of Warning for Daily Life, and Words of Cheer for Daily Life (2s. each). These publications, all by the late C. H. Spurgeon, will doubtless have the wide circulation which they deserve.

Wayside Christians. By E. W. A capital booklet, administering Scriptural rebuke to a prevalent evil in these days of hurry and rush. Many Christians are so busy with religious undertakings that they afford themselves no time for reflection, and neglect private prayer, and the study of the Word of God. Hence "the fowls" get more than the Husbandman. (Rochdale: "Joyful News" Book Depôt. London: Partridge).

The C.M.S. has issued a Christmas book, Ever Westward through Heathen Lands, by E. M. E. Baring-Gould. The authoress takes the children, to whom she specially addresses herself, through various lands, showing in a telling way how much the Gospel is needed and what the missionaries are endeavouring to do. Its beautiful pictures and lively narrative should greatly quicken missionary interest among young folk. (1s. 6d. Church Missionary House.)

The Making of the Empire. By Arthur Temple. (3s. 6d. Andrew Melrose, 16, Pilgrim-street, E.C.). Here we have the study of our nation's history over sea made positively fascinating. No dry disjointed facts strung together, but "the story of our colonies," graphically told and artistically illustrated. The record is wonderfully comprehensive, and the author does not blink the fact that "many dark blots and foolish blunderings" have marked our national expansion.

When the Sun Riseth, by Harriet E. Colvile, is a book replete with helpful thoughts for those who are seeking spiritual light. Scripture quotations and devout meditation occupy alternate pages, and Christ is the supreme subject. The book is published by Messrs. Nisbet, price 5s.; but, in order to promote its increased circulation, the author offers copies at 2s. each, post free, during November and December from her private address: Miss Colvile, Kempsey, Bournemouth.

Women in the Mission Field. By Rev. A. R. Buckland. (1s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) This useful book opens with a paper on "The Growth of Women's Work," followed by chapters on "The Girl Martyrs of Ku-cheng," "West African Pioneers," and such noble handmaids of Christ as Anna Hinderer, Miss Tucker ("A. L. O. E."), Mrs. Bowen Thompson, and other consecrated women. It is a volume which girls will read, and which may kindle in many a longing compassion over the perishing heathen.

The Homiletic Review maintains its reputation as a magazine of sermonic literature and suggestion. Several new features have been introduced of late, all of them improvements. In the November issue Dr. D. S. Gregory continues his thoughtful articles on "The Preacher and the Preaching for the Present Crisis," and Dr. Harwood Pattison has an important paper on Congregational Worship, dealing in a very generous spirit with such controverted topics as free prayer and liturgical forms. The part contains many valuable sermons and outlines. (1s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons have displayed great taste, as well as originality of design, in their Cards and Souvenirs for the coming Christmas season. They issue an immense assortment of a general character, all artistic and delightful, to cater for old and young, grave and gay. Platinotypes of woodland scenes, animals, classic figures, fine art calendars, with chaste floral embellishments surrounding quotations—some from Scripture, some from the poets; alphabetic and other toy books to delight the little ones, as also the "Art Novelty" and "Dressing" series, comprising a Noah's Ark, with standing cardboard animals and various other sets of figures to exercise the ingenuity of young folks to put together and attire. Among the charmingly-designed illuminated booklets are "Praise Ye the Lord," enumerating the varied works of nature, and "All Hail," in which are treated the two beautiful hymns, "All hail the power" and "How sweet the name." Memory Ties is a chaste little packet of ten autograph cards, with embossed flowers. But a complete idea of Messrs. Tuck's work can only be obtained by consulting their catalogue, which will well repay careful study.

NEW YEAR'S ADDRESSES.

Lady Beaujolois Dent has issued her annual booklet, "Behold" (Drummond's Tract Depôt. 1d.), with pointed thoughts for saved and unsaved. S. W. Partridge & Co. send The Secret Voice, by Rev. E. W. Moore, and Life more Abundantly, by B. Louisa Dent, two useful and seasonable reminders (1d. each).

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Hodder & Stoughton: Lessons in the School of Prayer, by A. T. Pierson, D.D. (2s. 6d.)

From J. F. Shaw & Co.—Arnold Inglehurst, the Preacher, a story of the Fen Country, by Evelyn Everett Green; The Earl's Granddaughter, by Brenda.

From T. Nelson & Sons: Life's Byways and Wayside, by Dr. J. R. Miller (3s. 6d.); Little Frida; A Tale of the Black Forest (1s. 6d.); Margery's Quest (1s.); Tuck-up Songs, by Ellis Watson (1s.).

THE Y.M.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A., Winchester, took place last week. There was a large attendance in the Guildhall, and encouraging report of work.

Mr. Arthur Thomas, of Swansea, has been appointed general secretary of the Eastbourne Y.M.C.A. The secretaryship of the Ryde Association will shortly be vacant.

Mr. W. R. Lane commenced a mission in Dublin on Sunday last, in connection with the Association. A large number of men were present, and the word was with power.

The Stowmarket Association has held a good annual meeting this week, addressed by Mr. W. Hind Smith, who has also met the members of the Cambridge Y.M.C.A. in an interesting gathering.

Mr. J. A. Stooke, of the China Inland Mission, has been visiting the Associations in Gloucester, Lincoln, and Derby, to stir up the missionary interest among the young men. The result has been most encouraging.

Sir Weetman Pearson, Bart., M.P., presided over the annual meeting of the Colchester Association on Wednesday week. He said that if ever the world was to be united in one grand church, it appeared to him it would have to be on the lines of the Y.M.C.A. The membership at Colchester now stands at 125.

The work in connection with the Birkenhead Association shows many encouraging signs. The junior branch is particularly hopeful, the boys attending the various meetings in large numbers. Three Bible classes are conducted every week for members of different branches, the attendance and interest at each being exceptionally good.

The annual tea and public meeting of the Trowbridge Association was held on the 31st ult. The president (Mr. J. Poynton Haden) presided over the latter, and Rev. Henry Dening, of Bristol, gave an excellent address on "Lamp-posts." Revs. A. J. Pearse and W. H. Start also took part. The Association is doing well this winter.

The first of a series of monthly conventions was held in the Association Hall, Leeds, on October 10, when Dr. T. H. White, of Winchester, was the speaker. The second is fixed for Friday, Nov. 15, with Rev. C. Fenwick Ward, of Manchester, as speaker; and the third on December 14, with Rev. F. S. Webster, of Birmingham, as speaker.

On Thursday evening Norwich annual meeting and soirée took place in St. Andrew's Hall under the presidency of Mr. Alderman White. It was reported by the general secretary, Mr. W. Price, that £3000 had been raised, and the building freed from debt, and the membership had increased to a total of 607. The principal speaker was Rev. A. W. Gough, of Highbury.

The inaugural ceremony in connection with the entrance of the Lyons Association into its new and much enlarged premises took place on the 4th inst., under the presidency of a leading banker of the city, M. Cambefort. The meetings were of a large and enthusiastic character. Mr. J. Hughes has accepted the general secretaryship, and promise is given of a wide extension of usefulness.

An eight days' mission is being held at Wycombe House, Hammersmith, by Mr. J. Bell-Chambers, of the Evangelisation Society. The opening meetings on Sunday were attended with much blessing; the limited accommodation of this branch being taxed to the utmost owing to the numbers who attended. Many were impressed and several afterwards decided for Christ. Prayer is asked that many souls may be saved.

The Gospel Lantern Services for lads over fourteen years of age, which were started by the Camden-road Association on Sunday evenings at the close of the open-air services, have greatly exceeded the expectation of those charged with their conduct, both as regards numbers and results. It was most impressive to find, as on a recent Sunday evening, over a hundred of these lads in the large hall, listening with attention for over an hour to the Gospel.

The annual meeting of the Wimbledon Association was held at the Lecture-hall on Monday, November 4, Mr. Albert A. Head presiding. The report read by the secretary (Mr. H. J. Lomer) showed that good work had been done during the past year, the most encouraging features being the good attendance at the prayer meetings, and the deputations of members sent to other Associations, no less than twenty-one visits having been paid to twelve Associations, and much blessing having resulted.

In connection with the Foreign Missionary branch of the Manchester Y.M.C.A., addresses have been given by the Rev. R. Kidd, from West Coast Africa, and Pastor Golia-Mauro, of the Waldensian Church. The Gospel Temperance monthly meeting was addressed by Mr. Donough. The dining-room is filled each Thursday evening for the Bible-reading, followed by the social hour, when new members are introduced to older ones; 384 new members and associates have joined this session.

The secretary of the Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, writes:—"The past summer season has been very successful. Good service has been rendered to a large number of visiting young men, whether introduced by other associations or comparative strangers to the work. Our winter session has commenced and promises well. Bible classes in English and French are conducted, the literary society is strong; the French class under a good instructor will, it is hoped, be a great help to students.

Reports of excellent work are to hand from the associations at Cape Town, Pietermaritzburg, and Johannesburg. The need for association work in South Africa is emphasised by the report made the other day to the Colonial Missionary Society by Rev. D. Burford Hooke, who has recently returned from a visit thither. He said that "although Johannesburg was a city only of a few years growth, its cemetery contained 4,000 graves, and the majority of these graves contained the bodies of young Englishmen. To the colonies thousands of young Englishmen go every year, and surely these had a great claim upon all at home."

A real revival has commenced in the work of the New Cross (London) Y.M.C.A. On Sunday morning, Nov. 3rd, sixty men listened with deep interest to an address from Rev. E. J. Kennedy. In the afternoon thirty men stayed for tea after the Bible class. Much of the success of the day might be traced to the 7.30 a.m. prayer meeting, at which a good number were present. The prospects of the association generally are brightening, and many new features are meeting with much success. Greek and ambulance classes are being formed, and a Sunday-school teachers' preparation class has been started. The debating society fills the hall with young men every Monday evening.

The annual conference of the French Y.M.C.A.'s has taken place at Nîmes under the presidency of Mons. Rouvier, a representative of one of the best known Protestant families, and proved a very helpful gathering. Several members of the Central International Committee, whose headquarters are at Geneva, were present. The occasion afforded an excellent opportunity for the discussion not only of matters affecting the French associations, but of questions relating to the work in several of the principal Continental countries. The most important resolution of the conference was one under the terms of which the headquarters of the French National Committee will be removed from Lyons to Paris. Lyons, however, will still be regarded as the radiating centre for work in the south. The report presented by the National committee showed a considerable increase in the number of associations and membership.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A week's special mission has been conducted by Miss E. Wilkinson at the Association's rooms, Sydenham Hill.

A sale of work at the Percy Institute, King's Cross, realised £15 18s. 4d. Nearly all the articles were made and given by the members.

The Finstown branch, Firth, held its opening meeting for the winter at the Public School, when Mrs. McLaren Dunning gave an address on "Praise."

At the Tower Hamlets' branch, Mile-end, Miss Morley gave last week an account of her visit to Palestine. The lecture was illustrated with lime-light views. Many passages of God's Word were explained by word and picture, and all felt that a delightful and profitable evening had been spent.

The third annual meeting of the Henley branch was held in the Town Hall. There was a Bible-reading in the afternoon, followed by tea, and in the evening a public meeting, when a fairly large audience was present. Rev. John Taylor presided, and addresses were given by Mrs. Huntley, Miss Blake (of Reading), and others.

Miss Whitwell, president of the North of England Division, addressed two meetings of the Y.W.C.A. in Glasgow last week. She spoke at the afternoon meeting of the West End branch, Mrs. R. Hope Robertson presiding, and also took part with Mrs. Oatts in the Thursday evening meeting, at the Central Institute, 80, Bath-street.

Commander Lowry, R.N., presided over the annual meeting of the Falmouth Y.W.C.A., the Town Hall being filled. The report, read by Mr. F. J. Bowles, stated that the branch was flourishing. Membership statistics showed that there are twenty-two hon. associates, and eighteen working members; fifty belonged to the Prayer Union, whilst associates numbered forty-eight, and juniors fifteen; total 153.

Speaking at a large meeting held in the Coates Opera House, Kansas, Mayor Davis said: "During my term of office I have had an opportunity to study the charitable institutions of the city, and none has done more than the Y.W.C.A. toward relieving the sufferings of the poor. A year ago I had many applicants for assistance—there are not so many now, for Kansas City is again prospering—and none came forward more readily than this institution."

The annual meeting of the Reading branch was held in the Abbey Hall (by kind permission of Messrs. Sutton). The hall was beautifully decorated with plants, water-colour drawings, and engravings, kindly provided by Mrs. A. W. Sutton. Miss Blanche Pigott gave a Bible-reading in the afternoon. At the evening meeting Miss J. Greene, of Midgham, presided, and spoke of the advantages of the Association. Miss Pigott and Miss Gay gave addresses.

Brixton branch Y.W.C.A. held its fourteenth anniversary on Nov. 28 at Effra Hall. Mr. Charles E. Tritton, M.P., presided. The report of the year's work was read. The financial statement showed a balance on the right side of £3 0s. 2d. Miss Morley (Central Y.W.C.A.) spoke of the work generally. Revs. W. Horne, W. R. Mowll, C. Brown, J. Douglas, and W. Pettman spoke of the work in the immediate neighbourhood. Many of them have taken an interest in the work, and watched its growth since the commencement. In spite of rain and fog, the hall, holding over 200, was full. There are 252 members, of whom 198 are total abstainers. There have been sixteen boarders during the year, two at present in the Institute. It is hoped to have a sale Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 4 and 5, at three o'clock. Contributions received by the hon. sec., M. E. Garrell, 6, Tunstall-road, Brixton.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The societies of the Exeter and District Union held a meeting last week, at which over 300 were present.

In Adelaide, at a recent C.E. Convention, over twenty young men and women expressed themselves desirous of going out for Christ into foreign lands.

Rev. F. E. Harry, of Bathurst-street Church, Sydney, has been elected president of the New South Wales Christian Endeavour Union, which comprises 300 societies, with a membership of about 10,000.

"For Christ in All Things" is the motto adopted by a South African Endeavour Society. "I promise Him"—not the pastor, the elders, or any one of my fellow Christians—but I promise Him, the Lord Jesus.

Several American Presbyteries have been organising the Y.P.S.C.E.'s within their bounds with very satisfactory results, attaching their interest more firmly to the home and foreign missions of the denomination.

It was a source of much gladness to the workers in the Sunday-schools and the Christian Endeavour Societies at Graham-street, Birmingham, when on Sunday week, in the presence of a large congregation, no less than ten youthful Endeavourers and Sunday scholars confessed Christ in baptism.

The third annual convention of Nottingham C.E. societies was held on Saturday in the Woodborough-road Baptist Chapel, Rev. J. F. Makepeace in the chair. Rev J. Gair gave an address on "Our Pledge, and What we Mean by It," and Rev. G. H. James read a paper on "Christian Endeavour and Good Citizenship."

LODGING-HOUSE WORK.—The annual report of the Spitalfields Lodging-house Band tells of constant work during the past year among the wretched inmates of the common kitchens. Instances are given of genuine results in conversion and reclamation. During the winter free breakfasts are given to the starving, also teas intended to win the lowest class of girls. The secretary is Mr. Millership, 87 Old Montague-street, E.

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS.—The anniversary of this branch of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society was held at the headquarters, London Dock, E., on Thursday last, and was attended by a large number of seamen and others. Mr. Wm. Green, of Bickley, presided; as a Christian and temperance shipowner, he showed the needs and advantages of Gospel temperance to all following the seafaring calling. Rev. G. J. Hill testified to the growth and usefulness of this work, and cited case after case to show what great things God had done through its instrumentality. Mr. Stocks, of the Seamen's Institute, Southwick, Rev. E. T. Beckett, of the Pastors' College, Mrs. Hill, and others, also took part in the meeting, at the close of which ten seamen signed the pledge. Among the men present were six Scotch seamen, several of them with plaistered faces and bandaged heads. They had been paid off the previous day with about £70, but "all through a drop of drink," as they said, they had been robbed of every penny and half murdered by a gang of brutal roughs, who make it their business to plunder seamen in and about Ratcliff Highway. Four of these Scotch seamen signed the pledge, and of two of them there appeared great hope of even better things.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

THE anniversary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held on Sunday and Monday, when Rev. C. J. Procter, of Cambridge, attended, and gave an account of work in Islington, where he was able to do such good service through the help of the Society.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall is taking the "Prayers of our Lord" as the subject of his Sunday evening Greek Testament Readings, which are proving, as usual, very helpful to those who attend.

It seems a great pity that lovers of Evangelical truth are so slow to respond to the call for funds on behalf of the Hannington Hall. The need of a centre for Evangelical work is very great, and if only those whom God has blessed with means could come and see the proof, the need, they would quickly help in this work. The pressure and inconveniences of present arrangements are so great that God's cause is being hindered for want of room to expand and grow.

Dr. Sanday's last lecture was a very helpful and valuable presentation of the doctrine of the Trinity in the New Testament, and could not but confirm the minds of the hearers by its forcible and cumulative proofs.

A conference and meeting were held last week in connection with the Oxford British Women's Temperance Association and the Oxfordshire Band of Hope and Temperance Union. The object of the two gatherings was to aid the new Inebriate Home at Duxhurst, of which an interesting account was given by Dr. Sarah Anderson Brown, the secretary.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Sunday last the University sermon was delivered by Rev. Moore Ede, honorary Canon of Durham, who is the Hulsean lecturer for this year. His subject was, "Some Social Problems of Town Life, and the Attitude of the Church towards them." The address was a powerful one, and will long be remembered.

Colonel Macgregor is well known as a speaker to many Cambridge undergraduates. A large number took the opportunity of hearing him at the Alexandra Hall on Sunday evening.

At the Nonconformists' Union on Sunday week Mr. N. C. Home, of Trinity Hall, read a very able paper on "The Society of Friends." From what he said one would gather that this body (although their numbers have fallen in previous years) is now on the increase.

On Friday Canon Girdlestone addressed the meeting of the Cambridge Missionary Union, giving an account of the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

During the past week a Church Army mission and colportage van, named "The Ely," was dedicated for work in River-lane. A short service was held, and the address was given by Archdeacon Emery. The van was presented by Rev. Herbert Alston.

The annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held in the Guildhall on Monday, November 11. Mr. C. F. Foster, J.P., presided, Professor Ryle and Rev. Wesley Dawson, of Highbury, giving addresses.

DURHAM.

On Tuesday, November 5, at the fortnightly meeting of the C.M.S., Rev. W. C. Whiteside gave a most instructive account to a well-attended meeting of his missionary work in Bombay hill country. He gave a careful description of the four classes of people among whom he worked, Mohammedans, Parsees, Hindoos, and the hill tribes. What is needed is a greater supply of men to preach the Gospel. Mr. Whiteside strengthened his appeal by giving instances of men such as Mr. Munro, late Chief Commissioner of Police, who have gone to the field to sow, and work in sure hope of the gathering in.

Rev. Donald Walker also addressed some remarks of a very direct character to the men present. He urged upon them to realise the duty laid upon them by God, to go and preach the Gospel to the heathens if they felt the call to do so.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The Araucanian Mission, which this society has so long desired to set on feet, is at length fairly launched. Rev. C. A. Sadlair, of Manitoba, has, by this time, it is hoped, joined the mission party, of whom he has been appointed leader. Messrs. Walker and Wilson, the two medical missionaries, are amply furnished with instruments and appliances, and provided with medicines. Mr. P. Class has already sent home interesting accounts of work in the Toldos, full of the promise of fruit in the near future.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Mr. GEORGE CLARKE has been conducting a mission in Springburn, Glasgow, with tokens of blessing.

The death is recorded of Mr. Alexander Menzies, who left Perth in 1891 for mission work in China.

Rev. Thomas Connellan, of Dublin, has been addressing meetings in Scotland on Gospel work among Irish Roman Catholics.

During her recent visit to Scotland Lady Henry Somerset addressed large meetings in Dundee and Edinburgh on the temperance question.

The late Mr. John Smith M'Andrew, of 18, Royal-crescent, Glasgow, has bequeathed £1000 to Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes at Bridge of Weir.

The Scotch Secretary of State has addressed an important circular to magistrates, strongly recommending a less harsh treatment of juvenile offenders.

The Aberdeen Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life is announced to be held Nov. 17-20. Earnest prayer is requested for abiding blessing.

The Glasgow Free Church Presbytery have a scheme on hand which embraces the erection of twelve new churches in the city and suburbs, at a cost of £84,000.

The twelfth anniversary of the Cowcaddens F.C. Mission was held in Glasgow last week. Rev. W. Ross, the pastor, was able to report that 4397 meetings had been held without a single break. There are now five centres of work in operation, embracing seventy-six services a week.

The death is announced of Rev. Dr. John Ainslie, who was appointed minister of Martyrs' Free Church, St. Andrews, nearly fifty years ago, and for thirty years ministered to the congregation. Twenty years since he was compelled by advancing age to give up active ministerial work, but he still retained his connection with the congregation.

A crowded meeting was held on November 8, in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, convened by "The Council of Women's Trades," under the presidency of Dr. Jas. A. Campbell, M.P. The principal speakers were Lady Henry Somerset, Lady Helen Munro-Ferguson, Sir John Gorst, M.P., and Prof. Geo. A. Smith, who addressed the audience on questions concerning women's industries and conditions of labour. Feeling references were made by the chairman and Sir John Gorst to the critical position of the shipbuilding industry of the country.

Rev. David Baron, who has been conducting a short mission in Glasgow, delivered, on November 5, a most interesting lecture on "Facts about the present position of the Jewish people." After dealing with statistics relating to the rapid natural increase of the Jewish nation in recent years, he sketched the growth of the national idea, and described the remarkable association called the "Chovevi-Zion." Many facts were also given in relation to the past and present history of Israel.

At the noon prayer-meeting in Glasgow, Mr. Baron told an incident of the preceding Saturday. Passing through the streets of Glasgow, he encountered a party of Jewish emigrants. He spoke to them in German, and invited them to come to the meeting in the Bonar Memorial Hall. An hour before the time of meeting, ten of the emigrants appeared at the Hall. Mr. Baron sat down with them, showed them a New Testament, and read the 15th chap. of Luke, explaining it to them in Yiddish. None of them had even seen a New Testament before, and their exclamations of wonder as the reading went on were very striking. They remained to the meeting which followed, which formed a perfect contrast to the noisy scenes so frequent two years ago when the hall was opened. There was quiet hearing throughout, not a single voice being raised in objection.

EASTBOURNE.—A social meeting was held under the auspices of the Y.P.S.C.E., Ceylon-place, Eastbourne, on Guy Fawkes night, as a counter attraction to the low carnival held in the town. The meeting extended from six to eleven, the whole time of the fete outside, and the proceedings were greatly enjoyed.

SOUTH LAMBETH.—Mission work was begun at Wheatsheaf Hall about ten years ago by Mr. W. S. Caine, which has how grown into a hive of Christian activity. A church has been gathered from the neighbourhood consisting of 220 members. There are Sunday-schools, Bible classes, mothers' meetings, band of hope, Christian Endeavour Society, working men's meetings, etc. All these are carried on by voluntary helpers, under the superintendence of Mr. Caine, who is the recognised pastor. A seven days' mission has lately been concluded by Rev. R. Balgarnie, which has resulted in the ingathering of many souls. As the present premises have become delapidated and totally inadequate to growing requirements, plans have been obtained for the erection of a new hall, at an estimated cost of about £4000, towards which £2500 has already been collected.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

REV. DOUGLASS REID presided at the fifth annual meeting at Braughing Hall, which has been opened by Rev. W. Barnes as a coffee-room at Ware, Herts, as a counter-attraction to the public-house. It was mentioned that during the last year 9636 customers had spent on an average about 1s. 11½d.

In Niger and Yoruba Notes, Dr. Harford Battersby makes an earnest appeal for energetic action in support of Bishop Tugwell's efforts to meet the great evils of the liquor traffic in West Africa. To this end he devotes a considerable portion of his space to exposing the evils wrought by strong drink among the natives.

Lady Henry Somerset and Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Rhode Island, are announced as the speakers at the inaugural meeting of the North Metropolitan Union, B.W.T.A., to be held on Friday evening, November 15th, at Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel, the pastor, Rev. J. R. Wood, in the chair. The union, which has recently been formed, includes over twenty branches of the association. In the afternoon of the same day, Mrs. Eva McLaren will preside at a public conference at the same place, and Mrs. Pearsall Smith and others will take part.

Perhaps in no other town of the same size and population is temperance work carried on with a greater degree of energy and zeal than in Wimbledon, a statement which the many important and successful demonstrations which have been held during recent years will fully justify. On Saturday week another of these movements was inaugurated at the Drill Hall, taking the form of a ten-days' mission. No less than nineteen different temperance bodies are taking part in the mission, which is being supported by the clergy, Nonconformist ministers, and doctors generally.

The rapid increase of alcoholism in France is not to be ignored. The following speaks for itself: "The plans for the construction of a fifth lunatic asylum in the Department of the Seine are under consideration. The asylum will be devoted especially to drunkards." We quote from The Signal. So much for the north, now for the south: "The consumption of spirituous liquors in Marseilles has attained an average of seven litres per head of its population (a litre is not quite a quart), or about 600 little glasses each, and the number of drinking shops is 3955, or one to every eighty-three persons."

The twenty-second Annual Convention of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union has just been held at Baltimore, Maryland. Miss Frances E. Willard was re-elected president. Delegates attended from every part of the States, some coming as many as 5,000 miles in order to be present. The growth of this great organization can be measured by the fact that seventeen years ago, when the annual Convention was held in that city, only thirteen States were represented. Fifty States and territories have this year sent their delegates. The idea of a publishing house belonging to the Society had not been conceived, now, one hundred and eighteen million pages of literature are sent out from the Woman's Temple, Chicago, per year.

The B.W.T.A. held its autumnal meetings in Plymouth last week. Miss Weston and others offered a warm welcome to Lady Henry Somerset, who, in the course of an eloquent address, said she did not suppose there was anybody sanguine enough to believe that even if the proposals of the late Government had been passed into law that the inhabitants of many towns would have voted for prohibition, but a great principle would have been established. It was a principle which was dreaded by those engaged in the trade, because they knew there was growing up in the nation a great army of boys and girls who were trained to understand that the noblest gift of God to man was a clear brain, and that the truest weapon of the working classes was a steady hand. Drunken as the nation might be, and bound in the chains of the liquor traffic as it might appear, it was little hands who would loose them by-and-by, it was the young voices who would proclaim the victory.

LLANDAFF DEAF AND DUMB SCHOOL.—The thirty-second year of this institution has had its own trials, but the work has proceeded with steady success. The report says:—"The year opened with 31 pupils and closed with 31—one having left for the local School Board class, and an old pupil returned, and, judging by the applications, it seems as if the numbers required will be kept up. The advantages to most deaf-mute children of being placed in a well-ordered institution are very great. They receive a useful education and careful training in good ways by those who understand their weaknesses and temptations. They are comfortably housed, warmly clothed, well fed, have plenty of fresh air exercise, occupation and amusement." The superintendent of the school is Mrs. Alexander Melville.

OBITUARY.

ISAAC BROWN, KENDAL.

Friends everywhere will learn with deep sympathy the falling asleep of this servant of Christ, who has had much to do with the mental and spiritual training of many of the older men among the present generation of Friends. For the past few months there had been evidences, from time to time, of failing health, but less than a fortnight ago he seemed stronger, and wrote that he felt better than he had done since his illness in the summer. A short time spent in the garden on Lord's day, 27th ult., when it was bright but very cold, brought on a severe chill, and during the rest of the week he was very ill with bronchitis. About four a.m. on Sunday week his family were summoned, and he appeared to recognise them, but soon lost consciousness, and passed away at eight o'clock the same morning, in his ninety-third year.

MR. CHARLES TYLER.

With regret we hear of the death of Mr. Charles Tyler, one of the vice-presidents of the Sunday-school Union, which took place on Saturday afternoon, November 2, at his residence, "Elberton," New West End, Finchley-road. Mr. Tyler took a deep interest in all Sunday-school work, and was recently the instrument of conveying to the council of the Sunday-school Union property to the value of several thousand pounds, devoted to the benefit of lady teachers in Sunday-schools, in connection with the Home of Rest at Hastings. He was for many years, and until quite recently, the chairman of the North-West London Auxiliary Sunday-school Union. As president of that auxiliary, his liberality and kindness enabled the committee to distribute hundreds of bread and coal tickets amongst the very poor surrounding the various schools.

REV. J. S. BRIGHT, D.D.

On Monday week there passed away at Rose Hill, Dorking, a distinguished minister, Rev. J. S. Bright, D.D., who was for nearly forty years the pastor of the Congregational Church in the town of Dorking, but retired from the ministry a few years ago. He had a reputation as a preacher and speaker. Dr. Bright will be remembered as the compiler of "The History of Surrey Congregationalism" and "The History of Dorking," and other works. A thorough classical scholar, he was constantly reading his Bible in the original Hebrew and Greek. He had a splendid memory, and his wide reading made his discourses exceeding interesting. Dr. Bright was one of a party, which included the veteran Dr. Stoughton (still happily living at a great age), which visited the Holy Land several years ago; he brought back some interesting mementoes from Palestine.

MRS. EVERETT-GREEN.

At the ripe age of seventy-seven, Mrs. Mary Ann Everett-Green—mother of Miss Evelyn Everett-Green, the writer of many story books, and herself a busy author. She was the daughter of a Wesleyan minister, whose friendship with James Montgomery, the poet, favoured her literary aspirations. In 1841 she found access to the great historical manuscript collections, as well as to the libraries of London. The first volume of her "Lives of the Princesses of England from the Norman Conquest" appeared in 1849, and the last in 1855. She edited "Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies," "The Diary of John Rous," and "The Letters of Queen Henrietta Maria." She married Mr. G. P. Everett-Green, an artist well known in Hull and London, whom she survived for some years. Mrs. Everett-Green was entrusted by the Master of the Rolls with the task of calendering State papers in the Record Office.

REV. WILLIAM BALFOUR, D.D., EDINBURGH.

This well-known minister, who had been pastor of the Holyrood Free Church for forty-six years, fell asleep on Friday evening at his residence in Edinburgh. Born in 1821, he was a student under Dr. Chalmers, and took an earnest part in the Disruption Movement. Since his ordination in 1848 he has done earnest and faithful work, maintaining around him a congregation that preferred soundness to sensationalism, and that was unstinted in its admiration of the earnest preacher, the genial and devoted pastor, the friend of the poor, and the warm-hearted guide of youth. But as every one who takes interest in Scottish Church matters is aware, Dr. Balfour's influence made itself felt far beyond the confines of his parish. In every controversy which he felt affected the principles upon which the Free Church was founded he had a message to deliver, and he delivered it fearlessly, contending for principle, undismayed by any odds. He was a stout defender of purity of doctrine and worship. The inroads of Romanism was a favourite theme of his; "innovations" that appeared to infringe the spirit of Protestantism had in him an uncompromising foe. He took an active personal interest in the Scottish Reformation Society and its work. In the subject of education, too, his interest was keen. A few years ago the University of Edinburgh conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.D. On that occasion Professor Taylor introduced him "as a pastor whose efforts for good had been unceasing, whose weight of character and influence had grown with the advance of years, and as a public-spirited man, whose career had been alike honourable and exemplary in its earnestness, courage, and conviction and consistency."

REV. CHARLES MARSON, CLEVEDON.

Rev. Charles Marson, Vicar of Clevedon, passed away at the vicarage, somewhat suddenly, on Friday last. Although advanced in years, he was actively engaged in ministerial work up to the day of his departure, two sermons having been preached by him on the previous Sunday. He also attended a temperance meeting in his infant school on the evening before his death, when he appeared to be in good health. However, at five o'clock on Friday morning he was seized with an attack of colic, and passed away in the afternoon. A deep gloom has been cast over the whole town, where the vicar was beloved by all classes, among whom he had lived and laboured for twenty-five years.

Mr. Marson was born in Southwark in 1822, and was brought up at Clapham by a widowed mother, at the feet of Charles Bradley. He was at Oxford at the time of the great backwash from the Tractarian Movement, when Newman was about leaving the Church of England. Like many of his contemporaries, he threw in his lot with the Evangelicals then, and never deserted them. He was at one time travelling secretary of the Church Missionary Society, then held the living of Christ Church, Birmingham, with a stall at Lichfield, and for the last twenty-four years was vicar of Clevedon. Both in the pulpit and on the platform the late beloved vicar displayed remarkable powers, and his name, as a speaker at a Church Missionary, a Church Pastoral Aid, or a Protestant meeting—especially a Church Association meeting—was always an attraction. In his parish, which was carefully organised, he was a diligent pastor, and, without the employment of worldly methods, he raised large sums annually for the various Evangelical societies. Thus the returns to the Church Missionary Society from the Clevedon auxiliary for last year amounted to £157.

The sudden death of Mr. Marson cast a deep gloom over the proceedings of the Autumnal Conference of the Church Association.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Framfield.—Mr. Tarrant, of the Evangelisation Society, lately concluded a two weeks' mission in Framfield, Sussex, and friends are asked to unite in thanksgiving for blessing given in answer to prayer.

Clavering.—A ten days' mission in the barn at Clavering has been concluded by Mr. A. J. Mahomet. Praise is desired for much blessing, and manifest tokens of God's presence and power. Some souls openly sought salvation.

Rotherhithe.—A ten days' mission has been held in the Sailors' Rest, Rotherhithe. Great power has been manifest, and souls have been blessed. We have had great joy of seeing strong men come to Christ; others who have been in the services, have now gone away to sail the mighty deep, deeply impressed, and only eternity will reveal if these have decided for Christ.—George R. Hood.

Castleford.—A mission among the glass-blowers and potters here, has been completed by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh. The meetings were held in the Congregational Church. Those for men only on Sunday afternoon, and women only on Monday evenings were attended by over 700 on each occasion. Much blessing has attended the effort. The evangelist commences a mission at Sheffield on Sunday next.

Hornsey.—Mr. George Goodman, of the Children's Special Service Mission, held eight-days' services from Sunday, Oct. 27 to Nov. 3, at Campsbourne (Mission) Chapel, Hornsey. The meetings generally were well attended. The Lord answered the prayers of the workers, and blessed his servant's words. A number of children and young people definitely declared themselves as on the side of Christ. Signs of inquiry are not wanting among others.

Montrose.—An interesting and very helpful eight days' mission, conducted by Rev. James C. Smith, late of Dufftown, was recently conducted in Free St. Paul's, Montrose. The meetings awakened widespread interest, and were well attended, many bearing testimony to having been much quickened and refreshed by Mr. Smith's clear and instructive expositions of Scripture, and the tender and impressive manner in which the Gospel was presented.

George S. Sutherland, Minister.

Sheffield.—Mr. A. A. Harmer closed a mission on Thursday at Abbeydale Congregational Church, Sheffield, when a large number of converts were introduced to the Y.P.S.C.E., who have been working splendidly through the mission. The afternoon meetings for Bible reading and prayer were well attended. On Sunday over 500 men came to the afternoon service to hear an address given by Mr. Harmer, and in the evening many decided for Christ. Mr. Harmer is now at Killamarsh, Rotherham.

Aldershot.—Mr. Monro Collings concluded his mission for men only at the Y.M.C.A., Aldershot, on Friday last. The meetings were well attended throughout, and the interest sustained to the last. On Thursday, when the evangelist dealt with the subject of purity, the room was crowded with an earnest company of men, and many of them praise God for the burning words which fell from the speaker's lips. His visit has been most opportune, and a great blessing to many. S. D. Harland.

PERSONALIA.

Pastor C. E. Faithfull wishes it to be known that his new address is Pasco de Areneros 6, Madrid, Spain.

Mr. D. A. Hunter sailed for South Africa on Saturday. He desires prayer for a blessing on the passengers per ss. Norman, and that the books given away and any talks or meetings may be used of God.

Miss Frances E. Willard has been re-elected president of the W.C.T.U. of the United States. Through her influence the order hereafter will, while retaining its Christian basis, be more hospitable than it has in the past to co-operation for moral ends with adherents of other religions.

Rev. Peter Mackenzie has been taken seriously ill. He was to have preached and lectured in Brunswick Church, Leeds, on Wednesday week, but a telegram came from Dewsbury stating that he had caught cold. Word was received from his daughter later on that this had developed into a severe case of congestion of the lungs.

Mr. W. H. Mody, of Bombay, writes us that Mrs. Mody is very seriously ill, and entreats prayer that if it be the will of God her life, so precious to him, may be spared. Our readers will remember her name—Teresa Isette Mody—as the writer of some beautiful short poems in our columns from time to time. We are sure they will unite with us in remembering the suffering wife and the sorrow-stricken husband at the throne of grace.

Dr. W. W. Bremner is leaving Toronto for South America vid England, and is accompanied by Mr. George L. M. Brown. These brethren will work in South America under the auspices of the South American Evangelical Mission. While in England, Dr. Bremner will be glad to speak on the work in South America. He may be reached by letter addressed to the care of Mr. A. Gilmour, 3, Orchard-hill, Hamilton, N.B.

A BIBLE WAGON FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

A new Bible Wagon for the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society has been dedicated at East London, South Africa, the Mayor presiding. Rev. J. Ferguson, as local secretary of the Bible Society, said that a great work had already been done for the circulation of God's Word in the scattered parts of the Eastern district, and that with the new wagon it was hoped a still greater work would be accomplished. Mr. Beaupré (the colporteur) would be able not only to carry his stock-in-trade with him but also to live in the wagon. He would carry a stock of literature to circulate in the homes of those who would be unable to obtain them. His audience could form no idea of the difficulty experienced in isolated parts of the country in obtaining such books.

The Mayoress having unveiled the wagon, Mr. Joseph Beaupré said he had been engaged in colportage work for six years, first of all in South Wales, and later on by a mission expressly for the people of the Cape Government Railways. Three years ago he landed in East London with five cases of Bibles, and proceeded on a house-to-house visitation with signal success. At this time a gentleman suggested a wagon as being the best means of carrying the books, and offered to give him two oxen, which he promptly accepted. The wagon was procured, but it succumbed to hard work. He fervently trusted that the new wagon would be a blessing all along the frontier. Others spoke briefly, including Mr. J. B. Hellier, Rev. G. A. Theobald, and the Mayor. The wagon, which will be drawn by eight oxen, has been strongly constructed specially for the rough work of the frontier roads. Prayer will be made that its itinerations may become a blessing in many lonely homesteads where the sound of the Gospel has never reached.

FINSBURY PARK WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.—The annual report shows that the past year's work was the most extensive and satisfactory in the experience of the institute, and that the new premises have well answered the requirements expected of them. The prospects of the coming winter's work appear to be no less encouraging, in fact there is every reason to believe that the results will even surpass those of last year. The operations are too numerous to be detailed here, but all are directed towards the well-being of the lads. Funds are urgently needed, the committee being now £100 behind on the general expenses. The secretary is E. W. Pope, Clifton Hall, 44, Poole's Park, Seven Sisters-road, N.

CONSUMPTION,
AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.
INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

102nd INTERVIEW

With Mr. JOHN GLASSFORD, 34, West Muir-street, Parkhead, Glasgow, relative to his Wife and others.

CONSUMPTION IN ADVANCED STAGE.

This case has not been published before.

It does one good to meet a gentleman of the stamp of Mr. Glassford—earnest, enthusiastic, ever ready to help those less favourably circumstanced than himself. For many years past he has recommended to all sufferers from chest complaints the treatment so long practised by Mr. Congreve.

"Mrs. Glassford's case was the first that came under my immediate notice" (Mr. Glassford told me). "She had been a long time ill, and the verdict of the three doctors who attended her was that she was in Consumption. It was in the autumn of 1884 that I communicated with Mr. Congreve; at that time she had kept her bed for nine weeks. She had bad night-sweats, was much wasted, and in fact, showed all the usual symptoms of the disease. By the end of the following March she was so much better that she decided to cease taking the medicine—too soon, as the result proved, for the following winter we had to go over the ground again. However, in the result—steadily persevering with the medicine, never missing a dose, she progressed to complete recovery. She caught cold once or twice after, and took the medicine again; but since then she has been perfectly well." (Mrs. Glassford's appearance well bore out this statement.) "About five years ago, when a doctor was examining me for life insurance, I asked him also to examine my wife; and when he had done so, he said her lungs were perfectly sound."

In answer to a question as to whether he had used the medicine in his family, Mr. Glassford said:—

"Yes; my son took it for bronchitis, and got well rapidly. We have also given it to the children when they had whooping-cough, with good results. Besides this I have recommended the treatment to many other persons, and have known many instances of great benefit. One case in particular—a man living in Townhead."

Mr. Glassford readily gave me permission to publish this account of his experience of Mr. Congreve's medicine.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, AND ASTHMA.

Success of Dr. Alabone's Treatment.

D. T. Young writes:—"Your treatment for Consumption has proved a great success in my own case—after having been given up by several eminent physicians. I am convinced, not only by my own experience, but from the evidence of other cases I have seen, that it is the remedy so long sought after."

Medical men and others cordially give an opinion entirely in favour of Dr. Alabone's treatment.

Full particulars and the details of a large number of cases pronounced incurable which have been cured, and a mass of information of vital importance to those suffering from chest disease, are given in the Cure of Consumption, 25th Edition. Price 2s. 6d., post free, by Edwin W. Alabone, M.D., Phil., U.S.A., D.Sc., ex.-M.R.C.S. Eng. by Exam., 1870, Lynton House, Highbury Quadrant, London, N.

Notes and Comments.

INVITATIONS having come to Rev. Andrew Murray to address members of certain Prayer Unions before leaving for South Africa, it has been thought that the best way of responding thereto, and at the same time of meeting the wishes of many friends, would be to have a day of united prayer at Exeter Hall, Strand, on Thursday, December 5. Each meeting would be presided over and addressed by Rev. A. Murray, and the subjects proposed are:—11 a.m., "Love and Fellowship"; 3 p.m., "Prayer and Intercession"; 7 p.m., "Working and Waiting." This will be the last occasion upon which Rev. A. Murray will meet in fellowship with Christians in London, as he expects to sail for South Africa on Dec. 7. Further information may be obtained from Mr. Albert A. Head, Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W.

We are grieved to see that an attempt is being made to pass "A Project of Law," which is really a C. D. Act, through the "States" (or Legislature) of Guernsey. There seems to be a party strongly in favour of this system, which England has repealed as immoral, unconstitutional, and dangerous to health, while the people generally appear to be indifferent, probably owing to ignorance. Some of the friends of social purity are on the spot trying to spread knowledge and stimulate interest—Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., Mrs. Wilson, and Dr. Nevins—but the time is short, as the question will come before the "States" on the 29th inst. Can any of our friends aid in any way? Literature, which can be obtained from Miss Forsaith, British Committee, &c., 1, King-street, Westminster, might be sent to friends on the island. The local opponent of this latest attempt to establish a wicked system at our very door is Mr. A. N. Le Cheminant, High School, Guernsey.

The conference which the Friends have been holding in Manchester cannot but do good. It is a sign of life and of longing for a larger usefulness, which, we believe, will be satisfied by the Spirit who created it. The notion of some, that Quakerism, having accomplished its mission by permeating other denominations with its own distinctive truths, may now be content to pass into an honoured oblivion, is evidently not the view of the Friends themselves. And we are glad it is not. They still have a great work to do in upholding the truth that God is in his Church a living guide and Saviour, in insisting upon simplicity of speech and life, in defending the oppressed of every class and colour, and in teaching the sinfulness of war. They have had exceptional influence among the highest and the lowest, and their presence has always been a unifying power among their fellow-believers of other churches. We should be well pleased to see their closed meeting-houses opened again, and in constant use.

Even a worm, it is said, will ultimately turn, and the much-enduring City conscience has at length made itself heard in protest against commercial proclivities of the late Lord Mayor.

In the Court of Aldermen the customary vote of thanks for his services—one of the shortest ever moved on such an occasion—was received in silence. Neither the mover nor seconder said a word in support of it, nor was there any applause when it was carried.

So reads the press report. The Court of Common Council was more thorough-going still, for a similar resolution was sturdily opposed by Mr. Price, who denounced

The ghastly list of fatal companies of which the late Lord Mayor had been a director, and which were now wound up. In his opinion Sir Joseph Renals had done nothing to add to the dignity of the office.

No "silence" here, for these and other charges were received with frequent bursts of applause, and three-fourths of the members supported Mr. Price's position. Thus, for the first time in living memory the Lord Mayor will not get his vote of thanks. He will have time to ponder the significance of this on the "long voyage" which his doctor has recommended him. Meantime, such a manifestation of conscience is to be highly prized, and will greatly strengthen the hands of righteous men who strive to purify commerce.

At the Chelmsford Assizes, on Saturday, Mr. Justice Hawkins, in charging the Grand Jury, said he was sorry to find that in a calendar containing not more than thirty cases 50 per cent. of them were of an indecent nature. Offences of this sort seemed to be more and more common day by day. He found the same thing in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire, and did not know how it was to be checked. We are not surprised that it should be found the same throughout the kingdom. The degradation of our fictitious literature, and the increasing number of periodicals, edited and illustrated to cast contempt on marriage, and to promote indelicacy, not to say indecency, is quite sufficient to account for the increase of the offences of which Justice Hawkins complains. The railway bookstalls are not a little answerable for this. Some of these pernicious publications could not exist were it not for the sales effected at railway stations. Booksellers everywhere should use their great opportunities to elevate the people, not to produce "generations growing down."

The progress of the shipbuilding dispute on the Clyde and at Belfast proves in a melancholy manner how far personal and party feelings, irrespective of the merits of the case, enter into labour struggles. This seems to be the tone of the masters and of the men. Here are vast interests at stake; the well-being, almost the life, of thousands of innocent women and children trembling in the balance, with a possibly hard winter in front; and yet the settlement of affairs is made more difficult to an extraordinary degree by the needless bitterness of feeling manifested on either side. Many of the "belligerents" are Christian men. Cannot they permeate their colleagues with a little more Christian sentiment? "Forbearing one another in love" is a motto for trade disputes as well as for Church members. If the spirit of mutual concession could be introduced into these melancholy conflicts, many of them would soon vanish, and all would be capable of speedy settlement.

The Bulletin, or half-yearly record of the Anti-Gambling League, just issued, contains a long and lamentable array of facts illustrating the ruinous character of the betting and gambling epidemic that is demoralising large portions of the community. The League deserves the unstinted support and countenance of all good citizens in its efforts to apply the law impartially, and to strengthen legislative remedies for this crying evil. At the same time the only effectual cure is the regeneration of those who are victims to the vice.

However comfortable professors of religion in England may look upon missionary work, the newly-converted tribes seem to think that the one thing for which they have been converted, is that they may preach Christ. In Uganda there are 300 native evangelists, who receive no salary, but go from village to village preaching the Saviour, and obtaining food from the people; only their clothes are provided them. Waganda men put away half their earnings for evangelistic work. Similar generosity marks the converts of Polynesia. The Gospel is a great reality to a man when it has just saved him, whatever it may be to those who have been brought up in the profession of it, but whose hearts have not been purified through the belief of it.

The Countess of Warwick has been giving some good advice to the women of England in an interview published in a popular monthly. There is nothing more sad or tragic in this world according to her than the waste that goes on all round us—not waste of money, but waste of life. "We all admit that life is precious; how can we fritter it all away?" That is what a vast majority of women do. The high possibilities of their life are lost in a maze of meaningless and useless social and personal indulgences. Novel reading has taken the place of more serious books, and the Bible is little read even by those who are "religious." She argues for a wise conservation of power. We might add to this a wiser renewal of spiritual life, and a quicker hand in doing good. Many of those who are now miserable because their lives are so vapid and self-centred would find unexpected brightness and joy returning to them if once they found a channel of spiritual service into which to throw their energies. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The empty heart, the aimless life are, and ought to be, unhappy. Misery is the rust that corrodes on the idle soul and eats its substance away.

And are not men in much the same plight? We live in a practical age; too practical. The material is crowding the spiritual out of thousands of lives. The highest powers, the noblest emotions, are being prostituted to mean worldly, personal ends. We have been caught up in the machinery we have created, and are in danger of having the higher manhood wrought and twisted out of us. "Things are in the saddle and ride mankind." There is an urgent call on those who would save their souls alive to find time for meditation and prayer, and the culture of the true life in Christ Jesus. We should be satisfied to make less money that we may be better men. This life is but the porch of the after life; and what shall it profit us though we die rich if the soul stands on the threshold of eternity, bankrupt and lost? "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you."

A correspondent says, in a letter recently received:—

I was more than thankful on reading your report of "A Quiet Day in West London," to find the study of the Bible brought before the audience. This, I am sure, is very much crowded out in the present, by many things, and not least by the publication of good books. For a long time, I have felt the danger of even good books. Nothing can make up to a child of God for neglect of his own Word and the study of it.

The Bishop of Liverpool is surely right when he says that the root of many of our social troubles is the absence of a sufficiently high standard of Christian ethics throughout the land, and of plain Christ-like teaching about every man's duty to his neighbour. He thinks we want thorough searching teaching about charity, love, kindness, and sympathy, among all classes from the highest to the lowest. "Such teaching alone will not save souls," but "we have no more right to neglect it than justification by faith or the ten commandments." No; and we have no right to use any truth or set of truths "alone." The manifoldness of Scripture, its infinite variety and suitability to human needs, are not for us to pick and choose from, but to use in the faith that He who gave the Word will use it.

No doubt need be felt that modern foreign missions have, at the close of their first century, entered upon a new period of vigour. The very determination of their friends that they shall all be free from debt, which has accumulated partly through expansion of work which ought not to be repressed, and partly through the failure of the churches to realise their responsibility, is one evidence of power. The number of volunteers for service is another evidence. The notice of the Press is another, for the Press pays no attention to dead things. When The Nineteenth Century, and The Spectator, and Macmillan's Magazine take the trouble to discuss missions in China, we may be sure that such missions are a power.

The favourable article in Macmillan is somewhat concerned as to the presence of women in China. The writer thinks that they are a "relative failure," notwithstanding their enthusiasm and devotion and many other high qualities. Yet he is bound to admit that "badly as Chinamen think of the Western women who go about unrestrained, the Chinese women are more amenable to feminine influences, when once their natural prejudice has been removed, and there is a marvellously wide field here for female energy." If Western women behave prudently, as most of them do, the prejudice against them must give way in time, and the harvest will be great. It is according to both nature and grace for women to work for women in the Gospel, and anything opposed to that is only sinful prejudice which cannot last.

Dr. Fairfield expresses in The Homiletic Review his regret that the revisers of the New Testament did not, when translating John xii. 27, adopt in the text the rendering or punctuation which they have put into the margin. "Father, save me from this hour?" making it a question, the same as the preceding clause. The harmony of the whole verse would then be very apparent. "Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? [Shall I say] 'Father, save me from this hour?' But for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify thy name." This reading seems to us correct in every way.

The policy, now predominant in South Africa, of treating the natives contemptuously and unjustly, will, in due season, bring down trouble upon us. They are thrust from the sidewalks of the street, are deprived of political rights, and often shamefully abused. "The principle of fair and equal treatment, advocated by Mr. Saul Solomons, of the South African native, is dead and buried." But this is not allowed to go on without protest. The natives have their warm friends in the pastors of Christian churches. It is just the old trouble which arose when the Spaniard appeared in the western world, and condemned the Indians to slave for him in the mines; and when the Dutch and English appeared in North America and imported negroes to work their cotton fields. South Africans must be made to know that Christian England abhors their brutal injustice.

The paragraphs we published last week of the condition of morals at Johannesburg are capable of being supplemented by still darker details. Gambling is one of the worst features of commercial and social life there. The Stock Exchange has already developed into a great institution, as may be seen from the fact that no one can become a member without sureties for £3000, which is only £1000 less than the sum required by the conditions of the London Exchange. Poker is the favourite game after business hours, and heavy stakes are often played for, as much as £1000 sometimes depending on the turn of a card. This state of things, together with the shameful pleasure-seeking and profligacy in which the Sunday is spent, is a sad indication of the dangers attending the too rapid material development of a new town. All the hidden rottenness of civilisation rises to the surface under such circumstances; and a new proof is given that beneath the outward gloss of progress there lurks the fallen Adam as rampant and degraded as ever.

The Times correspondent at Antananarivo has sent home a melancholy account of the Christianity of the Hovas, and of the outlook for British missions in Imerina. Their conversion, he says, is little more than skin deep; many of them, under the stress and disappointment of recent affairs, are already discarding it in favour of their old heathenism, and what Christianity remains in that province of Madagascar will probably be absorbed by Catholicism.

This picture is in melancholy contrast to the forecasts of such missionaries as Mr. Shaw and Mr. Cousins, who are well acquainted with the facts. They have recently spoken hopefully of the chances of Protestantism in view of the French invasion. They represent the Hovas as of an obstinate and determined type of character, who will rise to the occasion when times of storm and difficulty come on them. The history of Christianity during the great persecution of 1835-61 favours this view. But it yet remains to be seen whether the Hovas, like other Christians, will stand the strain of worldly temptations so well as they did the fires and tortures of persecution. The latter were brought on them through the action of their own Government. The new order of things means letting in upon them the floodgates of civilised sin. Of the two this will be far the greater trial to their faith and constancy. They will need all the encouragement and prayers of Christian people.

The treatment of the insane is exercising the minds of Christian friends on both sides of the Atlantic. The medical superintendent of a State hospital in the United States, writing on the question, says:

There is only one way to meet the necessities of the insane, and that is by the application of hospital treatment for their comfort and cure. The insane are sick people, and need such care in the main as may be afforded in a first-class and well-equipped hospital. We find that most of the insane are overworn when they first arrive at this institution, therefore we afford them at the outset all the benefits of rest in bed, appropriate and recuperative diet, and constant care by trained nurses. When they are sufficiently restored bodily, then we begin to exercise, divert, and amuse, and furnish means for the occupation of both brain and hands.

This seems to be an eminently sensible and humane method of treatment, and far more likely to be permanently curative than any harsher and more repressive system. But in order to have a healthy mind in a healthy body, there must be faith in God. Not only the body and the mind must be provided for, but the spirit also. A clear and simple setting forth of the Gospel would bring health and cure to many, whose mind has been overworn by anxiety of soul, having been convinced of sin, but not having understood God's remedy in Christ.

How far the influence of a religious convention may reach no one can tell, but we are persuaded it commonly goes much beyond the limits of its own particular friends and supporters. There is good reason for believing that the late Missionary Convention, which was so well reported by the daily papers, did not a little to attract attention to Khama's mission to this country, and to secure his object in coming. A National Purity Congress has just been held at Baltimore, which drew the eyes of the whole country to itself, and, says The American (Baltimore), "it is instructive to notice how surely the cause for which the organisation stands is gaining everywhere."

We have received a letter from Miss Florence Balgarnie, replying to some points in Lady Henry Somerset's communication, as to American women and lynching, that appeared in our last issue. We cannot but think it a great pity that any mistakes or misunderstandings that arose on this question last year should be accentuated by further controversy. The thing to rejoice in is that our temperance sisters across the Atlantic are now awake to the horrors of negro lynching. Tuesday's papers report another revolting case. Let there be an end of recriminations, and let all unite in the endeavour to stop deeds which are a disgrace to our common humanity.

The True Point of View.

No adequate and final conclusion can be arrived at on any subject unless all the facts of the case are before us. There are many things in English history for which we should be unable correctly to account if our records went no farther back than William the Conqueror, or Alfred the Great. So, many false conclusions will be drawn if in our consideration of the ways of God we go back only to the fall of Adam, and not to the rebellion of Lucifer, and if we regard the salvation of men, instead of the vindication of God, as the chief question to be solved. For the great issue before the universe is not primarily the redemption of the creature, but whether the creature or the Creator, the usurper or the rightful King, shall hold the reins of government.

In the earlier ages of the world this had not yet been forgotten. The mythic fable of Phaethon's attempt to drive the chariot of the sun, and the ruin which ensued in heaven and earth, is the heathen version of the story of him whose vain ambition was to be like the Most High.

As we perceive a greater than any king of Israel in the Messianic Psalms, so we may discern a greater than the king of Babylon and the king of Tyre in Isaiah xiv. and Ezekiel xxviii. The Prince of the kings of the earth is foreshadowed in David and Solomon, and the prince of this world is forthshadowed in the kings and conquerors who from time to time have attained to universal monarchy.

Lucifer, son of the morning, is by almost universal consent regarded as Satan. The title "Light-bearer" would seem to indicate that in his pristine condition he held an exalted place in the hierarchy of heaven; and as it is the magnate next the throne who generally usurps the royal dignity, so we may infer that Lucifer was perhaps the highest of the angels of God.

The Creator did not abdicate in favour of the creature; neither did He destroy the creature who had rebelled against Him. The only wise God permitted him to demonstrate his fitness or unfitness for the rule to which he had aspired; and the ages of human history display the meekness and patience, the wisdom and righteousness, the love and the power of God, in dealing with the arch-usurper and his angel-followers, and with man his deceived and murdered victim. The legend of Phaethon (the Shining One), and the Scriptural history of Absalom's usurpation, are instructive in this connection.

The creation of man upon the earth, his temptation and fall, and the consequent transference to Satan of the dominion which God had committed to Adam, by which the tempter became the prince of this world, are all subsidiary and subordinate to the one transcendent and absorbing issue before the universe, caused by the claim of Lucifer to be like the Most High.

In Moses, and the Prophets, and the Psalms, in the Gospels, the Epistles, and the Apocalypse, this is recognised: "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" "Shall he that hateth right govern?" "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with Thee, which frameth mischief by a law?" "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; Jehovah shall have them in derision." "Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? ... God forbid! For how then shall God judge the world?" "Then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the Kingdom to God...that God may be all in all." "He that sitteth on the throne saith, Behold, I make all things new." How fit it is that in the book which closes Scripture God should be spoken of as He "who is, and was, and is to come," and by the oft-recurring title, "He that sitteth upon the throne."

God's final stroke of judgment is never struck until iniquity is full. Abraham's seed must not enter the Land of Promise for four hundred years, because "the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." To the Pharisees Jesus said, "Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers...that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, the son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar." When Satan has filled up his iniquity the end will come, and the beginning of the eternal rest.

The ultimate trend of the present order of things on earth is not toward the conversion of the world, but to the inevitable judgment of the arch-rebel, and his angel-followers, and of those among men who have chosen Satan, the prince of this world, in preference to "Jesus, the Faithful Witness, the First-born of the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth." And beyond this, to the vindication by all the created universe of the Creator and Redeemer as King, against the rebel who fell from heaven, the slanderer of God in the Garden of Eden, the deceiver and murderer of the human race. "Blessing and honour and glory and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." And still beyond, to the New Creation, in resurrection life, of all believers from Adam downward, the bride, the Lamb's wife, "as a bride adorned for her husband."

We repeat, it makes a vital difference whether we form our conception of the ages from the lower and more limited platform of man's fall and redemption, or the higher and wider area of God's vindication, against the once glorious creature who rebelled against his authority, and attempted to usurp his power. Milton wisely took this wider field of revelation, and made the fall of Lucifer his starting point when he undertook in his great poem to "justify the ways of God to men."

There is not a truth which does not become more luminous when viewed from this higher point of view. Many an error, if not every error, is detected, and corrected or rejected, if submitted to the test of this Divinely revealed criterion. M.

SAILORS' REST, DEVONPORT.—Miss Weston has received two boxes of presents for her Christmas festivities from the Duchess of York. In a kind letter the Duchess says that "the books, toys, and warm garments are for the bluejackets, their wives, and little ones." The Duchess adds that "both the Duke and herself hope that they will give pleasure." Miss Weston has about 2000 presents to get by December 20, and she hopes her kind friends will not forget her.

THE CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' DINNER TABLE.—During the past year many thousands of meals and food portions were dispensed from the soup kitchen, 60, Paddington-street, High-street, Marylebone, W. Considerable alterations were made two years ago, viz., soup, meat dinners, rice, milk, and beef-tea were provided each day in the week instead of twice a week only, as heretofore. Though these changes have involved some loss, it has been determined to continue them, as it is hoped that the new system, when more widely known, will become self-supporting. A penny ticket procures a basin of soup and a slice of bread, which can be eaten on the premises, or a quart of soup to be taken away. Larger sums procure more substantial meals. This is the only charity of its kind in the neighbourhood, and applicants come from many of the parishes round. Tickets can be procured at the Dinner Rooms, 60, Paddington-street. The treasurer and secretary is Lady Thompson, 35, Wimpole-street, W.

Life Abundantly.

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it abundantly.—John x. 10.

God always gives as God. Surely it is He who is creating in the hearts of his people all over the world a desire for a closer communion with Himself. As in natural things so in spiritual, there is a means to an end, and many at the present time are asking the practical question, How is this abundant life to be attained? The Lord Jesus tells us in John xvii. 3, "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." If to know Him is to have eternal life, then to know Him more and more is to have that life more and more abundantly.

It is not enough to taste and see that the Lord is good. We need to be well fed by Him, to be led in and out by Him, and to find pasture. He desires that we should feed continually upon Him. How shall we do this but through the Word of God? In John xiv. the Lord Jesus says, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me, and he that loveth Me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and manifest myself unto him. Judas saith unto Him, Lord, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us and not unto the world? Jesus saith, If a man love Me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and We will come unto him and make our abode with him." How can we know his commandments but by finding them in the Word of God? How keep his words unless we know them there? How can the Spirit take of the things of Christ, and show them unto us, but by the Scriptures? "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God."

Alas! the secret of the poverty-stricken life of God's people is found in the fact that the Bible is a closed book to so many, save on the Sunday or at the public services.

Oh, that all God's dear children could by some means be induced to read the Scriptures prayerfully, constantly, persistently, that they might grow and grow in the knowledge of Him, and so attain that abundant life.

"THE LORD THINKETH UPON ME."

Psa. xl. 17.

He thinks of me who is so near, yet far,
Who paints the lily, who lights up the star;
He thinks of me who is so great that He Holds in his hand the sea's immensity.

He thinks of me, tho' oft my faith is dim,
Remembers when I have forgotten Him;
In life or death, in good or what seems ill,
In want or weakness, He remembers still.

Why does He think of me? Ah! well I know,
Let Calvary answer with its depth of woe;
Beyond the vastness of the stars above,
He loves me with an "everlasting love."

THE HARROD'S STORES CHRISTIAN MISSION observed on Tuesday week its ninth anniversary. After a pleasant social hour Mr. A. J. Naughton occupied the chair, the president, Mr. R. Burbridge (managing director), being unable to attend. Mr. Jasper Keeble gave an earnest Gospel address. The Bible class is connected with the Bible Class Union, which now consists of about fifty-five classes in houses of business in the Metropolis. God is blessing this particular work very abundantly, and we would very heartily invite those who have classes in their houses to join the Union and strive to spread the work. Every Tuesday evening after business, the class meets in the men's dining room, where it is conducted in the simple mission service style, various ministers, clergymen, evangelists and others kindly coming week by week to give an address. There have been "showers of blessing" this last year, and increased attendance.

PARABLE OF THE TARES.—4.

By Mr. G. H. PEMBER, M.A.*

DEPARTING FROM THE TRUTH.

If we now turn to the Epistle of Barnabas, written some time between A.D. 70 and A.D. 79, we shall be made far more conscious of the rapid spread of error, and of the upspringing of the Tares on every side. For here we find a bombastic style coupled with an intense dislike of the Jews, whom the writer believes to have forfeited their covenant to the Church, and so to have been cast away for ever: we are startled by quotations from Apocryphal books, and by the most absurd and even obscene and filthy interpretations of certain parts of the Mosaic law; we meet with strange attempts—which would be ridiculous, were they not painful—to extract foreshadowings of baptism, and of the figure of the cross, from the Old Testament; we are amazed at the presentation of "mysteries" which disclose nothing save the ignorance of their revealer.

The perversion of Scripture by a silly and trifling exposition seems to have been one of the earliest of Satan's devices, and Barnabas carries it on to a reckless extent. For instance, he teaches that the words, "They have forsaken Me, the Fountain of Living Waters, and hewed themselves out cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water," contain a reference to baptism.

Again, he quotes, from the first Psalm, the description of the man who is blessed, "He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water"; and this is his comment: "Mark how he has described at once both the water and the cross. For these words imply, Blessed are they who, placing their trust in the cross, have gone down into the water."

In the well-known "Shepherd of Hermas," a book most popular in the second, third, and fourth centuries, we have, perhaps, the earliest personification of the Church as an authoritative teacher—an ominous beginning, soon to result in her recognition theoretically as an authority on the same level as the Scriptures, really as one far above them. In the course of her instruction to Hermas, she shows him a great tower built upon waters, and explains that it represents herself, the Church. He then desires to know why it is built upon waters, and her reply is:—"It is because your life has been, and will be, saved by water"; that is, of course, by baptism. Subsequently the Shepherd appears, and teaches Hermas as follows:—"Before a man bears the name of the Son of God, he is dead; but as soon as he receives the seal, he puts off the state of death, and takes up life. The seal, then, is water; into the water, then, men descend dead, and they come up again alive." These two passages are evidently assertions of the unscriptural and pernicious doctrine of baptismal regeneration, and there is no point on which the whole body of the "Fathers" are so unanimous as they are in regard to this.

We must, however, hasten on to Ignatius, in whose celebrated, but much-disputed, Epistles we meet with the first mention of the bishop, in the modern sense of the term. Indeed, it seems to be the chief concern of Ignatius to vindicate and establish the authority of the bishops, and those points of ecclesiastical polity which are peculiar to Roman Catholics, or the second class of professing Christians.

"Let governors," he says, "be obedient to Cæsar; soldiers to those that command them; deacons to presbyters as to high priests; the presbyters and deacons and the rest of the clergy, together with all the people, and the soldiers, and the governors, and Cæsar himself, to the bishop."

I think you will agree with me that nothing could be more opposed to the teaching of our Lord and his apostles than this. For here Christian rulers are encouraged to act as lords, not only over Christ's heritage, but even over Satan's world.

You will notice, also, that since the deacons are regarded as priests and the presbyters as high priests, the bishops must be supposed to correspond to something far higher. What that something is may be discerned in Ignatius' Epistle to the Ephesians, where he says:—"It is manifest, therefore, that we ought to look upon the bishop even as we look upon the Lord Himself." In the Epistle to the Philadelphians, he declares that he had a revelation from the Holy Spirit which prompted him to cry out: "Do nothing without the bishop!" And to the Smyrnaeans he impiously says: "See that ye honour the bishop as Jesus Christ does the Father." This is a climax, and I need quote no more.

There are, however, two other Romish doctrines set forth by Ignatius which must not be left unnoticed. "Let that be deemed a proper Eucharist," he says, "which is administered either by the bishop, or by one to whom he has entrusted it." Here, then, we have a doctrine thoroughly unscriptural, but of well-known pagan origin, that of Apostolical succession.

What, however, is this Eucharist, which is only of avail when administered by the bishop or by those who have received a licence from him? We may learn the opinion of Ignatius on this point from a passage in his Epistle to the Ephesians. In the twentieth chapter, he exhorts the people not to neglect the assembling of themselves together, "so that," he adds, "ye may obey the bishop and the presbytery with undistracted mind, breaking one bread, which is the means of producing immortality, the antidote that keeps us from dying, and causes us to live for ever in Jesus Christ."

Now, the Lord's teaching is: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment, but is passed from death unto life." And He afterwards instituted his Supper as a memorial feast, to be partaken of only by those who had already, through hearing his word, received a life that could never be taken away from them.

But Ignatius says, that we escape death and obtain immortality through eating the bread of the Eucharist; and then, that the whole power of administering it is in the hands of the bishop and his nominees; so that, if one desires everlasting life, he must seek it from those who are themselves sinful and mortal. What a conspiracy have we here for exalting the falsely-styled ministers of Christ to be lords over men and rulers of the world!

Thus was sacerdotal episcopacy introduced into the church. Very soon it became customary to regard the bishop of a metropolis as the head of the provincial bishops, and to give him the title of metropolitan, or primate. Then the most conspicuous of the metropolitans, in a division of the empire, was set over the rest as patriarch. And so, in the West, church-government progressed logically to the election of a supreme Pontiff of the whole body, and to the establishment of a third class of professing Christians, the Roman Catholics, or Papists.

Meanwhile, many other Pagan and corrupting institutions had crept into the Church, of which, perhaps, the worst was celibacy, or virginity. I cannot go into particulars; but it would startle some of you to read of its fearfully immoral results in the writings of such men as Tertullian, Cyprian, Basil, and Chrysostom. Nevertheless, while deploring its frightful consequences, they support it with the most extravagant eulogy. Cyprian actually affirms that, while the seed, in the Parable of the Sower, which bears a hundredfold, refers to the martyrs, the sixtyfold belongs to the virgins. And this kind of interpretation was passed down the centuries until it became still more exclusive. In Bernard of Clairvaux's letter to his sister, we read as follows:—"I beseech you, my beloved sister, hear with all reverence the word of exhortation. . . . The thirtyfold is the first degree, and signifies the alliances of the married; the sixtyfold is the second step, and signifies the continence of widows; the hundredfold is the third step in this gradation of ranks, and it means the crown of chastity destined for virgins." Lastly, to support this theory, the dogma of the Immaculate Conception, borrowed from Paganism, was pushed to the front, and the Lord's mother saluted as the Ever Virgin.

In very early times, too, commenced that adulation of saints and martyrs which soon culminated in worship, and a literal return to pagan polytheism. It became the practice to regard with the greatest reverence those who had been arrested on the charge of Christianity. While they were in prison, their word was esteemed as law, and they issued mandates from their cells with an arrogance which is simply astounding. Indeed, the flattery which they received was so fulsome that many appear to have procured their own arrest merely to gratify their personal vanity. And the conduct and sentiments of some of them, if we may trust the records, were such as, not only to confirm this supposition, but also to induce the fear that the Lord will not acknowledge them when He returns in his glory. After their death, their tombs were decorated with flowers and visited by the whole church in solemn procession, their relics were adored, the day of their martyrdom became an annual festival, churches were dedicated to them, and they were prayed to as gods.

Perhaps some of you may be inclined to say, Yes, but are you not now referring only to the ignorant and superstitious among the Christians? Indeed, I am not; and in proof of this will adduce an example which may surprise you. For the real condition of the "Church" in the fourth century, the Nicene age, so often extolled as a model by Catholics, is little understood. The leaders of the Oxford Tractarian movement were wise in their generation when they resolved to translate selections only from "the Fathers": they would not have dared to put all the works of the latter before English readers.

The example which I shall give you occurs in the extant works of Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, who is usually regarded as one of the greatest and purest of the ancient Christians. Let us, then, hear what he has to say. His brother Satyrus, for whom he had a tender affection, was shipwrecked on a voyage from Africa to Italy, and barely escaped with his life. But soon after he had reached home he was attacked with a violent malady, from the effects of which he died almost immediately. The corpse was borne into the great church at Milan, and Ambrose, in the presence of a vast congregation, delivered two funeral addresses over it, both of which have been handed down to us.

In the first, he tells the story of his brother, and deplores the fact that the latter, before setting out on his voyage, had asked St. Lawrence the Martyr only for a safe journey. That, indeed, had been granted; but would that he had also prayed for length of days!

Ambrose, however, is thankful for his own gain, in that his brother survived long enough to return to Milan; "for now," says he, "I have a tomb on which I may cast myself, and believe that I shall be more acceptable to God, because I rest upon the bones of the sacred body."

In analysing his brother's character, Ambrose lauds him on account of his reverential regard for the rites of religion, in illustration of which he relates the following incident. The ship in which Satyrus was sailing struck upon the rocks; and he, though not yet initiated in the higher mysteries, and not regenerated—that is, in the language of the day, not having partaken of the Lord's Supper, nor even having been baptized—sought out those on board who had charge of the consecrated elements, which were usually carried on a journey as a safeguard against danger. When he had obtained them, he wrapped them up in a stole which he tied round his neck, and thus, fortified for any event, threw himself fearlessly into the sea.

CONVENTION IN EDINBURGH.

Last week we noted the opening of the Edinburgh Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life. On the Tuesday morning Rev. George H. C. Macgregor gave a Bible reading, continuing his study of the subject of "Sin." There was much searching of heart, and close dealing with awakened consciences, as he led his hearers through the Old Testament, pointing out the various words used by the Holy Spirit to describe in its true colours the breaking of the holy law. He dealt with the subject to show (1) the relationship of sin to God, (2) the real nature of sin, and (3) the fruit which sin brings forth. In the course of his talk he enforced the lessons derived from twenty Hebrew terms used to describe sin.

In the evening Mr. Robert Wilson's opening words were a warning not to lay the blame on God when we fail after having been called to go forward. Rev. Andrew Murray gave an address on "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Romans vii. 24, 25). These are the words of

A REGENERATE MAN.

It is the language of a man who knows that his own heart and nature have been renewed, and that there is a power in him now that is not himself. When he does evil he dares to say, "It is not I that do it." In the earlier part of the epistle Paul deals with justification and sanctification. In dealing with justification he lays the foundation by dealing with sin, not in the singular, but in the plural, as "sins." In the second part of the fifth chapter he begins to deal with sin, not as an actual transgression, but as a power. What a loss it would have been to the Church if Paul had not left us this second half of the seventh chapter of the Romans, with its teaching on the vital question of sin in the believer! The regenerate man is one in whom the will has been renewed, and who can say, "I delight after the law of God in the inward parts."

This regenerate man is also in himself an impotent man. A great mistake is made here by many Christian people. They think that when there is a renewed will it is enough, but this regenerate man tells us, "I will to do what is good, but the power I find not." People tell us that if we have a new will, and set ourselves determinedly to it, we can accomplish what we will; but the man who made this confession was as determined as any man can be. The will of the creature is nothing but an empty vessel in which the power of God is to be made manifest. This man, regenerate and impotent, is also

A WRETCHED MAN.

What makes him so utterly unhappy and miserable? He is so because God has given him a nature that loves Himself; he has gone through the experience of the sixth chapter. Blessed be God when a man learns to cry, "O wretched man that I am," from the depths of his heart, for he is on the way to the eighth chapter of the Romans. When a man comes here he is on the very brink of deliverance. How can you keep captive any longer a man made free by the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus? He leads his people on as reasonable, intelligent beings; and therefore when He wants to give us that Holy Spirit whom He has prepared and promised, He brings us first to the end of self; then He shows us that in the Holy Spirit we have the power of obedience, victory, and real happiness.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed with an address on Romans viii. 3. In these chapters the apostle magnifies the law of God, speaking of it as holy, just, and good. If it has failed, it has not been because of any inherent defect, but because of the weakness of the medium through which it has wrought. The centre letter in the word sin is "I," and the life of sin is the "I" life,—making life which ought to be concentric with God, eccentric with Him and concentric with ourselves. When the Spirit comes to us let us open our hearts to Him; and keep walking with and trusting in Him.

On Wednesday morning the Bible reading was given by Mr. Meyer on the subject of "Faith." He brought out the contrast between our want of faith and our weakness of faith compared with God's faithfulness. Later in the day, after a few opening remarks by Mr. Murray, addresses were given by Revs. G. H. C. Macgregor and C. G. Moore.

When the evening came the first speaker was Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, who spoke on the promise from Hosea (xiv. 5), that God would be unto his people "as the dew unto Israel." Israel was a man who got that name because he had chosen something better than the things of earth, because he looked ahead. He was also a man of prayer. This is from a chapter that gives a beautiful picture of the child of God. He first of all makes a confession: there must be disavowal as well as avowal.

THE CRUX OF THE MATTER

is reached when we are called to be prepared for receiving the dew, and give up all else. If we are to grow as the lily we must be free from worry and care, knowing something of the sweet little flower hearts-ease. Then, too, we must have purity before victory. Have we not been content largely to ignore and minimise the power and work of the Holy Spirit? It is for want of this dew that God cannot bless many congregations of his people. The poor little babes in Christ would be starved.

Mr. Meyer spoke on the lame being enabled to take the prey (Isaiah xxxviii. 23). He explained very tenderly and graciously that though in worldly things the lame may be always behind, in the spiritual life the spoils of Calvary and Pentecost are for them. Jesus is waiting to give the blessing to those who have until now looked on with longing eyes as others received it. He pointed to Jacob, Job, Moses, Peter, and Paul, as five notable instances of the fulness of the blessing being received only after lameness had been brought home to their hearts.

On Wednesday morning a special gathering of ministers and missionaries in Moncrieff Hall was addressed by Mr. Murray.

Rev. Dr. Cunningham was in the chair on Thursday morning, when Mr. Macgregor gave an address on "Prayer," showing that it is the great business of life, and emphasising the wonder, the pain, and the power of it.

Mr. Moore gave the Bible-reading, beginning from Romans xiv. 17. He dwelt on the power of the Holy Spirit in our daily life, showing that before there can be goodness or happiness the life must be rooted in God. The characteristics of the citizen of heaven are (1) righteousness, (2) peace and (3) joy in the Holy Ghost. In the afternoon Mr. Murray addressed a large gathering of students in the Free High Church, his text being "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God."

At the large meeting in the evening Mr. Macgregor was the first speaker, his subject being the "Healing of the sick in Capernaum" (Luke iv. 40). Applying this to the case of those who had not received the Spirit in his fulness, he said (1) they were in a sickly condition because they were not making progress, because they lacked joy, and because they lacked victory over sin; (2) this sickly condition is sin; (3) they must realise that deliverance can come from Christ alone; and (4) He is as willing to heal as He was at Capernaum.

Mr. Murray then spoke from Galatians v. 25—the necessity of walking as well as living in the Spirit. God has a right to expect that our lives will be like the root from which the spiritual life sprang; He expects every one who lives in the Spirit to walk in the Spirit. This is natural, but it is a fact to which the Church has never been thoroughly awakened. Many Christians do not walk in the Spirit. Like the Galatians, they seek their fellowship with God in the works of the flesh, trying to make themselves very good; wherever you find the religious self you find also the wicked self. God is willing to give us grace to walk by the Spirit. The whole Gospel means that. The everlasting God has given his Son Christ Jesus to every one that He might be their Keeper every moment. The Spirit of God comes as the Spirit of grace. That is the kingdom of God within you—righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. On Friday forenoon, was held. Representatives from Persia, Old Calabar, India, the Congo, and China gave stirring addresses, and pleaded earnestly for more prayer, sympathy, and help on behalf of the work of the Lord among the peoples who sit in darkness.

A FOREIGN MISSIONARY MEETING

It had been arranged that at the afternoon meeting the addresses should be specially directed to parents. Mr. C. G. Moore gave a deeply spiritual address on his own experience as a parent: (1) It is not the wills, but the hearts of our children we should seek to keep; (2) there is a whole world of difference between praying for our children and training them, which means much self-denial; and (3), it is a great deliverance when we become God's servants towards our children (Genesis xvii. 1, 2). Rev. Andrew Murray addressed himself specially to mothers. He had been lately learning how much sympathy mothers deserved in the little worries of daily life. He recalled in vivid terms a visit to Mr. Moody's mother, during his recent stay at Northfield, and a conversation about the same time with Mr. Webb-Peploe; and told how it came home to his heart that he and these brethren had much reason to bless God for godly mothers. Taking as his text, "Kept by the Power of God" (1 Peter i. 5), he said it had a Divine side, "by the Power of God," and a human side, "through faith." On the Divine side it is (1) being kept by Almighty Power, for God is every moment the Omnipotent One, and cannot divide Himself; (2) being kept by Unceasing Power, for He is the eternal God, and eternity is an ever-present now; (3) and it is an unlimited keeping in body, mind and soul. On the human side being kept through faith, means (1) surrender, because only then can the Almighty Power free us from all our troubles; and (2), rest, because until this is reached we have not trusted God in his fulness.

In the evening the closing meeting of the Convention was held. Mr. Moore spoke on "The Unprovoked Spirit. (1) It may go ill with us, as it did with Moses, if we allow ourselves to be provoked by the wrong-doing of others (Psalm cvi. 32, 33); (2) if we let the ignorance of others rob us of the blessing (2 Kings vi. 15); (3) if Christ's chief trouble is not about the wrong doing which concerns us, but about our wrong spirit (Luke ix. 51); and (4) if we misread the situation, as did Peter (Matthew xxvi. 51). The provoked spirit is one of the greatest hindrances (1) to close fellowship with Christ, (2) to prayer, (3) to the true Christian home, (4) to blessing coming through us to others.

Mr. Murray, in his closing word, spoke (1) of a blessing promised (Acts i. 8). These poor fishermen received the promise of power, and began the victory that has conquered the world for Christ. (2) We have the blessing waited for (verse 14) in the upper room with prayer and supplication. We must begin at Jerusalem, not praying only for heathendom, but for believers also, for though they have the Holy Spirit, He is smothered and quenched. (3) We have the promise fulfilled: "and they were filled with the Holy Ghost" (chapter ii. verse 4). Then there was much joy, and love, and boldness; or He whom they formerly had with them externally was now come to abide with them for ever. Peter did not only preach, but the 120 preached and began to testify: that was what awoke the Jews. (4) The blessing is imparted to others (verse 38). Those who have received the Holy Ghost have understood too little that God wanted to make them fruitful branches. In closing, he called on all his hearers to join the great company of intercessors in praying for the feeble and powerless Church. The need is greater than we think. Souls are perishing, and Christ is ready to work through consecrated believers.

As the free-will offerings of the people amounted to more than was required to cover the expense of the Convention, a portion is being given to Mr. Murray for his work in South Africa.

FRIENDS IN CONFERENCE.

Last week the first of what many Friends hope may be Triennial Conferences was held in Manchester. The attendance was large, probably nearly 1000 being present daily, and there was no flagging of interest from first to last. At the reception meeting, held in the Free Trade Hall on Monday, November 11, the welcome accorded visitors by Theodore Neild, on behalf of local friends, was warm and hearty. Everything that could conduce to the comfort and accommodation of Friends had been anticipated and arranged. Many have long felt that the spread of Ritualism, on the one hand, and of its rebound, Scepticism, on the other, imposed on a body of Christians free from such shackles the duty of trying to reach both the classes and the masses, and this autumnal Conference is the outcome.

Among the means, now happily usual on such occasions, was the early prayer meeting for the three mornings of the Conference, and on the Friday morning, at its close at nine o'clock, large numbers gathered, and the freedom and reverence manifest throughout were striking indeed, men and women with a family feeling, and a sense of the nearness of God, poured out their hearts before Him, and He heard and answered.

The nature of the published programme, while it kindled multitudinous hopes, excited not a few fears, and in many a breast these feelings were blended. At the close of the Conference the experience was general that the hopes had been realised and the fears disappointed, and praise ascended to God in consequence. The Conference throughout, notwithstanding great variety of opinion, was remarkable for the prevalence of love.

Before any Conference work on Tuesday morning, a deputation of Nonconformist ministers arrived, carrying an exceedingly brotherly and appreciative address, which one of the brethren (Rev. Samuel Pearson, Congregational) read, and was followed by Dr. McLaren, whose speech was a perfect gem —multum in parvo, indeed, and evincing not only wide knowledge of, but deep sympathy with, the Friends. John Stephenson Rowntree, formerly Lord Mayor of York, the chairman, suitably responded and courteously invited the deputation to attend the first sitting.

The Conference itself might suitably be divided into three divisions, or perhaps four. There were about thirty papers read during its nine sittings, and the speeches were limited to five minutes each, though a few speakers transgressed this rule. How far the five minutes' limit was best may be questioned, as most speakers with that "sword of Damocles" hanging over them feel "cribbed, cabined, and confined" too much; a strong chairman, using his "sanctified common sense," is probably better.

The first day's meetings dealt with the subject to the world to-day?" and was treated in five or six papers, all of especial merit. To attempt to detail their affirmative reasons would, I fear, transgress the proper limits of this brief record, and to single out names amid so much that was excellent would be both difficult and invidious. Some of the thoughts expressed would not perhaps be out of place:—"George Fox was at the top of the tide of the religious revival of the seventeenth century." "Christ is the cure where the disease is felt within." "The real presence is God in men." "Christ atoned for men and reigns in them." "The secret of the success of the early Friends was they were flooded with the Divine life." "God's wine may be universally drunk, everything is a cup." "Those attracted by our principles are often disappointed with our lives." "Let us forget ourselves and thus have freshness of expression in the greatness of utterance of the Divine voice." "Our example should promote the kingdom of Christ." "Life and power alone in Him." "When filled with God's love we could say to any, however low, My mother, and sister, and brother." "The men of Issachar had understanding of their times, so should we." "Give us, O Christ, the eye of the seer, the voice of the prophet, the power of the leader." "Have we a message, and are we ourselves lost in the message?"

"HAS QUAKERISM A MESSAGE

In discussing "The Relation between the

ADULT SCHOOL AND MISSION MEETING,

and the Organisation of the Society of Friends," it was natural that Alderman Wm. White should be in the chair. The growth of the movement was illustrated with a well-drawn chart, and able papers dealt with the difficulties of the question. Large numbers of men and women have been lifted to a purer and nobler life through the great institution, and yet have not joined the Church through whose membership they were born into the kingdom. Searching inquiry into the cause has in part cured it, and the hope seemed to prevail that "Christian societies" and "mission churches" might be preliminary to membership in the Society. Yet not a few Friends questioned the wisdom of these intermediate institutions at all, because so many men and women stopped there, and got no nearer the Friends' Church.

The second day's sittings dealt chiefly with "The Attitude of the Society of Friends towards SOCIAL QUESTIONS."

Dr. Robert Spence Watson and Henry B. Priestman, as chairmen of the two sittings, delivered very wise and sympathetic speeches, full of tenderness towards those who look for improvement through some of the many phases of Socialism.

The papers that followed, all written by men and women engaged in the work of social reform, dealt skilfully, but hopefully, with the manifold difficulties of the present position, and the earnest words that followed the papers indicated a growing and deepening interest in what is, perhaps, one of the greatest movements of our day. The confidence of the leaders of the labour movement was asserted in the non-priestly principles of Friends, and we were asked to step in and guide the movement to a right issue.

The largest gathering of the Conference, at which that 1200 were present, was on "The Attitude of the Society of Friends towards and an interest almost amounting to excitement was felt. The chairman, Dr. Thomas Hodgkin, gave a most able synopsis of the theme, and was followed by two learned professors, whose brilliant papers could not well be condensed. Two other able papers were also read, and there was no time for discussion. On this burning question the most sharply accentuated differences found expression, but the tone throughout was deeply reverent, and a living and enthroned Christ in each heart and life, had the fullest endorsement of every shade of thought. It was remarkable, too, that notwithstanding very wide differences of opinion, harmony was unbroken, "brotherly love prevailed."

"The more Effective Presentation of Spiritual, Truth" and "the Vitalising of our Meetings for Worship" occupied the last day's sitting of the Conference; ten or eleven papers, and earnest and wise words, dealing with these deeply important subjects found expression under a blessed sense of the Divine presence. To deal with the points brought out and suggestions made, would occupy much space, and as all the papers and speeches are likely to be ready for early publication, only the following thoughts need be noted.

The Breton boatman prays, "O Lord protect me, Thy sea is so large, and my barge is so small." "Everything is Divine, nothing is secular." "Expensive living leads to villa homes, and leaves the toilers to the sweaters." "Geo. Fox was the one freeman in Europe, living in the elements of mercy and worship" (Carlyle). "We are the 'Friends Society,' as well as the 'Society of Friends.'" "No great man is without a measure of Divine inspiration." "God is a free library in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." "The heart cannot say to the head, 'I have no need of thee.'" "Nations rise or fall according as they accept Christianity." "The Holy Ghost is not the monopoly of any church." "Christ is a representative Man responsible for people." "Rutherford's prayer made him awful and irresistible." "Bethlehem involves Calvary." "Traditional teaching an heirloom, valuable for its age, but lifeless."

The Conference itself is an evolution, and an awakening that is striking and hopeful. To be prepared to face the requirements of to-day, to modify and adapt, so as to meet current needs, and share with other churches in the amelioration, socially and spiritually, so widely needed, and so sorely pressing was the object of the Conference, and we cannot doubt that a

GREAT STEP FORWARD HAS BEEN TAKEN.

The widening of sympathy between hearts, the evoking of loyalty to Christ, and great spiritual principles, latent, but needing an atmosphere for development, to get face to face and heart to heart under the wing and banner of Christ, to concert together how to promote his kingdom and truth in blessing our fellow men, cannot but at once strengthen those who stretch out the hand to save, and uplift and bless those influenced for good.

Efforts like these will help to prevent drifting on the part of our own educated young people, and, as their hearts get more into sympathy with human need their tongues must get loosened to proclaim the great salvation at home and abroad. For the sentiment contained in the various papers the writers are themselves alone responsible, and the suggestion that at next Conference more public meetings should be held, seemed in harmony with common sense.

The closing meeting was held on Friday evening, when "The Message of Christianity to the World" was ably set forth to a large and extremely interested audience. Deep gratitude to Manchester Friends was eloquently expressed by two Friends, and most heartily felt by all. The memory of extensive hospitality, true Christian love, and greatly widened friendships, will not soon fade away, and many were the prayers that local Friends and work might be much favoured and helped by Him who is the one Master of all his servants under whatever name they may be known among men.

The Evangelist.

THE JOY OF GOD.

AN EXPOSITION OF LUKE XV.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

(Concluded from last issue.)

But now we come to the father himself. The point of the parable is the joy of the father. What a picture of God does Christ give to us in this narrative! What has the father being doing all this time? We may infer it from what is told to us here. The father has been loving the prodigal all the time, weeping over him as over one who was dead; waiting for him; watching for him. By-and-by the son appears in the distance, dragging a weary step, slower and slower, not daring to come near, but seeing the house from afar. "While he was yet a great way off his father saw him." The father saw him before he saw his father.

When he saw him, what then? Was he filled with indignation? Did he turn his eyes away from such a sad sight? Did he say to himself: "How can I receive him as a child? I must send a servant to him, and tell him that after a while, if he gives evidence of reformation; if he is truly repentant, and if he makes amends, I will send him some garments; I will not quite forget him. Then, of course, I will give him several lectures; I will make him to understand that I know how he must have behaved in that far country, and he will have to tell me all about it. I will make him feel that if ever again he is admitted into the house it will be an act of great condescension and great goodness on my part."

No! When the father sees him, his heart melts with compassion. Does not that remind you of a word in this same Gospel, a wonderful word at the end of chap. i., when Zacharias tells us where salvation comes from:—"To give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins, through the tender mercy of our God." There is the mainspring of it all. When the good Samaritan saw that poor man by the roadside it is said that he had compassion on him. Nothing is more like God than compassion. The father sees the son, and has compassion. "He ran and fell on his neck and kissed him." Oh, we may read this a thousand times, but it will bring tears to our eyes every time. We can hardly believe that any lost, degraded sinner—as a father receives a child. Are you returning to God? Have you turned your face towards Him? Are you taking one step towards Him? While you are yet a great way off He sees you and runs to meet you. He is ready to fall on your neck and kiss you.

The son begins at once to deliver himself of those words he had prepared; and surely they were fitted to the occasion: "Father I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." The father does not let him go to the end of the sentence. He wanted to say: "Make me as one of thy hired servants," but by this time the father had turned round to his servants and said, "Bring forth"—what robe? A robe? A good robe? One of the best robes? Nay; "the best robe." Nothing is good enough now. "Put it on him; put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet—his weary, dusty, bleeding feet; wash them and put shoes on them. Let us have not only a meal, but a feast, a banquet. Bring hither the fatted calf and kill it; never will there be a better occasion for it. And let us be merry." It is still the same, you see: "Rejoice with me for I have found my sheep; for I have found my lost piece of silver; let us be merry, for this my son was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found."

How happy the elder brother would be to welcome the younger brother home! He did not happen to be at home at the time; he was in the field at work. A dutiful son! He had never done anything wrong. The father does not complain of him. This elder son comes near the house, and what does he hear? The sound of music and dancing! What can be going on in the house? Why, he has only got to step in and see. But he won't do that. He calls for one of the servants; "What is it all about?" The servant said: "Thy brother is come and thy father has killed the fatted calf, because he has received him safe and sound." Now the brother gets angry; he actually says that if the younger brother is in the house and is received in that style, he will not go in.

What has the father to do then? I do not know but this is the most marvellous thing in the whole parable. The father might be the best and most righteous and most compassionate of fathers, and yet have said: "If he will not come in, let him stay out. By and by, perhaps, he will have a little more sense, if not a little more heart." No! But from that table where the fatted calf had been eaten, where they were all so happy and merry; from that room full of music and dancing the father goes out. "Therefore came his father out and entreated him." He did not give him a good scolding, which he richly deserved. He went out and entreated him. He said to himself: "Well, after all, it may seem strange to him that I have never done such a thing for him; but there was no occasion to do it. He does not understand; he is rather a sulky and stupid fellow." So he WENT OUT AND ENTREATED HIM.

And now the son is positively impertinent and insulting. He says to his father: "Lo these many years do I serve thee." "These many years." He seems to have counted all the years of his age as years in which he had served his father without any wages. What a wonderful young man! "Neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment." "I never did anything wrong; I am a righteous man, a dutiful son." All that might be true on the surface of it. But was it not like the Pharisee's prayer: "I thank God I am not as other men; not even as this publican." He needs no repentance. "Yet thou never gavest me a kid to make merry with my friends." Now he is positively reproaching his father. It is the father who is in the wrong, and the son is the judge. He says, in effect: "You are unjust to me. I have always done right, but you never went out of your way to have a little festival for me. Now this boy of yours, what has he done?" "This thy son." He does not say, "My brother." "This son of thine, who has devoured thy living with harlots." No one had mentioned his having devoured the father's living with harlots. The father does not say a word about it; it was left for the self-righteous son to point it out.

Dear me! suppose that on that day, instead of the son being in the field, he had been at home, and the father had been away in the next town; what kind of a reception would the poor young fellow have received? I tell you it is better to have to do with the Father, than with the most righteous of the brothers. It is a very happy thing for us that we are not left to the but that we go straight to the compassionate Father; that He understands it all, and that He covers it all with his compassion. "He upbraideth not," says the Epistle of James. What a wonderful thing, that is. Here was a case for upbraiding surely, but the prodigal son has not a word of upbraiding from the father. Have you ever noticed that you say to yourself far harder things of yourself and against yourself than God's Spirit ever does?

The Spirit of God can reproach us, and does reproach us, and humble us; but He never abuses us. We do sometimes—and we feel we deserve to be abused—but He does not. We sometimes deal with ourselves in a rough fashion, but He always deals gently with us. The Spirit of God is the Spirit of love.

This is more apparent, perhaps, at the end of the parable, than at the beginning. When the elder son is so full of bitterness that he has actually reproached his father, and has spoken against his brother at such a time, when the heart of the father is full of rejoicing, what does the father say? It is one of the most tender words in the Bible: "Son, thou art ever with me. I never refused thee a kid or anything else; anything that can make you happy is yours. This house is mine, and because it is mine, it is thine. It was meet that we should make merry and be glad; for this thy brother was dead and is alive again, and was lost and is found." Now let us hope that the elder son at last consented to follow the father into the house.

But, my brethren, are we truly conscious that the God with whom we have to deal, the God of infinite majesty and righteousness and holiness, the God of infinite wisdom and power, has

SUCH A HEART AS THIS?

Do we know that when we run away from Him we run away from such love as this; that when we refuse to return to the Father we refuse such a welcome as this? Oh that it might melt our hearts. If there be one here who has not made up his mind—who has perhaps come to himself, but has not returned to his Father, I would say, return to-day. He is waiting; He is watching for you; He has gone out to look and see whether you are not coming to Him at last. He is ready to run and show you the compassion that is now in his heart; to give you every proof of his love. Sometimes after one has been a little while in the Father's house, one would almost like to go and begin again, just for the sake of the first welcome. Oh! those first days in the Father's house. Be assured that He will not upbraid you. He will not, as some who are considering whether they will go home or not have thought, strangely enough—He will not give you at once some very hard or some extraordinary thing to do. He will tell you to sit down by his side. He will cover you with the best robe. He will give you shoes for your feet, and a ring for your hand. He will show you his own joy, and make you a partaker of it.

And, brethren, if, after having known that love of the Father, we have grieved it; if we have been bad brothers to those who were returning to the Father; if we have been harsh in our judgment, unloving, and proud of heart; if we have even had hard thoughts of God Himself still, let us return to Him; let us ask his forgiveness; let us humble ourselves. If we have sinned, not only against his law, but against his love, against his infinite patience, against his providence, against his Spirit, let us take to ourselves these words, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine."

And let us remember that if we do not return to God for the sake of our own salvation, we ought to return if only for the sake of giving joy to God. He yearns over lost souls. They are his. He misses them, and He wants to bring them home. Will you let Him do it? And then, will you work with Him? Will you let Him work with you, and bear witness that He is love indeed; that He is waiting to receive them as He received you? Then shall you enter, even now, into the joy of your Lord.

PRESTON.—A correspondent informs us of a united devotional meeting of Christians of a most interesting character recently held here. Representatives were present from the Episcopalian, Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and United Methodist Free Churches. A delightful hour-and-a-half was spent in prayer, praise, and personal testimony.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 24.

"Aaron offered them for a wave offering.—Num. viii. 11, 13, 15, 21.

This is interesting and instructive. The Levites were substituted for the first-born of Israel. They were first separated from the rest of the people, cleansed, sprinkled, shaven, and finally presented to the Lord by the act of Aaron, who, according to the Hebrew word, waved them before the Lord. This waving must, of course, have been done in symbol and figure. But it was not enough that they were thus waved, they had thereafter to go in to do their service. In other words, they were called to realise actually that which was their position and standing in the sight of God.

There is a precise analogy in all this to the work which the Lord Jesus has accomplished for us all. He said, "I consecrate myself, that they also may be consecrated." When he offered Himself without spot to God, to do his Father's will, though it cost Him the agony of Calvary, the heavenly Aaron waved us before God to be his. We were separated by his most precious death, that we should be wholly for God. But what is ours in the great deed of Christ, must become ours by our own choice and deed. We must go in to do our service.

This can only be through the grace of the Holy Ghost. Ask him to realise in you the purposes of God: trust Him to keep you trusting: each morning, say, "Holy Spirit, I trust Thee to keep me in the current of the Divine purpose."

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 25.

"When the cloud tarried."—Num. ix. 19.

This was the supreme test of obedience. It was comparatively easy to strike the tents, when the fleecy folds of the cloud were slowly gathered from off the Tabernacle, and it floated majestically before the host. Change is always delightful; and there was excitement and interest in the route, the scenery, the locality of the next halting-place. But, ah, the tarrying! Sometimes the cloud tarried for two days, or a month, or a year; then, however uninviting and sultry the location, however trying to flesh and blood, however irksome to the impatient disposition, however perilously exposed to danger, there was no option but to remain encamped.

God often keeps us waiting. Face to face with threatening foes, in the midst of alarms, encircled by perils, beneath the impending rock. May we not go? Is it not time to strike our tent? Have we not suffered to the point of utter collapse? May we not exchange the glare and heat for green pastures and still waters? There is no answer. The cloud tarries, and we must remain, though sure of manna, rock-water, shelter, and defence. God never keeps us at a post without sending us daily supplies.

But wait, domestic servant, do not give notice! Young man, do not be in a hurry to make a change! Minister, remain at your post! Until the cloud clearly moves, you must tarry. Compare 8th verse.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 26.

"What good soever the Lord shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee.—Num. x. 32.

Hobab was a Gentile by race, but he was invited to fellowship with Israel in all the blessings of the covenant. Moses reckoned that Israel was called to a stewardship of the manifold blessings of their lot. Whatever good was entrusted to them, they were called upon to distribute and pass on. As the Lord did them good, they would do Hobab good; making him, Gentile though he were, a fellow-heir, a fellow-member of the body, and a fellow-partaker of the promises of God.

We get by giving.—If the river-bed were to hoard up its waters, they would become stagnant and noisome. It is only in parting with them that it receives constant supplies from the crystal fountain-head. So, if we keep God's good things to ourselves, we make it impossible to receive more. You cannot put more water into a full glass. But as we part with them we get more and better. Distribute five loaves and you have twelve baskets of fragments.

We learn by teaching.—To stay in a class till you shall feel fully educated, is to miss one prime means of education. There is no way of discovering what we do not know, and getting grounded in what we do, like that of imparting what we have learnt to others. Would you learn, teach.

We keep what we give away.—Hoard your money and you lose it. Give it away, and it is caught in bags that wax not old, and is stored beyond the reach of moth or thief. This is folly to the worldling, but sober fact to the child of the King.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 27.

"Art thou jealous for my sake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets."—Num. xi. 29.

This one saying proves the incomparable greatness of Moses's character. Little souls are monopolists. They like to be good and gifted, because it gives them a kind of superiority to others; but they dislike to see a levelling up process at work by which the Eldads and Medads are lifted to stand by their side.

This was the mistake of Joshua.—He was immature, a saint in the process of manufacture, and smitten with jealousy, for the sake of his master and friend.

This was the complaint of John's disciples, when they saw the crowds ebbing away from their great teacher.

This was the quarrel of the Pharisees, that Jesus made religion so cheap and accessible to all, that even the publicans and sinners received his priceless wares.

But when a man is really great and good, he longs that all should be as he is, and better; he takes a deep delight in the spread of vital godliness; he is glad when others are endowed with greater gifts than himself, that they may make the Gospel better known than he could ever do: he is content to decrease, if Christ may only increase; he is willing that affliction should be added to his bonds, if only Christ may be magnified; he prays that the Lord would put his Spirit on all his people. This is very unnatural to any of us, but God, the Holy Spirit, waits to baptize us even into this. Make haste, O blessed Paraclete, and do this for me.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 28.

"We were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight."—Num. xiii. 33.

There is a good deal of talk in this chapter about giants and fenced cities. But the way of speaking about them was very different on the part of the ten, and on that of the two. They saw the same spectacles in their survey of the land, but the result in the one case was panic, in the other confidence and peace. What made the difference? It lay in this, that the ten spies compared themselves with the giants, whilst the two compared the giants with God. "The Lord is with us, fear them not."

Faith looks away from the greatness of her difficulty to the greatness of her God. If considered in itself, it is clear that this difficulty is too great for me to combat, but it is nothing to my God. The wall is too solid and high for me, but before God's touch it will fall down like cardboard. These ropes are stout, but before God they are only as tow before flame. I will not consider the man that shall die, and the son of man shall be made as grass, but will look away resolutely to my Maker, who made heaven and earth, and who can still the roaring of the sea.

Do you want a fearless faith; be careful not to measure the comparative forces of yourself and others; but remember that God is working for you to will and do of his own good pleasure. If He is for you, who can be against you? When compared with Primrose Hill, Snowdon is high, but where is it when compared with the Himalayas?

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29.

"The Egyptians shall hear of it."—Num. xiv. 13.

What a noble concern for the credit of God! Here was a great opportunity for Moses. God was testing him by the proposal, that, the entire nation of Israel being cut off as a judgment for their repeated shortcomings and transgressions, Moses should become the slip or stock of the Hebrew race: "I will disinherit them, and make of thee a nation greater and mightier than they." This was not the settled purpose of God, but a suggestion to test his servant, who nobly responded to it. All thought of the honour to be done to himself was submerged before his great eagerness for the Divine credit. "The Egyptians shall hear of it: the nations which have heard the fame of thee will speak, saying, Because the Lord was not able..."

The Egyptians are always around us, watching and listening. They can only judge of God by our behaviour and the course of our experience: and are only too ready to catch up anything which they may interpret to the discrediting of the Eternal. How careful we should be in all our life and conversation so that the ungodly may have not lower but loftier conceptions of our God.

When tempted to anything which is not perfectly noble and honourable; when inclined to murmur and complain of God's dealings with you; when an opportunity comes, as it did to Moses, to make gain at the expense of others; then remember the name of God, and the urgency of need that exists, to maintain it unsullied and untarnished. We are restrained by a double fear; first, lest we should grieve God; second, lest the Egyptians should have a handle against Him, and should be prejudiced against religion.

"A cord of blue."—Num. xv. 38.

Throughout their generations, the Israelites were bidden to wear it. It is the symbol of depth, of love, of Heaven. The azure sky, the glacier-rift, the deep lake, the far horizon, the eye of the hopeful, buoyant, tender nature—all tell the same story of deep and constant love, which mirrors below God's heaven of love above. Therefore to wear this cord of blue was to be kept in mind of the eternal and unseen. No outward symbol is needed by us. The very best, after awhile, becomes tame and commonplace. We get so accustomed to it that it ceases to stir our thoughts. But if we will entrust ourselves to the Holy Spirit, He will keep us always in mind. He is the sweet Remembrancer, whose mission is to bring Christ to our thought and keep Him there, the prominent object of our soul's vision.

The object of this cord of blue was to restrain the people from going about "after their own heart and their own eyes." We need to be kept from the same, that we may walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. In our resolutions, our energies, our acts of consecration, our Christian activities, we are all too apt to go at the dictates of our heart and eyes. May God forgive us! It has been the source of our perpetual failure and defeat. There is a more excellent way. Let us ask the Holy Spirit to keep the blue cord of the Christ memory ever before our gaze, that we may become utterly absorbed in his beauty and glory, in doing his will, and in executing his commands.

MADAGASCAR AND MISSIONS.—The committee of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions, after a careful consideration of the situation in Madagascar in the light of recent events, military and political, has resolved to send a trusty agent to the island, to inquire diligently into the necessity and possibility of the intervention of the Society, and as to what form (if any) such intervention should take. The committee calls upon Christians to pray for God's blessing upon these and any ensuing measures.

DECEMBER 1.

David Anointed King.—1 Sam. xvi. 1-13.

Golden Text.—Verse 7.

Our lesson tells us of two things:—I. The Sacrificial Feast at Bethlehem (1-5). The command to hold such a feast came to Samuel when his lamentation over Saul threatened to be excessive (1). He had reason for grief, first, for Saul's sake. It was sad to the last degree that one whose career had begun so hopefully should, through repeated acts of disobedience, have been so soon rejected by God. The wreck of such a promising career could not but fill him with grief. But he grieved for the country's sake also. With a king on the throne whom God had rejected, what hope was there for the nation?

Yet these things did not wholly justify his continued grief. And this command reminded him that the welfare of the nation was as much to God as to him, and that the time had come when lamentation should give place to action. Such are still God's methods of curing our grief—a larger faith in Him, and active service for Him.

The sacrifice was an occasion of worship. He needed for it a heifer (2) as a peace offering, and a horn of oil (1) for the anointing of the king. It seems to have been Samuel's custom, in going from place to place as judge, to hold such services in order to encourage the worship of God (see ix. 12). It is possible that such a feast was an annual thing at Bethlehem (xx. 6). That the new king should have been chosen and appointed at such a service was most fitting. The nation belonged to God; and the king must be of his providing. His language (ver. 1) seems to suggest a contrast between Saul, given in response to the people's demand, and possessing the qualities that commended him to them, and David, whom God nominated, and who would govern the nation as his vicegerent. God's appointment for us is best, and the way to know his appointment is to wait upon Him in the spirit of worship.

Obedience to God's command brought Samuel to Bethlehem, about six miles south of Jerusalem, and to the house of Jesse, grandson of Boaz and Ruth. There was danger in the undertaking. What would Samuel's life be worth if Saul heard of him anointing another king in his stead (2)? And after the breach between Saul and Samuel, the Bethlehemites had reason to fear the wrath of the king if they appeared to take sides with Samuel (4). Yet it is always safe to obey God. He may not show us the way through our difficulty, and may require us to take one step at a time (3), but it is the wisest course to trust and obey.

II.—The Anointing of David (6-13). — There were sometimes two anointings to the office of king, one private, intended rather as an intimation to the person himself, and the other public and formal (compare 2 Sam. ii. 4). This lesson tells of David's anointing in the first sense.

That the choice of God fell on David is a striking illustration of the Golden Text. Even Samuel was in danger of judging by the outward appearance, and would have accepted Eliab (6) for the same reason that led him to recommend Saul (x. 24). The qualities for which men look are not overlooked by God, but they do not occupy the first place. He wants moral conditions—the man whose heart is right has the first qualification for usefulness. The physical and mental conditions necessary would come to David in the future, At present, he was conspicuous for devout piety, marked by fidelity to the lowly work of a shepherd, by meek endurance of the contempt of his brethren, and by strong and simple faith in God.

How often God has chosen men whom others have despised (1 Cor. i. 26-29). Think of the fishermen of Galilee, of Paul, who was denounced as "in bodily presence weak, and in speech contemptible;" of Milton, who was blind; of John Bunyan, of William Carey. There is no life that may not be dignified and ennobled by being fully surrendered to God.

This first introduction of David to our notice is specially interesting. He appears as a youth, probably about the age of fifteen; "ruddy" (12), referring either to the colour of his hair, or to his fresh and rosy complexion, "beautiful countenance," literally beautiful eyes, probably connected with his gift for poetry and music, which expresses itself in the eye; "comely," i.e., well proportioned and graceful in figure, though not unusual in stature. His training had been received at home, in the fields of Bethlehem, in tending his sheep, in the study of the Scriptures, and in his quiet meditation upon God. God calls to higher positions of usefulness those who faithfully serve Him in the opportunities they have.

It is possible that the purpose of the ceremony was not understood by his brethren: but with the anointing came the Holy Spirit, which the oil symbolised (13). This secured to him all needed wisdom and grace for the office he was called to fill. God always endues those whom He commissions.

"SALT."

Stephen Watson was a general favourite wherever he went, and had you known him you would have loved him too. No one, to look at him, would have imagined that he had a "besetting sin," which threatened to mar the beauty of his character. That is what every bad habit does, no matter how small and trifling it may be.

Stephen Watson wished to become a minister of the Gospel. His parents knew that his hasty temper was most unbecoming in one who one day hoped to be a servant of the meek and lowly Jesus, and did all in their power to convince him of the sin and folly of yielding to it. But Stephen wished to be considered brave and manly, and thought that wise as King Solomon was, he had made a great mistake when he wrote those words, "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city."

Stephen was both clever and studious, and the time soon came when he must leave home to go to college. The last session at this village school passed only too rapidly.

Had it not been for his quick temper Stephen's parents would have felt no anxiety as to his leaving home, and happily for them a little circumstance occurred which greatly lessened their fears concerning him.

On the afternoon previous to his departure he went out to say a final good-bye to several of his companions, and when he returned home every one noticed how flurried and excited he looked. Observing a quick glance of enquiry upon his mother's face, he exclaimed, "I'm afraid that unruly temper of mine will always be my master. On my way home I met Martin Saddler, who always annoys me by the provoking way he talks. I was determined not to be aggravated with him, but when we shook hands on parting he said with a mischievous grin, 'I expect you'll be tamed before I see you again, old boy!' Up my temper flew as usual, while he stood laughing at having put me out."

"What a pity you didn't give him a good pinch of salt, it would have done you both good," said Uncle John. He was seated in an easy chair, reading the evening paper, but overheard all that Stephen said. His remark came so unexpectedly, and seemed so out of place, that the young folks looked at each other in wonder, while Stephen himself exclaimed, "Whatever do you mean, Uncle John?" "Can't you guess?" he asked kindly, laying down his paper as he spoke. "No, indeed I can't. I know that salt is invaluable, used for an innumerable variety of purposes, but what connection it has with Martin Saddler and myself is a puzzle I cannot solve," Stephen replied. "When you are a minister you will understand all about it, and meanwhile I'll try to explain my meaning. Don't you remember what rule St. Paul gives us regarding our speech? Perhaps not, so here it is, 'Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt.' Now, had I been in your place when Martin Saddler uttered his ungracious remark, I would have taken it in good part, and answered, 'I hope so; but don't you pity the tamers?' He would have been surprised, and perhaps disappointed; but you yourself would have been much happier. To me the word 'salt' has a fourfold meaning," continued Uncle John, while all around were listening intently. "Each letter carries a tiny message in itself, and I'll tell you what each one says—

S 'Speak the truth in love.'
A 'A soft answer turneth away wrath.'
L 'Love thy neighbour as thyself.'
T 'The Lord God is my strength.'

"The Lord Jesus called his disciples 'the salt of the earth,' which means that they, by their good examples, their kind words and actions, should help to stop the progress of sin around them. God has scattered good people all over the world so that by their influence they might, like salt, preserve the world from destruction. Salt both seasons and preserves."

As Stephen listened to his uncle's words, his surprise turned to admiration, and he said earnestly, "I will never forget what I've just heard. The little word with its four-fold meaning shall be my motto, and I'll strive to act up to it every day."

"I'm glad to hear you say so," answered Uncle John. "I think the first two verses will be specially helpful to you. Too often when people speak the truth they forget the other two words, 'in love,' and so they vex the spirit, or arouse the temper of those they desire to benefit. Then when people are tired and cross, that is the time when most need a kind word. Young as you are, you have often seen that grievous words stir up anger. Try, then, the effect of 'a soft answer.' We all know you have a large, generous heart, but do not forget that the last verse is the key-note to all the rest. We can only conquer self by the power of God, so whenever you are tempted to despond, think of the fourth little message, and take courage."

While at college, Stephen made many friends. Sometimes his haughty temper almost overpowered him, but his companions never guessed the inward struggle he had to suppress it. Had they known about his strange motto, they would have understood how it was that they heard him whisper to himself a little word that sounded very like, "salt."

In due time Stephen Watson became a most earnest and successful young minister. In the course of one of the first "Children's sermons" he preached, he told the story of how he succeeded in ruling his spirit, by trying to act up to the precepts suggested by the little word "salt." M. I. J.

AMONG THE ESKIMO.

The Eskimo are a little known people; very few have lived among them or learnt their language, except the Moravian Brethren. On Labrador there are about 2000 Eskimos; of these 1000 are church members. Okok is their most populous station, and with the 360 souls there I spent Saturday and Sunday, August 24 and 25 I arrived by the steamboat Sir Donald, sent out by the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen to work on the coast of Labrador.

Sunday was a day of quietness and rest. During the summer months but few Eskimo are around the station. The able-bodied men go to their fishing grounds, bag and baggage, including family. Thus at the morning service we only had about fifty people. In the afternoon we had English service. The Eskimo came and joined very heartily in the singing. It seemed strange speaking to these people in English, for the Eskimo outnumbered the English. As a result of the Moravian Mission here, many thousands of Eskimo have turned from their Augekoks to serve the living and the true God. There is a dark cloud hanging over the mission-station. Some families were taken to Chicago to the World's Fair, and these seem to have brought back typhoid fever with them. The disease has spread with alarming rapidity. At Nain, ninety-two persons died last winter, and sixty in other places. The majority of these seem to have been typhoid. The fever is still raging in Okok, but we all hope and pray that through the good offices of Mr. Grenfell, of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, the ravages of the disease may be stayed, and those already sick may be saved. So far no missionary has been attacked. W. B. Wakefield.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOME.

The Home is filling up and getting an occupant into each little bed. A few elder girls, having brothers or sisters in Canada, are in training, and hope to go out to them in the spring. We cannot but be thankful to see the spirit which is influencing them and moulding them into new beings, with new aims and desires, to follow their Saviour more closely. It is delightful to witness these young lives changing for the better, for their future life will bear such different results.

The widows' sewing class has been resumed for the winter. The dear old friends are most grateful to God that He prepares the heart of one of his servants again to defray the expenses of this class. They are brought into contact with some very loving-hearted ladies who delight in attending to them.

AN EVENING WITH DR. BARNARDO'S BOYS.

Someone has said that he who plants a tree is a benefactor to the race. If that be true, what shall be said of those who take up young human lives that are either going rapidly into downward courses, or are in imminent peril of extinction; who replant them, so to speak, in the best soil, provide them with proper nutriment, and surround them with heaven's own atmosphere; changing them from the bane into the blessing of society? That, in brief, is the work attempted and accomplished by Dr. Barnardo's Homes. And there is no diviner work done by any institution on the face of this planet.

This conviction came home with great force to the heart of the writer, as he spent an evening lately in the Mildmay Conference Hall, with the party of Dr. Barnardo's musical boys, who are in charge of Mr. J. B. Wookey, the popular deputation secretary of the Homes. Every single lad is a powerful argument in favour of the work, and their cumulative evidence forms a plea that is simply irresistible. If these lads, so handicapped by primal taint and evil bias, can be trained to such perfection within a very few years, there is no limit to the miracles of transformation that can be wrought by the power of God.

Let us step from the street into the brightly lighted hall. The audience is streaming in, everybody looking eager and expectant. The tartan-kilted and plaided little pipers are disposing of programmes, while the brass and reed band, which fills the entire platform, is "tuning up." Presently, to the baton of Mr. Davis, the youthful players give selections while the people assemble. We can discern successively the strains of some classic tit-bit, or of a good old tuneful ballad, mingled with snatches of still merrier minstrelsy. All are rendered with a taste and expression that speak well for leader and performers alike.

The chairman (in this case Col. Morton, superintendent of the Mildmay work) ascends the platform, and everyone joins in singing a well-known hymn, supported by the band. Most earnest and specific prayer for a blessing on the evening's engagements, and on the work of the Homes generally, is offered by Rev. A. Downes Shaw, another deputation secretary. Then the president, in a few well-chosen sentences, heartily welcomes Mr. Wookey and his lads; appropriately adding some weighty reasons why society and the State should feel heavily indebted to Dr. Barnardo, for looking after so many of those for whom nobody else seems to realize their responsibility. Then the audience settles down to the enjoyment of the banquet of sweet sound that is outlined on the programme.

The orphan handbell-ringers brace themselves to their task, and speedily show such a deft handling of their instruments as might almost excite the jealousy of Mr. Donald Miller and his famous company of campanologists. They play the village chimes with exquisite melody and perfect modulation. The hearer is carried away in imagination to some sequestered rural spot, where the evening chimes ring out from village spire on the peaceful summer air. Three sacred strains are interwoven into "the tintinnabulation of the bells." A cleverly executed trio on the dulcimer, the tubeaphone, and the xylophone, is followed by another performance by the orphan ringers—this time a delightful musical rendering of Poe's famous poem, "Bells, bells, bells!" How these brazen tongues are made to speak!

The next item, a performance on four ocarinos, given by the boys for the first time in public, fairly "brought down the house," as the saying goes. It had to be repeated later in the evening. This curious instrument yields wonderful effects in the skilled hands of these gifted boys. But the enthusiasm of the audience rises to white heat when the weird, wild notes of the bagpipes are heard, swelling into louder volume as the six Scotch piper boys enter the hall and march through the aisles. Strange as it may seem to Sassenach ears, no music makes the blood of a northerner to leap tumultuously in his veins like that of the pipes. History tells how under its compelling power, Highland regiments have swung valiantly into battle and been borne forward to victory. We reflect with pleasure that in this case the young pipers have the happier privilege of rousing sluggish spirits to the saving of life, and not to the destruction of it. Long live the little pipers!

After this full meal of dulcet music we were in tune for Mr. Wookey's address. That address was in perfect keeping with all that had gone before, though a good deal of it was set in the minor key. He began with a thrilling story of the Peninsular War, telling how the opposing forces ceased their fighting in order to give a universal cheer to a gallant officer who risked his all to save a belated camp-follower, a poor girl of disreputable life. The moral was obvious. Should not all sections of good Christians, and even good citizens, unite in the saving of the many young lives that tenant our city slums, and that are in still more evil case? In tones tremulous with deep feeling and suppressed emotion, he pictured the conditions in which many of the boys and girls are found. Mr. Wookey was well within the mark when he said that any parent present would and bury the little one there, than permit that child to spend twenty-four hours in places where thousands of little children spend long, weary years.

The speaker passed on to brighter themes when he described the ever-open door of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, with absolutely no bar to the admission of children really friendless and destitute; the processes of careful Christian and industrial training through which the children pass; and the avenues of happy, useful work that open up to them through the agency of the Homes. Into these details it is impossible in a short notice to enter; but the world is pretty familiar with them. Mr. Wookey, having cited some striking cases of blessed rescue and transformation, closed his earnest and effective advocacy of the work of the Homes, by an appeal for generous help in the shape of a good collection towards the support of the five thousand children now resident in them.

Last of all, and in some respects best of all, came the series of fine dissolving views, illustrating the varied phases of the work. These pictures, executed in a high style of art, appealed powerfully to the eye; while Mr. Wookey's running comments and descriptions successfully laid siege to the sympathetic ear. The whole was a plea for the work which has been sustained now for some thirty years by Dr. Barnardo and his helpers, which only a hardened heart could resist. The final performance, by the hand-bell ringers, of "Home, Sweet Home" was at once a reminder of the joys of true home-life; and, per contra, of the sorrowful case of so many little ones who are bereft of home and all that it implies, till this admirable institution takes them in and trains them for the better home above.

An evening spent with Mr. Wookey and his band of musical lads from Dr. Barnardo's Homes is a real enjoyment in itself; not to speak of the opportunity it affords of furthering the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ in a most effectual way.

CANON WILBERFORCE was the chief speaker at the annual meeting held last week of the Westbourne Park temperance and social crusade.

BARNWELL MISSION, CAMBRIDGE.

The seventeenth anniversary of the Theatre Royal Barnwell Mission was held on Thursday evening, November 14, commencing with a substantial tea, to which 250 people sat down. At seven o'clock the public meeting began, the chair being taken by Rev. W. R. Mowll, M.A., who was supported by many well-known friends of the work, the speakers representing several denominations.

After prayer, the indefatigable secretary, Mr. W. K. Vawser, read the report, which stated that the much-needed repairs and renovation of the building had been accomplished at a cost of £230; towards this £203 has been collected by friends of the Mission. He referred to the excellent work of the past year, and to the blessing that had been received.

Rev. J. G. Dixon pointed out the necessity of the power of the Holy Spirit if souls were to be won for Christ. Rev. T. G. Tarn dwelt upon the brightness of the Christian faith, and mentioned four occasions when our Lord told his disciples to be of good cheer; giving them strong reasons why this should be so. Rev. J. Procter touched very happily upon the friendship of the Saviour. Mr. A. Hart, Corpus Christi College, who has thrown much zeal and energy into the work, delivered a stirring address on the importance of a personal knowledge of a living Christ; and Mr. Walker, the missionary, uttered some bright and encouraging words with reference to the individual help all might render in the spread of the Gospel.

The meeting was brought to a close by an address from the Chairman, who took one of the mottoes inscribed on the walls, "Watch and pray," and pressed upon the audience the importance of these precepts. Miss Tyler sang two solos very sweetly, and all felt that a most profitable evening had been spent.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The seventeenth annual report reminds us that it is about five years since the Mission House at Billingsgate was opened. We read: "Our confidence was in God, and therefore we were not discouraged, being well assured that, sooner or later, He would vindicate his own cause. Though we continued to faithfully warn and entreat, we saw comparatively little in the way of results.

"But, during the year which has just been brought to a close, we have had the preliminary showers, the prelude to the 'abundance of rain' which we are convinced is soon to follow. The blessed Spirit has been doing his own gracious work in the hard, dry hearts of many down here, convicting them of sin, showing them their real condition before God, making them aware of their need and their danger, and gently constraining them to fly to Christ for salvation, and find in Him the One who can and does meet all their needs for time and eternity.

"This is what we have been longing and praying for, and this is what it is now our privilege to rejoice over, for those to whom we refer are now in our midst, and are daily bearing their testimony to the grace and power of our God to save and to keep all who come unto Him through Jesus Christ. But this foretaste of blessing, so far from satisfying, has only whetted our appetites for more. It has strengthened our faith, and constrained us to ask for, and expect, a fuller manifestation of the blessed Spirit's power."

Copies of the report, and further information, may be had from the devoted hon. sec. of the Mission, Mr. A. Walters, 6, The Corridor, Billingsgate Market, E.C. The friends of the work are specially exercised in the matter of the heavy debt (£4000) still remaining on the building.

FOREIGNERS IN LONDON.—On Saturday afternoon, by kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Young, of Blackheath, a large number of ladies and gentlemen gathered in their drawing-room to meet some of the London City Missionaries to Foreigners, and hear from them accounts of their work. Among those who spoke were Mr. Ehrlich, who has laboured for thirty-four years evangelising amongst Jews in Whitechapel; Mr. Gillman, missionary for over twenty years to Spaniards, Portuguese, Italians, and Frenchmen; Mr. Salter, who for over forty years has been endeavouring to win the Asiatic and African to Christ; Rev. B. W. Bucke, vicar of Holy Trinity, Lee; and Mr. George R. Cole, of the City Mission House.

Mrs. E. M. Whittemore,

OF THE DOOR OF HOPE, NEW YORK.

When quite a young girl the subject of our sketch became greatly interested in religious things, and subsequently united with the Church; but like many another, the great mistake was made of endeavouring to imitate Christians instead of Christ; the consequence being, that a few years later found her following the Lord afar off, and mingling with those who sought worldly pleasures. Repeatedly in the years which followed was she made conscious of a sense of real loss; never feeling satisfied unless under some whirl of excitement, such as entertaining or attending receptions or dinners parties.

A short time after her marriage she met with a serious accident, which caused great suffering for over twelve years, portions of which were spent in regretful reviews of the past and a longing to be a true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mrs. Whittemore says: "One evening before going out to an entertainment I went upstairs to bid my little boy good night, and said, 'How do you think mamma looks?' With an expression of injured innocence he looked at my bare arms and neck, and said, 'Oh but, mamma, you are not going out like that!' 'Why, dear child?' 'Oh, mamma, you're not dressed.' Visions of the white robes which are the righteousness of the saints passed before me; nevertheless I went. Later on I went to hear Mr. Henry Varley when he visited New York, and was thoroughly awakened from my worldliness by his searching and scathing words."

After much persuasion on his wife's part, prompted somewhat by curiosity to see the converted river thief, Mr. Whittemore took her to the old Jerry McAuley Mission, at 316, Water-street, with the distinct understanding that she was never to ask to go again. They remained to the after-meeting and went forward to the upper part of the hall, thinking to help the poor things who were gathered there, but instead of helping they were helped. After listening to several stirring testimonies, and heart-searching words from Jerry, both husband and wife became so deeply convicted that they decided to return to the One they professed to love, but of whom they had possessed so little that no true enjoyment was found in his service.

When Jerry asked any who desired to be prayed for to rise, Mrs. Whittemore's pride rose against being prayed for by a thief, even though converted; but to her amazement her husband, a stiff Presbyterian, stood right up, and before they left the meeting she had risen also. That night she began to appreciate the reality of God, and from that time everything changed, and by degrees love for things contrary to God's will was crowded out, and intense desire for the salvation of souls occupied their place.

Shortly after this, in answer to prayer, her health was restored in a most marked manner, therefore she took it as a sacred trust to be used to the glory of God, for with the healing came a blessed consciousness of the abiding Christ.

Divine preparation is always necessary to secure blessed results; therefore, after the work among fallen girls was presented to her mind, during a season of much waiting upon Him for service, God so laid restrictions upon her regarding the work, that it must be all of faith, that six years passed away before the desire of her heart was gratified in possessing a Home to take these poor wanderers into.

On this point Mrs. Whittemore writes:—"Had I been permitted to have acted upon my natural impulses and opened a place of shelter at once, although in a measure the effort might have been blessed, those intervening years, which proved to be educational ones for this special undertaking, would never have been experienced, nor could the needs of those I am now labouring for have been so appreciated or understood. Hours were spent during this period in conversing with many of this class, not only in the upper part of our city behind elegant stone fronts, but in the gambling dens, dance halls, and lower haunts in the slums. The question would force itself upon me from time to time, What can be done for the poor deluded girls who have never yet seen any but the gilded side of sin, without fully experiencing its horrors? Large numbers of them I found came from most respectable families. Some, having been cruelly deceived, became desperate, and gave themselves recklessly up to a life of dissipation, as repeatedly they have explained, to endeavour to drown their sorrows."

Many of these girls being educated, and, to a certain extent, refined, shrink from mingling constantly with those in the lower walks of life, as the world terms it, although fully alive to the fact that they may be equally as sinful. One such, rescued not long since, could illustrate the truth of this as having actually experienced the process of a somewhat rapid downward career, from the lap of luxury to starvation quarters, and the hard side of a board for a bed. Thank God, she has a heart full of praises now, and is not only washed and redeemed in the blood of the Lamb, but is daily striving to warn others of the consequences of sin.

For these reasons it was useless to urge them to enter regular places of reform, although it could be plainly seen, underneath their tinselled finery, aching hearts existed. What could be done? It was, indeed, a difficult problem to solve, and called for much waiting upon God in earnest prayer, for wisdom and the means to open a suitable house to receive such as would be glad to do differently. Accordingly, one day our friend felt the time had come to take a bold step of faith in obedience to the Spirit's promptings, trusting God to provide a suitable home, and looking to Him for its maintenance.

On October 25, 1890, the house 162, East Sixty-first-street, New York, was dedicated to God as "The Door of Hope," and has since been known as a Home started principally for the educated classes of young girls who have turned aside from that which is right—although others, less favoured in this respect, are not altogether excluded. Suitable places are provided for them through the Home, either there or elsewhere, as it seems most expedient, as none are refused admittance. No bolts or bars, nor, in fact, over-persuasions, are resorted to, to retain an inmate against her will. Every encouragement is offered to all, not only simply to reform or lead useful lives, but to accept the tender mercies of a Saviour's love. Numbers already have taken Christ beneath its roof, and several are rejoicing now, in comfortable homes of their own, that God did so guide them to repudiate the evil and accept the good while there. Some have returned to their parents, making glad their hearts once more. On the other hand there have also been great disappointments over some who promised well at first. But after all, God looks far more at how one does what He gives to be done than at the mere present results.

All procured through the sale of tracts and books goes in the same direction, under the Delia Memorial Fund, instituted in memory of one of the dear redeemed girls, who was rescued out of one of the worst dives in Mulberry Bend (whose story was told in our issue for October 3). This united effort in a little over three years, has meant over four thousand dollars, and one of the converted girls going forth a few weeks since as a missionary to the dark continent of Africa.

In her published papers, Mrs. Whittemore gives instances of God's faithfulness, we extract one or two, by way of stimulating the faith of others.

Only a few weeks ago, the last ten dollars were handed to the matron with a promise of more the following day for current expenses. All that afternoon most prayerfully did I claim what was required, yet without apparent results. The next morning, and still no money. Previous to starting for the Door of Hope, and feeling somewhat tested, I suddenly remembered a small amount held in the savings bank (for a special object that required to be met later on). The thought came to draw out what was requisite, and trust God to replace it before needed. But on finding the draft on the bank mislaid, which would necessitate going down town to the place myself, I was obliged to give it up for lack of time.

Upon reaching the Home, after some prayerful meditations, concluded if I had acted upon impulse, my faith would have been weakened, and only a tiding-over a trying place for awhile accomplished.

We had a most blessed service that morning. One after another withdrew at the close, and a little later I myself was obliged to depart. Feeling somewhat humiliated while walking down the steps, I was impressed before returning home to call upon a sick friend a few blocks away. Upon entering her room

I noticed an envelope on the mantelpiece addressed with my name. During our conversation it was handed to me, but not distinctly catching what was said in reference to it, I quietly placed the note in my bag; before reaching the house, it occurred to me to open it, and if a request for prayer (as I naturally supposed) I decided to hold the matter before the Lord at once. To my surprise there was not even a line inside, but fifty dollars. My heart was indeed full of praise, and I understood why God prompted the visit at that special time, for although she would have sent it, He desired her to have the pleasure of giving it to me herself, as He had suggested the gift without any knowledge upon her part of the need.

The next week two coal bills were presented amounting to 79 dollars. Where the money was to come from I had no conception; but after prayerfully committing all to God, my heart was caused again to rejoice by receiving a most unlooked for letter from one who never before had contributed towards the home, and a cheque for 100 dollars, stating that she felt prompted for some unknown reason to send that amount without delay.

During the five years since this Home was founded over forty-five thousand dollars have been graciously bestowed to carry on this work, simply by taking God at his word. During this time two Homes have been purchased, known as Door of Hope one and two. Then a Door of Hope Union was established, and fifteen other Homes have been opened in various States under the same name.

All this has been accomplished by simply saying "Yes" to God, standing still, giving Him all the glory as He works, and enjoying with joy unspeakable and full of glory the fruit that will remain throughout eternity in the lives of hundreds, who are so readily censured, and so greatly misunderstood, and yet can be made acceptable in the Beloved by one doing the will of God.

He wills for us to do his will,
And if we will the same,
Whate'er we do will ever bring
Great glory to his name.

WORK IN CORSICA.

For the second time, we are working in the important commune of Bocequano, at the foot of the Monte d'Oro, in the centre of Corsica. Last year we appeared here as somewhat forlorn wayfarers, only enabled to make good our footing, because ready to sleep under canvas in the woods, every door in the village being closed against us as "Protestants!" But the preaching of the Gospel soon drew the people; and they came in hundreds to hear the Gospel message.

Infuriated denunciations, at the same time, appeared in Le Conservateur, an Ajaccian newspaper in circulation here. In spite, however, of open and covert warfare, we had many a friend here when we left to go to Ajaccio, where we worked for the rest of the autumn; thereafter spending the winter in corresponding effort at Bastia.

As the summer advanced our thoughts again turned to Bocequano; and we managed to rent for a time, part of an historic old house known as "the Palace." Accompanied by my wife, and aided by our Italian colporteur evangelist, we have been preaching in Bocequano, both in the open air and in the spacious "Sala" of the old house, filled on every occasion to its utmost capacity. The women and children, frightened away last year, returned as soon as they found that this time we were in the village and not in the forest. The men sit round in serried ranks, and the utmost respectful stillness is observed by all while the preaching is going on.

The priestly attacks have been renewed from the pulpit and by writing, and every inducement to disorder resorted to, but the people in general and the authorities approve of our efforts, and the veil of dense ignorance and prejudice has now to some extent been rent away; the people show they are determined to hear the Word of God quietly.

In Bastia we have some visible fruits of our labours in converted souls. In this distant island we need the prayers and the sympathy of Christian friends. A more detailed account will be issued shortly. Meanwhile we remind our readers of the needs of the mission. A. S. D. Colquhoun.

THE LIFE OF MR. RADCLIFFE.

The following extract from one of the chapters of the forthcoming biography is by Dr. H. M. Williamson, late of Huntly, now of Belfast:—

It would be very difficult to give anyone an idea of the spiritual condition of great districts of Aberdeenshire and Banffshire in those years (1858-59). Suffice it to say that any profession of personal salvation as possessed and enjoyed, was branded as presumption, hypocrisy, or self-righteousness. The district was called, spiritually, "The Dead Sea." The preaching of morality, instead of salvation by grace, for half a century, had covered large districts with immorality, illegitimacy, drunkenness, and covetousness. It was in such a district that God was pleased to bless the labours of his servants. From Huntly as a centre, for many weeks, at intervals, he preached the Gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; also in Forfarshire, Aberdeenshire, Banffshire, and Inverness-shire.

The great secret of the blessing which came from God to the awakening of the whole districts, the quickening of Christians and the salvation of multitudes, was prayer, continued, fervent, believing, expectant. There was never anything very striking in Mr. Radcliffe's addresses, in the way of depth of thought, or freshness of illustration, or novelty of interpretation. Through communion with the living Christ, the word came forth with living and life-giving power. It was simply in which Christ rode in conquering power into the hearts of men.

While sojourning at the Duchess of Gordon's residence, Huntly Lodge, it was Mr. Radcliffe's wont to wander in the woods, alone with God. While thus holding communion with God, through his Word, some text or truth apprehended him, so as to take possession of him. Thus held by the truth, when the evening came and the meeting was held, he poured it forth like a torrent of lava, blistering the conscience, awakening the sleeper, terrifying the careless, and in the bright light of the Spirit revealing the Lamb of God. The word, at his mouth, was a hammer, it broke the rocks; it was a fire, it melted the hearts of men. Then followed the meeting for inquirers, when, with Divine wisdom and tenderness, he was found binding up the broken-hearted, pouring oil and wine, and pointing clearly to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

As an illustration of this, I may mention a meeting held in the Free Church, Gartley, near Huntly. The forenoon had been spent in continuous prayer by Mr. Radcliffe, and a number of us who helped him, in the Manse drawing-room. When we reached the church in the evening we found it packed with men; but it was also filled with the felt presence of God. The Lord had gone out before us. The word was indeed with power. The subject was the raising of Lazarus from the dead. The arrow of the Lord was, 'Said I not unto thee that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?' The whole address did not occupy above twenty minutes; but the people were melted like wax before the presence of the Lord. Many a Lazarus came forth from the grave of spiritual death, and afterwards sat at meat with Him, and some of them went forth to preach the Gospel.

I have also a very vivid recollection of a meeting which we held at Rothiemay, a rural parish a few miles from Huntly. A number of us accompanied our brother, to help him by fellowship and prayer. The church was crowded, and Mr. Radcliffe commenced his address; but as he went on, we, who had come with him, felt the absence of the power of God, and with sinking hearts began to call upon Him. He, too, felt that God was not speaking by him. He suddenly paused; said we must appeal to God, and he poured forth his soul in prayer. As he prayed,

THE HOUSE WAS AS IF SHAKEN;

every heart was moved; a great awe fell upon us all, and God wrought mightily. As there was no possibility of dealing with the many anxious souls that night, to the astonishment of the more timid, the evangelist announced a meeting for inquirers, at an early hour the next morning, in that rural district. The Lord rebuked the weak faith of many, and honoured the faith of his servant, by filling the church the next morning with inquirers after God and his salvation.

Preaching excursions were also made in these days into the Highlands of Banffshire and Inverness-shire. We usually held a meeting or two in each village. The work was difficult; yet much fruit followed, not only in individual conversions, but in opening the minds of many to the truth of a present, free, and full salvation, to be at once received and enjoyed. In those days multitudes, in the Highlands, had clear ideas of the great doctrines of the Gospel; but the Gospel offer and the acceptance of it were fenced round with frames, and conditions and experiences, which kept them from accepting Christ, and Christ alone, as the free gift of God. Besides, from the history and traditions of other days, they believed that if evangelical religion, in doctrine and practice, was to be found anywhere, it was to be found in the Highlands, and not in places like Aberdeenshire.

I have a very vivid remembrance of a meeting we held in Inverness. One of the large Gaelic churches was crowded. Deep impressions were made by the truth at his mouth, by the Spirit. The effects upon the minds of many aged men were striking as one saw it in conflict with their religious prejudices. One of the elders, at an after-meeting, evidently deeply impressed, and yet wondering what it meant, prayed somewhat thus: "Lord, we read in thy Word that wise men from the east came to Jerusalem [Aberdeenshire is east of Inverness-shire], seeking the Saviour; and as we have read so we have seen, certainly from a quarter not to be expected." He proceeded: "We read also in thy Word that in prosperous times the sons of the alien and the stranger shall be for vine-dressers and ploughmen; and as we have heard so we have seen this day." Need I add, even in the solemnity of the hour and the work, it required no little effort to restrain our laughter; and yet the worthy man was beautifully simple and in earnest.

The day following was the market day in Inverness. Mr. Radcliffe from the market steps tried to address the multitude. In vain! They gave no heed! Guided by Divine wisdom, he said to a man standing by, "Can you sing?" Replying that he could, Mr. Radcliffe added, "For the Master's sake sing in Gaelic a part of the twenty-third Psalm." He did so, and in a moment every eye was turned toward us, and the multitude took it up; and in that grave, slow, sweet melody, that seemed to swell and eddy and echo to the everlasting hills and the heaven above, they sang that Psalm which has entwined itself in the heart and memory of every Scotchman. And now they were ready for the word of the Gospel, and they received it with gladness.

London Poverty.

2.—An East-End District.

Poverty, in its most crushing and hopeless form, s the daily experience of large numbers in this vealthy Metropolis. This fact is now a common-lace, but sometimes one feels compelled to ask, Is t possible that those whose lot in life is cast amid lenty can revel in luxuries and amusements, vhile their poorer brethren and sisters, with their ittle ones, toil and starve, dying by inches in want nd woe? Surely this apparent indifference must rgely arise from ignorance as to the destitution ctually prevailing in many poor homes.

In giving a few glimpses of how the poor live, et me begin with an East-end district in which I pent some hours visiting with Miss Macpherson's Bible nurse. The Home of Industry is situated in poor and densely-populated district. True, the .C.C. has made immense clearances in Bethnal reen, but the poor people have in many cases imply crowded the closer in the remaining houses.

Our first visit was to an aged widow, who earns n uncertain pittance by selling apples outside the ondon Hospital. She lives in what was probably riginally the "wash-house," a tiny dark room at he back of the house, but she is glad to have it, or it is only a shilling per week—all she can well fford.

A few streets off we reach, after painfully climb-ng long, dark, dangerous stairs, a little attic oom, with two beds and a heap of rags on the oor, which a half-palsied woman is turning over o see, she says, "if any of 'em 'ud make a covering or baby—it's so cold." None of the worn out rags eem suitable, but the nurse is able to assure he mother that the ladies at the Home of Industry ill give her something for the child. The father, shoe-laster, has been out of work eight weeks; here are five children, but mother managed till she ook ill, and a new responsibility coming, work for er became impossible, and now starvation stares he family in the face.

In the next case, the father, a tool-grinder, was lso out of work. There were eight children. The nother, though in weak health, was earning a little o pay the rent.

Entering, further on, a house in a new and rather retty row of houses, erected on one of the L.C.C. learances, I was grieved to find that inside things ere not all fancy had pictured. In one little room as an aged widow—who some time before had been ound fireless, foodless, and friendless. A little help as secured, and the parish is now allowing her 2s. er week. Her landlady (ill, with eight children, nd husband out of work) showed me the set of hree tiny rooms, for which she pays 6s. 6d. They re make no complaint, for, if turned out, where ould they go, with so many little ones and no work? ut, as a matter of fact, the drain-pipes are already n a bad condition, as my own olfactory sense peedily assured me; and all the children have been own with fever.

In our next visit we find a woman crying over ome smouldering embers, with two infants wailing t her knees. The husband has been out of work ll summer, off and on; there are six children; the ife has broken down, and apparently completely ost heart. My companion sought to cheer her up, y present help, and reminder of the best of riends.

In two other cases the secret of trouble was only oo obvious; the poor woman had sought refuge rom her worries in resort to the ginshop, and the abit had grown upon her until she seemed lost to very sense save the longing for something to rink. It is heartbreaking to enter such a room, to ee the hungry pitiful looks of the children, and nark the air of entire neglect pervading the un-wept room. Of all the evils that afflict the London poor surely the last and worst is when the mother takes to drink. Abundant evidence appears that the men spend far too much with the publican, and drag their families to poverty and misery.

At present, however, I have confined myself to decent respectable poor—out of work chiefly—who, being tided over the present crisis, will soon be on their feet again, humble but industrious and independent. Many such suffer sorely, for they scorn to beg; and it is not the most clamant who are the most deserving. Hence the value of loving personal workers, such as those associated with Miss Macpherson, who find out those in real need, minister timely help, and thus win a way for the Gospel they seek to publish.

OPEN AIR MISSION, IRELAND.

Sir,—Knowing that your readers take a deep interest in the work of God in Ireland, I feel that an account of the open-air work up to date will be appreciated, and especially as just now affairs in the town of Sligo are at a serious crisis. We doubt not, however, that the end will be a victory for God and his cause, and that He will vindicate the position of those faithful men and women who are standing out for Him in that town—in perfect weakness, but in dependence upon Him, and for his glory only.

I would, however, first mention that in the other towns where the mission preachers have been during the past summer, they have, we thank God, been free to preach, and in Cork, Galway, Athlone, Tullamore, Portarlington, and Howth the preaching has been carried on without any serious interruption, and to hundreds of attentive listeners. In the last named town there was opposition for several months, and the preachers were protected each day by large bodies of police. This opposition was, however, entirely given up. We thank God for his answer to the prayers of his people in this matter, and that now in so many towns in Ireland the Gospel is preached in the open air to hundreds of anxious listeners. Not long ago such a thing would have been deemed an impossibility, but now it is a reality; and not alone so, but the attitude of the people in most of these towns has altogether altered towards the preachers—from hostility to friendliness, or indifference. This, we believe, will always be the case when they find that there is no object on the part of the preachers but that of love and kindness, and that no proselytising, so called, is intended; but that the Protestants are as much the object of their desire as the Roman Catholics, Jews, or infidels, and that their object is to attack sin, and not sects.

But to return to Sligo, which is now weekly the scene of unexampled riot and violence, which would we believe be scarcely credited by the many who in England are so proud of the religious and civil liberty of the British citizen. The things which have happened in Sligo during the past few months, but more especially during the past three weeks, would disgrace a land uncivilised and that did not profess Christianity: and the only reason assigned for such a state of things is that two or three godly men have felt it their duty to obey the command of God and to seek to preach in the streets of Sligo the Gospel of God's love to sinners. The following is an extract from The Irish Times, giving a report of the state of things:—

> The condition of affairs in the town of Sligo during the past ten days has resembled that of a semi-barbarous rather than of a Christian country. Protestants have been attacked in open daylight on the high roads without any provocation whatever. One lady was knocked down and became insensible as the result of stone-throwing and other violence. Young men were assaulted and a deaf mute thrown down and kicked. Property has been injured and windows smashed on several days during the week by large mobs, which held possession of the town for several hours, until dispersed by the police. The riots culminated on Sunday last by a collection of about 3000 persons outside the house where the members of the Open-Air Mission reside, awaiting their appearance to assault them. Immediately when they appeared volleys of stones were thrown by the mob, who at once assumed a violent and menacing attitude, the result being that several of the police were injured and windows were broken, whereupon the crowd was dispersed with drawn batons. How long this state of affairs is to be permitted to continue is a question that is exercising the minds of many.

It is right here to say that the active assailants in the mob are not so much to blame as those who have instigated them to violence. It is a notorious fact that many of the local authorities are in full sympathy with the mob, and it is well known that not long since the Crown prosecutor was unable to obtain "informations" from the local borough bench in the case of six men who were arrested for riot, and the Crown was obliged to take the extraordinary and unprecedented course of getting the resident magistrate to sit alone without the local magistrates in order that the proper course of law might not miscarry.

A state of intimidation exists in the town, and the Protestants are even coerced into doing what at other times they would be ashamed of.

A Christian young man, recently married and in a good situation in the town, was dismissed by his employer (a Protestant), with one month's pay, because he refused to cease to be on friendly terms with the preachers, although he had only in a most casual way manifested his friendship, and had in no way up to the time of his dismissal identified himself with the street preaching. Once, however, being forced to a decision, he chose for God, although at the entire loss of his income; he has now gone out with the preachers, and is identified with them in preaching the love of God.

Again the gentleman and his wife who were willing to give a lodging to the preachers when they first came to Sligo—and have not since turned them out—have indeed come in for the determined hatred and persecution of the wire-pullers of the present agitation. It has been sought by those in local power to influence the authorities to have this man transferred from his present situation in the Post Office to some other place against his will, although he is an official with unblemished character throughout his official career of seventeen years. Should the authorities give in to such an unjust and underhand attempt to injure a faithful servant for no reason but personal and religious hatred, it will indeed be a scandal which in the interest of the ordinary liberty of the subject could not be permitted to exist.

As we have said we believe the crisis is at hand in Sligo. It is impossible that the present state of affairs can be allowed to continue. We are truly thankful that the preachers and all in sympathy with them have been enabled to maintain a quiet, unresistful, patient spirit throughout the entire of these disturbances, and even their enemies cannot point a finger at them except for "this one cry" that "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." Truly God has blessed them in their faithful endeavour to stand for Him, and we believe that soon in the streets of Sligo God will give an open door for the proclamation of his Gospel, as He has done elsewhere in Ireland. We earnestly desire the prayers of God's people for this work.

Hon. Sec. Open-air Mission.

FEEBLE-MINDED GIRLS.—The Home at Chasefield, Fishponds, near Bristol, is intended for this class of girls, many of whom are incapable of being trained. The result is that they drift from place to place, and after a short time they arrive at the workhouse or some worse place. The Home is in connection with the Bristol Preventive Mission, and has been opened two years. There are inmates from many parts of England. It is a true home in every sense of the word, and the girls look upon it as such. Laundry work is done by those who are strong, and the delicate ones do knitting. In the Home there are twenty-two girls, varying from nine years to twenty-six. Further particulars from Miss G. Russell at the Home.

A VISIT TO KETTERING FEAST.

Kettering "Feast," in Northamptonshire, which, in company with one of the agents of the Open-air Mission, I attended this year, presents a striking illustration of the alienation of the people from public worship. This great annual festival—called "St. Peter's Feast"—comprises a public holiday of the inhabitants lasting a week, and is always inaugurated by a special service in the parish church on the Sunday morning.

The march of the local corps of volunteers to this church on this occasion is the centre of interest, and attracts a vast crowd, who surround and follow the soldiers. It was the sequel to this march which struck us so much. With band playing, the procession passed through the town, and arrived at the church gates, when with one consent the great crowd drew back and turned about, leaving the volunteers to enter alone. And whither did the vast majority of the people proceed that Sunday morning? To some other church or chapel? No, but to the fair ground!

In company with our kind host, Mr. Charles Pollard, and other Christian workers, we hastened to the fair ground too. After distributing tracts and portions of Scripture among the van-dwellers and others, we were readily accorded the use of an open-air stage or platform attached to the ghost show in the centre of the fair, and the kindness of the proprietor was such that he sent out a number of iron garden seats for our greater comfort. There we stood; the audience—a large one—gathered round, and we held a happy service, marked, if tearful eyes are any witness, by evidences of God's blessing.

At these great fairs and feasts multitudes of people congregate—gipsies and show people, traders in various wares, cattle-drovers and shepherds, farmers and labourers, peasants and townspeople, including the vast proportion of the young of both sexes on pleasure bent. I walked through Peterborough Fair one night last month, in the midst of flaring lights and deafening noises, and noted this last fact particularly. It was appalling to see the character of some of the shows provided for these young country-people. They were most demoralising, and it is incomprehensible how the authorities can sanction them.

Herein lies a need for faithful Gospel preaching that cannot be exaggerated. And herein lies the work of this mission—to take to hundreds of such resorts, by its agents, the message of eternal life. We have been greatly encouraged in this department of the work of God during the present year, and much blessing has been vouchsafed. We seek further sympathy and help, that it may be yet more widely extended. Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

HOMES FOR AGED POOR.

A good and useful work is carried on by this charity. At the end of twenty-six years' work in connection with it, eleven homes are occupied by 134 inmates. Seven of these homes are the property of the charity, save for a remaining mortgage of £500 on the Paddington Home. It is earnestly wished that the sum needed to wipe off this claim may be speedily raised. The committee would then see their way to enlarge the charity by building or renting extra homes. That this is much needed more than sixty pressing applications for admission too clearly shows, and "no room" is the sorrowful reply that must be given for the present.

Every effort is made for the spiritual welfare of the inmates. They are supplied with books and magazines, and each home is in the charge of a lady visitor, who, while tenderly caring for the bodily wants of the inmates, strives to point them to the better home beyond. Bible readings are held in most of the homes, and are well-attended and appreciated. Up to the present time all the work of of charity has been done by voluntary helpers. A report and further particulars will be given on application to the honorary secretaries, Misses E. G. and S. A. Harrison, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.

Miss Annie R. Taylor will soon be joined by Miss B. Ferguson, a well qualified, experienced, and devoted Christian worker from Glasgow. She will leave in a few weeks for Yatong, Miss Taylor's present headquarters. Another young lady is anxious to go, but some months' previous training is necessary. Two Christian soldiers, who know Miss Taylor and her work, also desire to join her in due time. Any communication concerning her work may be addressed to us. Meanwhile, Miss Taylor, who is evidently gaining influence among the people, writes under date October 12:—

"The shop is finished, and I expect to unpack the cases on Monday. I have received a letter from one of the soldiers at Darjeeling, a spiritual son of the mission, wanting to be a missionary to Tibet. He expects, as his time in the army is expired, to go to England this winter, and would there get training. He is a bright Christian. I will get Mr. Rylands Brown and Dr. Rouse to give their opinion. The Lord is rousing the workers up for Tibet in his own way: those that do not fear to meet hardships.

"I had a most interesting talk on Thursday with the chief and the Tibetan secretary to the Chinese customs about the way of salvation.

"We need much patience and prayer, for the work is trying, but in the end the victory is sure, and Tibet will open up. The principal thing is that we, the workers, be kept faithful and trusting in God's strength alone. As the Word says, 'Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee.' I have just had an old lama in, telling him about Jesus, but he did not seem to take much in. Do keep on praying that Tibet may open up without war. 'Ask, and ye shall receive.' 'Ask, and it shall be given you.' How much depends on the prayers of God's servants in the home lands eternity alone will show.

"I miss Panton very much, and must try and get him up here in about six weeks' time, when the place will be a little more finished, and I can have all my boxes brought up. It will be best to keep the hut on at Gnatong.

"Some letters sent to me have gone astray on account of the full address not being written, 'Viâ Darjeeling' is necessary.

"'Let the peace of God rule in your hearts.'—Yours in the Master's service,

"Annie R. Taylor."

UNSURRENDERED.

Jesus beholding him, loved him.—Mark x.

With throbbing heart, and eager step,
He to the Master sped.
Then lowly kneeling at Christ's feet,
His soul's deep need outspread.

"Good Master!" I would ask of Thee,
What good thing must I do,
Eternal life to make my own,
Possession sure and true?

With tender glance the Master gazed
Upon the upturned face,
And answer gave in wisest words
Of searching, healing grace.

His piercing eyes one evil saw
Deep rooted in his breast;
An evil which for aye, He knew,
Must keep him still unblest.

Great riches, loved by him too well,
Over his soul held sway;
Yield them he must, would he be free,
But, grieved, he went away.

Life's grandest possibilities
Only to those are known
Who to the Christ surrender all
To use for Him alone.

How glad a thing, young manhood's prime,
To Him to dedicate
Each precious gift, each noble power,
To Him to consecrate.

Unfaltering in purpose high,
Resolved till death to be
His faithful follower, crowned at last
With immortality.

THE LATE MR. ROBERT NELSON.

A REMINISCENCE.

You have recorded the falling asleep of Robert Nelson, at Malvern, at the age of ninety-seven. Another link with the past, and with Christian life in India, has been severed. Life and surroundings in India were then so different. Those who were new creatures in Christ were few, very isolated, much shut up to their God and to his Word, but very full of love, and drawn together without thought of denominational separations.

Robert Nelson was a member of the Madras Civil Service, and judge at Calicut, on the western coast of India. He took keen interest in mission work. In November, 1833, when on his way from Bagdad to Tinnevelly, to visit Rhenius, Anthony Norris Groves, sailing down that west coast in a native coasting vessel (a patineau), writes in his journal: "After a long and very tedious voyage, we arrived at Calicut.....I have met with a kind reception from the judge here, Mr. Nelson, and his wife; they are anxious about missionary labours, and have now sent for a catechist to go through the district preaching and distributing tracts. I never feel more deeply interested than when I see any hope for this wretched country."

In October, 1834, when the first missionary pioneers of the Basle Evangelical Society—Hebich, Lehner, and Greiner—arrived off Calicut, on board the Malabar, Mr. Nelson, hearing of the arrival of a ship from England, and thinking that there might be some missionaries on board, hastened to the landing-place. He at once invited the Baileys and the three German brethren to be his guests, pitching tents for them in his compound, and proving himself a most hospitable host. All these men are now gone, and we are still left here, waiting for the Lord's return. Some years later Mr. Nelson resigned his post, as a very honest and emphatic protest against the official support of idolatry which was then afforded by the Government. I hear that almost the last thing that he conversed about was "the Rapture," for which he waited and we still wait. Very appropriate at such a time, and characteristic of the man.

JEWISH LODGINGS IN SHADWELL.

On Tuesday, Nov. 12, a large and interesting gathering took place of missionaries working amongst the Jews in East London. The occasion was to open formally a new lodging-house at 4, North-east-passage, Cable-street, E. The proprietor is a Hebrew Christian of many years' standing, who in various ways, and amid great temptations, has proved himself to be a true follower of Christ. An opportunity having occurred to enlarge his means of livelihood, several friends obtained for him, in the thoroughfare named, a larger and better lodging-house than the one he already had. The building, not many years ago, was a well-known thieves' den in which London City missionaries were often roughly treated when attempting to preach the Gospel. It was a great cause of thankfulness to be able to gather there under its new name, Beth Shalom (the House of Peace), and to pray that in its new life it might be a place of spiritual blessing to many.

Rev. F. L. Denman, M.A., of the London Jews Society, presided, and addresses were given by Rev. A. Bernstein, B.D., of the same society, and Mr. H. Ehrlich, of the London City Mission. Several friends prayed that God's blessing might rest upon the new undertaking, and that the proprietor might have further opportunities of proclaiming the Gospel to such of his brethren of the house of Judah as should come there for food and lodging. One excellent feature is that a large room has been partitioned off into cubicles, so that those who wish for privacy may have it at a slightly extra cost. It is hoped that the prayers of Christian friends may go with Mr. Sugarmann, the proprietor, and that when they want a shelter for Jews or Gentiles they will remember his address. Good literature and books, both in English and Yiddish, for the use of the lodgers will at all times be thankfully received.

"CONTROVERSIAL METHODS."

A REPLY BY MR. READER HARRIS, Q.C.

I FEEL somewhat at a loss how best to reply to the lecture and object-lesson on Controversial Methods in last week's CHRISTIAN.

Of Mr. Wainwright's letter I will merely say, that I would greatly enjoy cross-examining that reverend gentleman on his column and a half of (to use a couple of his own pretty expressions) "wilful misrepresentations" and "impertinences."

With regard to the article which follows, I would venture to ask, Is it not a waste of time to suggest that I question the integrity of Mr. Webb-Peploe, or his great knowledge of the Scriptures, or that I charge him with being a teacher of blasphemous falsehood? No one out of Bedlam believes such nonsense.

The matter at issue is not what any man thinks, but what the Scriptures say on the question occupying so many minds to-day, "Is sin a necessity in a Spirit-filled man?" That question THE CHRISTIAN has discreetly avoided.

READER HARRIS.

Clapham Common, S.W., November 18.

[We will make no remark on the ingenuousness or tone or temper of this letter except that it seems to us to prove 1 John i. 8. We do not avoid the question, "Is sin a necessity in a Spirit-filled man?" It is in the first place ambiguous; in the second, it misrepresents the position of those whom Mr. Harris attacks. The Holy Spirit says by the Apostle John, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us." Therefore, sin is a fact in a Spirit-filled man. But the Spirit says, by the same Apostle, "These things write I unto you that ye sin not." Therefore, sinning is not a necessity in a Spirit-filled man.—ED.]

TRUE UNION: WHAT IS IT?

DEAR SIR,—I shall be glad if I may be permitted to make a few remarks upon a letter, under the above heading, which appeared in a recent issue. Your correspondent refers to remarks made by the Bishop of Lincoln in his address at the consecration of a new church in the city of Lincoln, in the course of which he says that "the bishop's speech" was simplicity itself, and its revelation of "Popish darkness" by which he is enshrouded is appalling. This "Popish darkness" seems to have been suggested to the mind of your correspondent by the remarks made by the bishop in reference to the sacramental teaching of the Church, and to have called forth the further remark, viz., "That the Ritualistic division of the Church of England is but the bastard daughter of Rome, of which even the mother herself is ashamed."

Space will not permit me to say very much as to the general teaching of the Sacraments. But in reference to the Sacrament of Holy Baptism, the Bishop's words were (as stated by your correspondent), "In baptism we become partakers of Christ: we are made members of the Body of Christ, having a common life with all who are baptized." Perhaps your correspondent will enlighten me as to what there is in these words to show that the Bishop was "enshrouded in Popish darkness." If in Holy Baptism we do not become partakers of Christ, and if we are not made members of the Body of Christ, why need we to be baptized at all? Or, what are the benefits to be derived through baptism? The teaching of the Prayer-book is the same as the teaching of our blessed Lord, viz., that baptism is necessary to salvation, and that it is part of the Divine plan. For our Lord Himself, in explaining the teaching of the necessity of a new birth to Nicodemus, made use of these words, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." This is the new birth, and a new birth suggests to our minds at once that we are made children of a new family, members of a new man. By our first birth we enter into the natural family of Adam, we are made members of the first man. In like manner, we learn by our Lord's words that by our new birth we enter into the spiritual family of Christ, we are created anew in the second man, we are regenerated in Christ, we are made members of the New Adam.

But I must not trespass further on this point. If we are made members of the body of Christ, we need nourishment, and that nourishment, or food for our souls, is provided in that great Sacrament of Christ's love—the Holy Communion. I cannot see anything in the Bishop's words in reference to that subject that are suggestive of his being enshrouded in "Popish darkness." The teaching of the Church upon this point may be briefly expressed by the two words, communion and commemoration, and I think that is the sum and substance of the Bishop's remarks. I should like to say more on this important subject, but I dare not trespass on your space.

The other remark, which I think is a cruel one, I must pass over, but would conclude with the prayer that God would give us grace seriously to lay to heart the great dangers we are in by our unhappy divisions. That He would take away all hatred and prejudice, and whatsoever else, that may hinder us from godly union and concord; that as there is but one Body, and one Spirit, and one hope of our calling, one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of us all, so we may henceforth be all of one heart, and of one soul, united in one holy bond of truth and peace, of faith and charity, and may with one mind and one mouth glorify Him: through Jesus Christ our Lord. "THE BASIS OF CHRISTIAN UNITY."

DEAR SIR,—In a letter in your issue of 7th inst. on "The Basis of Christian Unity," signed "S.," the writer, while admitting that John xvii. 21 includes every believing soul, says, "yet visible oneness on earth is absolutely unattainable." May I ask a very solemn question? Dare we say of anything which our Saviour prayed for for us, "It is absolutely unattainable"?

In John xvii. 21 our Saviour prayed "that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me."

Would our Saviour pray for something which was "absolutely unattainable"? And how could a unity which was not visible be recognised by the world (and thus lead to their believing on Christ)?

The outward, visible unity of the Church will never be brought about by the churches uniting outwardly. This would be a man-made unity; but God can so work in the hearts of a willing and obedient people, that the unity will commence within, and will spread out until the Church in Christ is one in the eyes of the world—one through the power and working of the Holy Spirit.

How the outward oneness will show itself; what will have to be cleared away and what renewed, we cannot say; this is not our part of the work. The plan and the working out the plan are in God's hands; our responsibility is to yield ourselves to Him.

When we consider the reason for which our Saviour desired the oneness of his followers "that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me," we must acknowledge that we cannot preach the Gospel to the best advantage if we are neglecting, or putting aside as impracticable, our Master's call to unity.

Is not Christian unity one of those matters in reference to which we must recognise and act on the recognition that "with men it is impossible, but not with God; for with God all things are possible" (Mark x. 27).—Yours truly

Bank Field, Kendal. A. M. C. WILSON.

THE GOSPEL IN THE PRISON.

DEAR SIR,—I have just read in this week's CHRISTIAN the interesting account by Charles Cook of work in Japanese prisons. It is truly remarkable, and would that we could believe that in all English prisons a work of grace was going on amongst the prisoners to such an extent. I fear it is only too true that if Mr. Tomeoka visits our prisons he will be disappointed in general with the work of reform amongst prisoners in our English jails. This is only to be brought about by the same methods suggested by Mr. Cook, though, thank God, in some cases where visitors are not allowed to minister to the prisoners, our chaplains are fully alive to the opportunities afforded them of bringing the Gospel to criminals, and are taking advantage of them.

It was my privilege to begin my ministry with one of our prison chaplains, who served twenty-five years, or thereabouts, in two of her Majesty's prisons—namely, in Westminster and Winchester. The name of my rector was Rev. Foster Rogers, afterwards Rector of Barrow, Chester, and he often told me and others of the blessing vouchsafed him in his prison work. He used to say that, while at Winchester, scarcely three months passed without a conversion amongst the prisoners, and there were many prisoner communicants. He was peculiarly fitted for the work. His strong point, perhaps, was personal dealing with souls; but his sermons were directed and pointed.

If all our chaplains in the prisons of England were of this stamp we might hope for reforms amongst the prisoners such as in Japan. Would that Mr. Cook's letter could be put into the hands of all who have to do with our prisons, and that it would awaken an interest on behalf of prisoners that they might benefit by the blessings of the Gospel, offered to them in the simple, earnest way that Mr. Tomeoka and others have done.

A TEMPERANCE PARLIAMENT.

A UNITED Temperance Conference was held last week in the Memorial Hall. Delegates were present from nearly all the forty national, semi-national, and denominational temperance associations, leagues, and orders throughout the United Kingdom. The special object of the conference was to consider proposals for a united temperance bill. Resolutions, eight in number, were unanimously passed.

The first urged Government to pass a suspensory Act preventing the grant of licences for the first time or by way of removal, whether by Justices or the Inland Revenue. The second set forth the disabilities imposed on licensing Justices by the present law in respect to beerhouses established before 1869, and also excise wine and beer licences for off sale as contrary to the principles underlying the licence system, and affirming the urgent need for the law being made uniform in so far as to give the licensing authority full discretionary power to refuse to grant every kind of licence for the sale of drink. The third entreated the Government to take early steps to repeal the Acts under which grocers' licences are issued. The fourth requested the Government to grant facilities for the immediate passing of legislation to secure for England the general closing of public-houses on Sunday. The fifth called for the closing of public-houses throughout England on all election days. The sixth stated that there was urgent need for legislation to prohibit drinksellers serving children under sixteen. The seventh sought to prohibit the sale of drink on passenger steamers in voyages to and from places where the grant of licences may have ceased or during hours when licensed houses are closed on land. The eighth represented to the Government that all attempts to restrict licensed liquor traffic are likely to be nugatory unless some drastic legislation is passed to prevent gigantic evil in the shape of the continuance and multiplication of drink-selling clubs.

The following days were spent in discussing the clauses of the proposed bill. Finally this was committed to a standing committee to be considered and reported upon.

ARMENIA.—Among the many who are suffering through the disastrous events now occurring in this unhappy country is Rev. K. Behesnilian, late pastor at Marash. He left Turkey and is now in London, his wife and child having been left with her father at Marash. News has come to him that his father-in-law has been killed in one of the recent massacres, and he is exceedingly anxious as to the fate of his wife and child. Our readers will deeply sympathize with him in this multiplied sorrow.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.—In March, 1892, a convalescent Home for railway men, was opened at Hastings. The Home has proved a great success; many of the men have received very definite spiritual blessing, as well as bodily help during their stay. As the house only accommodates twelve patients, it is found to be much too small to take in the large numbers seeking admission. The committee are now endeavouring to collect £6000, in order to build a larger Home to take forty patients at St. Leonards, on an excellent site kindly given for the purpose by a friend. The great need for the Home will be realised, when it is stated that on an average, 3000 railway men are injured by accident every year in the execution of their duty on the railways of the United Kingdom, in addition to the very large number constantly on the sick list, through exposure at their work. Mr. Samuel G. Sheppard, 57, Old Broad-street, London, E.C., is Hon. Treasurer.

THE Y.W.C.A.

At Tonbridge the membership has decreased fifteen, but the classes and other branches of work are well maintained.

Fifteen new members joined the Wimborne branch at its opening meeting for the winter. Miss M. A. Bernard is hon. secretary.

A monthly series of addresses for the promotion of the spiritual life are being held in connection with the Y.W.C.A. at the Exchange Lecture Hall, Blackburn. The December meetings will be addressed by Rev. Handley C. G. Moule.

Meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life are being held every Wednesday afternoon during November and December at Princess House, Brompton-road, commencing at 3.30. Miss Laura Barter, Mrs. Penn Lewis, and Mrs. Albert A. Head are among the speakers.

At the opening meeting of the winter session of the Kirriemuir branch, held in the small public hall a large number of members and their friends were present. Mrs. Wilkie, Miss Peattie and Mrs. Wedderspoon took part. There are upwards of 130 members, and the branch is prosperous.

At the annual meeting of the St. Paul's branch, Upper Norwood, Rev. R. B. Ransford presided. The report read by Miss Elkington showed that many changes had taken place. Towards the support of a missionary £20 a year is collected by the members. The increased attendance at the Bible classes was cheering. The members number 176.

Considerable interest was manifested at the annual meeting of the St. John's (Penge) branch. The Rev. W. Smyly, vicar, presided, and read the report, which stated that there are now some 160 members on the books, and twenty-one had joined during the year. The Sunday-evening class for rough girls has prospered. A quantity of clothing made by the missionary working party was sent out in the mission ship, Harmony, for the use of the Moravian missionaries at Labrador. Other help was given to foreign missions.

The annual meeting of the Cork Association, held at the Institute, Camden Place, were of an interesting character. In the afternoon Rev. Canon Galway took the chair. Rev. Canon Daunt, hon. treasurer, said he was sure they all felt that the home had been a great centre of usefulness in Cork. The Bible class had been a great means of blessing. The report stated that there have been from twelve to sixteen permanent boarders, and about 200 visitors have availed themselves of the home for shorter or longer periods. The average attendance at the Bible class has been from fifty to sixty.

Canon Ripley presided at the annual meeting of the St. Giles's branch, Norwich. Miss Florence Miller read the report, which stated that the Bible-classes had been well attended. There had been an increased number of conversions, and a growth of activity in the members. The total number of members and associates was 238, including twenty juniors. Miss Colman is unable to continue in the post of hon. secretary. The members had given teas to aged poor women and poor children, and provided them with garments they had made up from materials supplied. Mr. J. W. Jewson presented a cash statement. Addresses were given by Mr. Garrett (of Ipswich) and Rev. W. A. McAllan. Miss Monement remarked that it was painful to see so many young girls parading the streets on Sunday evenings, with no respect for the Lord's Day. There was vast need for the influence of Christian women, and in this need they would find their opportunity of service.

Mrs. Hind Smith, hon. secretary of the Total Abstinence Department, reports that there is still much encouragement all round. Good results folowed the special appeal last winter. The "crusade" of February has borne good fruit, and another, next February, is to be inaugurated. During the year the secretary has visited many branches in and around London, besides many distant places. Encouraging responses and orders for pledge-books, etc., have come in from branches all over London. A South London secretary writes:—"We have taken thirty-eight pledges this year. At every meeting now we have the pledge-book; also at our Sunday evening service. I am sure our success is due to the prayer going up this year." From another secretary:—'Many are joining our T.A. Union; yes, giving it (drink) up for Jesus' sake and for his glory." From King's Cross:—"We had a good meeting at Percy; several pledges were taken. The work is being greatly blessed in the institute." A special card is being prepared for the London and Provincial Institutes. On the front will be our T.A. motto text, and on the back our hints for forming and carrying on a total-abstinence department. Mrs. Hind Smith will be glad to hear from any secretaries wishing to do more temperance work in connection with their branches. Her address is, Summerfield, Hayward's Heath, Sussex.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A new Association has been formed at Spilsby, Lincolnshire.

A great convention has been held at Erie of the Pennsylvania Association.

M. Charles Odier has been appointed general secretary of the Geneva Association.

An Italian branch of the Y.M.C.A. has been organised at New Orleans. The new branch starts with twenty-six charter members.

The Paris Association has recently received a gift of fifteen thousand francs for its general work from a French lady, eighty-four years of age.

The Young Men's Era states that at Denver a most remarkable Bible-class is held by Major Halford, who has developed great power with young men.

From Rome Chev. Emilio Piovanelli writes:—"Our national conference was a perfect success. More than forty delegates assembled here from all the provices in Italy."

The newly-formed Redditch Association has secured premises admirably suited to the work in Evesham-street, a prominent thoroughfare of the town. Canon Newton has been appointed president.

Pastor Tophel, being about to leave Geneva, and to reside in France, has been compelled to resign the presidency of the Central International committee of Y.M.C.A.'s. He is succeeded in office by Professor Edward Barde.

A movement is on foot to secure a new building for the Winnipeg, Man., Association. A splendid site is already nearly paid for, and £5000 is pledged toward the building. The intention is to erect a £12,000 building free of debt.

A meeting of the committee of the Central London Association for prayer and praise in connection with the Universal Week of Prayer for Young Men, November 10-17, was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday evening under the presidency of Sir George Williams.

A letter has been received from St. Paul, Brazil, announcing the foundation of an Association in that town on the 1st August last. The secretary of the new Association, Mr. J. Moreira Maciel, begs the Associations of every country to remember their isolated and weak friends in their prayers.

"Young's Men's Sunday," Nov. 10, at Sunderland, was observed by over fifty sermons being preached in various places of worship, including thirteen Churches of England. On the same evening, Rev. John McNeill, the Scottish evangelist, brought a week's mission to a close, and although over 4000 people were in the hall as many more were turned away. The mission was in every sense a remarkable success.

Prof. Aladar Szabo writes:—"The bishops of the Lutheran and the Reformed Churches in Hungary have just issued a circular to the ministers recommending the formation of Young Men's Christian Associations. Several have already promised to commence this winter. The religious Press has been won for the movement. The present time is critical to Hungary, and our country has a great future before it."

The Chicago Young Men's Christian Association now occupies one of the finest equipped buildings in the world. The plant has cost the great city of the west over one and a-half million of dollars. This is the central branch of a wonderful work. There are over a dozen other branches of the same institution throughout the city. This effort reaches men of all classes sects, religions, trades, professions, and nationalities. It is universal in its scope. The building has thirteen storeys.

The Associations of Strasburg and Breslau have just taken possession of their new homes, that of Strasburg to occupy a part of the building of the Vereinshaus, Dreizehnergrabon, where it has already made serious progress. The address of the Association of Breslau is now, Alte Taschenstrasse 3, I. The secretary, W. von Starck, writes:—"The new building offers great advantages on account of its central position; it consists of four spacious rooms—a meeting room holds 200 persons, a kitchen, a cloakroom, and a reception-room.

In connection with the National Conference at Nîmes, a special sermon was preached on Sunday week, by Pastor Granier, to a large congregation, and to the numerous delegates to the Conference, upon Ezek. xxii. 30. In the afternoon a grand open-air meeting was held in the Desert where of old the Protestants were obliged to meet in secret. Some four thousand people attended the Sunday meeting, which had for title, "Holiness and Sanctification Meeting." In the evening a large Gospel meeting was held in a summer theatre. The subject chosen was: "The Tears of France." This meeting, very largely composed of the popular element, drew about three thousand people.

The Young Men of India says: "We are now entering on what seems like a building movement in the Associations in India. Madras has secured a site, and is hoping soon for the money to proceed to build. Simla has projected a scheme for a new home for its young men. Nagercoil in this month's report is thinking of its needs in this line. Calcutta has a building fund started, with Rs. 30,000 pledged toward it, and is only waiting for a suitable site in order to begin an aggressive canvas. Other Associations have funds started. The next five years is likely to see at least as many lakhs of rupees put into permanent buildings. It will give the work a strength which they can never hope to have in rented quarters."

The annual meeting of the Totterdown Y.M.C.A. was held Nov. 11 at Wycliffe Chapel. Mr. J. W. Wakefield, President of the Taunton Association, took the chair. Mr. A. E. Jones, in a statement with reference to the extension fund, said that the premises in Wells-road cost £1425, towards which they had received £1060. He appealed for help to clear off the whole of the expense of the building in order that they might devote more of their energies to the spiritual work. The report of the hon. secretary (Mr. J. C. Marsh) stated that a review of the year's work gave abundant cause for praise to God. There were now 129 members, with forty-six associates, a net increase of twenty upon last year. In every branch of spiritual work there is blessing.

Two frames have recently been placed in the lecture room of the Bournemouth Y.M.C.A., containing the photographs of twelve members of the Association, who within a period of about eight years have given themselves to Christian work at home or abroad. In one frame, bearing the words, "Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in," are the portraits of two members in pastorates in provincial towns and one in London, one holding a student-pastorate whilst finishing his course at the Pastors' College; one just accepted for the same College, one working in the Church Army, and one a Y.M.C.A. secretary. In the other frame, which bears the words, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," are the portraits of two members working with the China Inland Mission, one with the Congo Balolo Mission, one in the Lovedale Mission, S. Africa, and one in training at the C.M.S. College, Islington, probably also for Africa.

MISSIONARY MISSION TO MEN.

A large number of churches throughout London are co-operating, this week and next, in a missionary mission to men, planned by the London Lay Workers' C.M.S. Union. The arrangements include parochial meetings for men and Sunday sermons addressed to men between November 15 and 30. On December 3 there will be a meeting of men only in Exeter Hall, at which the Bishop of London will (D.V.) preside. And on December 4 a whole-day conference on the subject of laymen's work for the C.M.S. will be held at the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square.

In connection with this mission the usual Wednesday mid-day service at the Leopold-rooms of the Church of England Young Men's Society (Ludgate-circus) was last week turned into a service of intercession. Rev. W. E. Burroughs presided, and gave a short address. A similar gathering was announced for Wednesday (20th), when Mr. D. Marshall Lang is to give the address, and again on Wednesday, Nov. 27, when Rev. H. E. Fox will speak. The meetings begin at 1.25 and close at 1.55 p.m.

FALLEN AT THEIR POST.—The new issue of China's Millions says:—"Sometimes we open a telegram and finds it refers to a small matter again, the same silent messenger from afar brings tidings that come as a blow to our hearts. Just as October closed we received a wire from our friends in Shanghai containing the sad intelligence that our beloved friends, Mr. Alex. Menzies, of Bing-yäe, and Mr. and Mrs. Woodman, of Wun-chau, had died of cholera."

MADAGASCAR.—In a recent letter The Times special correspondent seems to think that the war and its consequences will tell adversely on the Christianity of the natives. Finding that their prayers for the defeat of the enemy were unavailing, the Hovas in some districts were turning to their old gods, and there was a marked revival of Paganism. What the correspondent fears most under French influence is the secession to Roman Catholicism of the majority of the Protestant converts, and the boycotting of the British missions by the French. "But," he adds, "it ought never to be forgotten that our missions, notably the London Missionary Society, have been the pioneers of Hova civilisation, and have produced results in Madagascar such as Protestant propagandism cannot, so far as I know, show in any other part of the world, and which can only be compared to the great work wrought long ago by the Jesuits in Paraguay."

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our Own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

The missionary meeting last week was addressed by Rev. Douglas Hooper, of Jilore, East Africa, who made a very impressive appeal to the men present. It was one of the most striking meetings that had been held of late.

A new curate has been appointed to Canon Christopher's parish, Rev. G. E. Badger, who comes from Holy Trinity, Bordesley, where he has been working for two years with great acceptance.

A meeting was held at the Y.M.C.A. last week to protest against the practice of vivisection. Mrs. Mallett and Mr. Bryan, of London, spoke, and also an Oxford medical man, who attempted to traverse the statements made in favour of abolition, but with very little success.

The new Professor of Exegesis is the Rev. W. Lock, of Keble, who is a very popular lecturer in the Theological School, and by no means a man of the narrow Ecclesiastical type usually associated with the college of which he is the sub-warden.

Dr. Sanday continues to give his most valuable lectures on the Doctrine of the Trinity, which are proving of immense help to those who are able to attend. His appointment is one for which we may heartily thank God.

Mr. Turley, an agent of the Bible Society, who has lately returned from the scenes of the China-Japan war, gave a most interesting account of his work, illustrated by lantern views, last Friday to a crowded audience at the Y.M.C.A.

The cause of Zenana Missions was ably pleaded last Tuesday by Mrs. Wade, of Amritsar, who spoke in the hall of Exeter College to a large gathering, presided over by the Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Rev. F. J. Chavasse.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Friday evening Dr. Moule gave a very interesting account of the Moravians, at the weekly meeting of the C.M.U.

On Tuesday, Nov. 12, a series of free lectures on the "History of the Church" was commenced in the New Town Hall, Russell-street, and Professor Stanton was the lecturer. There was a large attendance.

Under the auspices of the Cambridge University Church Guild, a sermon was preached in the evening at 8.30, in Great St. Mary's, by the Dean of Worcester, on "Decision."

VILLAGE MISSION WORK IN SURREY.

There is scarcely perhaps a more needy or more interesting Christian work than that carried on in many of our country villages, which once were in darkness, and, in many cases, devoid of sound evangelical teaching. In the county of Surrey, one is glad to record with thankfulness, that many such village mission halls have been erected, and work is being carried on by earnest evangelists in the name of the Master—not in opposition to any established services, but solely for the spread of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the gathering in of the many who attend no form of worship whatever.

In response to the entreaties of some of the inhabitants of the little village of Bookham (which has a population of about 1,200 people), also as the result of many earnest prayers, another of these mission halls has been erected, chiefly by the instrumentality of various denominations from Dorking, about five miles distant. The opening services were conducted by friends from the neighbourhood, on Wednesday, November 6th. The gatherings, both afternoon and evening, were of a most enthusiastic character, over 100 being present at the tea, and many more were at the meeting following, when short addresses were given; the one theme being "Jesus only." The needs of this village are great. The hand of the Lord has been most manifest in the many links that have led to the establishment of this Mission. About £250 or more have been contributed or promised towards the expenses; still, funds are urgently needed for the further maintenance of the work. Also, if any friend could spare a second-hand harmonium or American organ, it would most materially assist in the services. Surely in this work one is following in the footsteps of the Great Master, who "went round about the villages teaching" (Mark vi. 6). C. J. Peirson.

Rosedale, Dorking, Surrey.

REV. G. ARMSTRONG BENNETTS, the unwearying secretary of the Wesleyan temperance organisation, has issued the statistical returns for his denomination, showing 3,343 juvenile and 1,326 adult socities in connection therewith. It is rather a curious fact that while the number of adult abstainers increased last year by 6,612, abstaining children fell off by 416, though 121 new Bands of Hope were formed.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A unanimous call is to be sent to Rev. Hugh Black, Paisley, to become colleague and successor to Rev. Dr. Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh.

The Edinburgh Auxiliary of the L.M.S. held its annual meeting last week, when addresses were given by brethren who had laboured in China and India, as well as local friends.

At the opening meeting for the session of the Protestant Institute lectures in Glasgow, Prof. Orr sketched the history of the Jesuits, "an object lesson in Rome's principles and methods." He gave a graphic account of Loyola, the founder of the order, and explained its organisation and doctrine.

The Presbyterian Federal Council had an important day's Conference in Dundee, last Thursday. Papers were read and practical discussion on such topics as co-operation in Christian work, city and suburban churches, Christianity and civil life, foreign missions and commerce, Christianity and industrial problems.

The death is recorded of Mr. Wm. Cairns, younger brother of the late Principal Cairns. In an obituary notice The Scotsman says:—"Sterling, upright Seceder to the core, the largeness of his nature gained for him the loved veneration of men of all churches and creeds. Homely and at the same time regal in character—an example of the 'dour' perseveringness of the Scot, an individualist, with the redeeming sympathies of a large nature, of a deep piety for land and Church—many will feel through his death as if to their hearts 'had come the first fall of the snow.' Of the old family circle at Aytonhill only two now survive, his twin sister Janet and Rev. David Cairns, of Stitchell."

In an address last week, on Missions, at the Christian Institute, Glasgow, Lord Overtoun said that within not many years there had gone from the Y.M.C.A. in Glasgow something like a hundred members who were now in the high places of the mission field holding aloft the Gospel torch. Their work for Jesus Christ at home would not flourish until they, to the best of their power, obeyed his command in sending the Gospel, which they held so precious, to those sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death. His lordship, in the course of an address of an hour's duration, showed the wonderful results of the preaching and teaching of the Gospel in China, Japan, the South Sea Islands, Madagascar, Africa, India, Polynesia, etc.

IRISH NOTES.

A meeting to bid farewell to three young missionaries about to sail for India was held in Percy-street Hall, Belfast.

Rev. Thomas Connellan has been addressing large meetings in reference to his work in Dublin, in Belfast, Armagh, and other centres in the north of Ireland.

Irish Methodism raised last year for foreign missions the sum of £5030 13s. 3d., besides nearly £1000 additional sent by the contributors direct to the Mission House, London.

At a meeting convened in Belfast by Rev. Wm. Park, it has been determined to form a Presbyterian Union of the Christian Endeavour Societies in Ireland, and a committee has been appointed to draft a constitution.

The anniversary of the Belfast Postal Telegraph Christian Association, which is doing an excellent work in Belfast, has been held under hopeful auspices, and has been addressed by Rev. L. H. Cullen and others.

The jubilee of Wesley College, Dublin, was observed last week. The institution has been long hampered by a building debt of £6000, but this has been cleared off by a few friends. The College was never in a more prosperous condition that at present.

The late Rev. H. Townshend, Dean of Achonry, was well known both in England and Ireland as an able platform speaker and a most earnest worker in connection with Irish Church Missions, in which, as long as he was able, he continued to take the deepest interest.

Mr. George Thomson, Belfast, who has been called away, was an earnest Christian worker. Deceased has left £1000 to the sustentation fund of the Presbyterian Church, £1000 to Presbyterian Foreign Missions, £500 to Broadway Presbyterian Church, and £500 to the Johnston Memorial Home.

THE SILVER STAR SOCIETY.—The fourth annual report states:—"A new sphere of usefulness has been opened up for our lady members by their attachment to the Girls' Letter Guild. The evangelistic branch has conducted 150 meetings. The lantern branch has been extending, and a more powerful lantern is needed." The hon. secretary is Walter S. Robbins, 14, Little Ilford-lane, Manor Park, Essex.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

THE PLEDGE.

Mr. John Willis Baer, general secretary of the United Society C.E., Boston, Mass, writes: "From the beginning of the movement some one has wanted to try his hand at tinkering the pledge 'The pledge is too strong,' or, 'Something must be changed to adapt it to the peculiarities of our society.' It is amazing how many 'peculiar' societies there are in the world. There are not so many of these pledge-tinkers as there used to be, but we hear of them every now and then, even in these days. There is not much objection to altering the phraseology, if the meaning is not changed or the strenuousness of the pledge is not weakened; but this is the very thing that most pledge-tinkers desire to do.

"Now I should like to whisper in their ears that the revised pledge was prepared very carefully and prayerfully. Days were spent in weighing each word, so that every one might be the right word in the right place. The strength of every phrase was considered, and special pains were taken not to have a syllable in the pledge which the youngest and weakest active member could not keep. Twice, in the heart of the pledge, at the risk of tautology, and perhaps to the detriment of the Queen's English, the phrase is substantially repeated, 'Unless prevented by a reason which I can conscientiously give to the Lord Jesus Christ.' That is the only excuse which the Christian ever ought to be willing to give for the non-performance of any known duty. This is twice admitted and insisted on in the pledge, and it fully excuses any conscientious Christian, if he has any excuse worth giving. A Christian Endeavour Society that fully understands what the pledge means, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred will vote against altering it."

The united gathering of the Exeter and District Union was attended by nearly 500 Endeavourers.

The Croydon George-street Society has held its second anniversary, the pastor, Rev. W. Park, presiding.

Under the auspices of the united Societies in Chester, a successful nine days' Gospel mission has been conducted by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith.

The Hackleton and Piddington Society has celebrated its first anniversary. Addresses were given by Revs. W. V. Phillips, A. Morgan, and M. Joslin. The report showed forty members.

An Endeavour Union has been formed for Southampton and district. Rev. H. J. Perkins is president. The area of the Union extends from Lymington to Winchester. Upwards of twenty societies were represented at the inaugural meeting.

The Christian Endeavour movement in Germany has at length taken the name of Jugendbund für entschiedenes Christentum. There were twenty representatives at a recent conference at Cassel. Endeavour has certainly a great future before it in the Fatherland.

The Christian Endeavour movement is growing among Baptists, Congregationalists, and some of the Methodist bodies. Nearly 3000 branches have now been formed in Great Britain, and the cry is "Still they come!" Last week no fewer than twenty-five new societies were enrolled.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—Rev. B. La Trobe, secretary of the Moravian Missions (17, Furnival's-inn, E.C.), writes:—"It may interest you to know that by the spirit of liberality poured out on our Continental congregations more than £2000 has come in towards our deficiency. I wish our members and friends in this country may raise a like amount. But when the arrears are met there remains the adequate provision for the annual income of an ever-growing work, with splendid openings for spreading the Gospel in many lands. Shall we have to cease asking for 'open doors to preach the Gospel'? God forbid! The men and women are given, and faith must find the means also."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a backslider, afflicted with a fell disease, who at times is almost unable to bear the agony of mind and body, that she may be kept from rashness, and that Christ Himself may speedily speak to her.—For one in deep waters, that her feet may be planted more securely on the Rock.—For the salvation of a poor drunkard, that she may became a trophy of Divine grace, and a witness of Christ's saving power and mercy.—For an eight days' mission by Messrs. Monro Collings and Fuller Gooch, at the Baptist Church, Rochester, Nov. 23—Dec. 1.—That Mr. Matthew Burnett may be divinely helped on Sabbath afternoon next at the Town Hall, Bermondsey; also on Sabbath and Monday eveuings at Wesleyan Chapel, Lockstields. —For blessing on a Bible class, held each Lord's Day evening, in Raphoe, co. Donegal; also for cottage meetings held in Raphoe and neighbourhood.

The Book World.

MR MEYER'S LATEST BOOK.

In David: Shepherd, Psalmist, King (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott) we have a welcome and a worthy addition to the other Scripture biographies from the same fertile mind and facile pen. From many points of view the life of David is one that will ever touch the imagination and the conscience of mankind. He illustrated, in different periods of his romantic career, the noblest heroism, and the most humiliating disgrace. In these singularly picturesque and practical chapters, Mr. Meyer has thrown the light of present day research and experience on all the prominent aspects of David's life, and the volume, we doubt not, will be a prized possession in many an earnest Christian household.

THE REVISED APOCRYPHA.

After the revision of the Authorised Version of the Holy Scriptures, small committees, formed out of the two companies of Revisers, undertook the revision of the collection of uncanonical books called Apocrypha, and the results of their labours have now been issued from the Cambridge and Oxford University Presses in a volume entitled, The Apocrypha; Translated out of the Greek and Latin Tongues; being the version set forth A.D. 1611, compared with the most ancient authorities and revised A.D. 1894. The preface tells the story of the production of the work, which has certainly received conscientious care at the hands of men of acknowledged scholarship. The Books of Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus are broken up into parallelisms, with obvious propriety, and excellent effect. The multitude of marginal notes show how corrupt the text is in many places, also that the editors have done their best with the materials at their disposal. The style of language has not been altered; quaint archaisms are retained; and proper names are dealt with variously—in some books Old Testament forms are followed, while in others the names are still Greecised. An interesting feature is the incorporation of the missing fragment, 2 Esdras vii. 36-105, from Professor Bensly's elaborate work. This belongs to a section of the book which is generally assigned to the first century of the Christian era, and those who are interested in this kind of literature will be glad to find such a curious "apocalyptic" passage restored to its proper place. Being a revision, this volume does not contain the third and fourth books of Maccabees and other works which, though apocryphal, were not included in the Authorised Version and its predecessors. Beautifully printed on good paper, this edition of the Apocrypha will, of course, be indispensable to students of early religious and historical literature.

WORKS BY DR. ANDERSON.

The Gospel and its Ministry, by R. Anderson, LL.D., has reached its seventh edition, and for the first time a sub-title describes it as "A Handbook of Evangelical Truth." The description is correct and precise, and those who study the volume will agree with the author that the pages set forth "truth, in the power of which the martyrs lived and died in dark ages long past; truth, too lightly held in these days of ours, when a false liberality combines with a false scepticism to undermine faith." It were hardly needful to set forth the contents of a book which has become so well known in America as well as Great Britain. Suffice it to say that in these lucid pages the Gospel is faithfully unfolded, and ample direction is given to those who would proclaim it Scripturally and intelligently. The notes and appendices, full of information and thought, greatly enhance the value of the manual, which is provided with a good index and a list of the principal passages of Scripture explained. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.)

Human Destiny, by the same author, has reached its fourth edition. It examines conflicting theories on the doom of the lost, and, of course, is severely controversial. The pages abound in definition and criticism, and though repudiating the word-pictures which some have painted, Dr. Anderson maintains: "The outer darkness, the worm that never dies, the fire that is not quenched, the torment of the burning lake—all this may be but figurative language, but if so, the figures must represent realities still more terrible." In an appendix, specially important passages of Scripture are explained, and a concordantial list is given of the occurrences, in the Greek New Testament, of terms relevant to the subject. In the preface to this edition Dr. Anderson thoughtfully says: "The 'orthodox view' of the doom of the impenitent is so awful that its advocates ought surely to use only the language of studied reserve and of the greatest solemnity." With which we entirely agree, and have often insisted on. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Our Darlings is an old friend, and its contents this year are as bright as its covers are gay. Among the serials are "Beating the Record," by Grace Stebbing, and "Two Dukes," by E. Everett-Green. There are other stories and sketches in abundance. (3s. and 5s. Shaw.)

Sunday is a grand volume of reading for the young. There are hundreds of pictures and bright and useful tales and incidents. Every page addresses the little ones for their entertainment and good; so it is not difficult to account for the popularity of Sunday whether in monthly parts or in bound form. (3s. and 5s. Gardner, Darton & Co.)

The Fireside Pictorial Annual is as attractive as ever. The engravings are numerous and of a high order. There are stories by Emma Marshall and Edward Garrett; antiquarian and other sketches and articles; also Sunday Readings from many pens. The Editor, Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., makes many useful contributions, and among other cheerful writers are Revs. H. Sutton and S. B. James, D.D., also Messrs. G. L. Apperson, W. T. Stratton, W. Andrews, and A. J. Symington. A full volume like this will carry light and blessing into many a home during the winter months. (7s. 6d. "Home Words" Office.)

The "Herald of Mercy" Annual for the current year is entitled Tom Dawson's Deliverance. It is a volume of readings having one supreme aim—the enlightenment of its readers as to the way of salvation. Narratives of conversion, life sketches, missionary incidents, Scripture meditations, and pointed appeals combine to urge the claims of the Gospel. The illustrations are numerous and striking; and external appearance, as well as varied contents, for young and old, make this a volume particularly suited for introduction into village and school libraries, and for leaving in the houses of the people. (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

In Faith Cotterill we find a selection of short historical tales (chiefly of heroic young women), edited by J. Erskine Clarke. (1s. Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Little Frolic. (2s. Shaw.) The numerous illustrations and large print rhymes and stories make this annual the very thing to present to good boys and girls.

Tuck-Up Songs. By Ellis Walton. (Nelson & Sons.) A charming little collection of juvenile poems, bright in thought, easy in measure, clever in illustration, and of general merit.

Darton's Leading Strings (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) is a charming combination of graphic picture and simple story for the nursery folks. It will afford entertaining occupation for many a spare half-hour.

Sunday Sunshine, edited by Catherine Shaw (1s. 6d. Shaw), is a delightful collection of stories and pictures, such as the little ones love. Its brightly coloured covers will ensure it an enthusiastic welcome.

The Sunday Book (1s. 6d. Bagster & Sons) appeals specially to the artistic instinct. The outline pictures of Bible incidents, by C. B. Birch, A.R.A., are beautifully drawn. The accompanying reading matter is merely the stories told in the simplest language, leaving the application to be supplied by teacher or parent.

I Go a-Fishing. By Rev. T. Woolmer. (C. H. Kelly.) This is a collection of sermons from which much ripe fruit may be gathered. They are plain, straightforward, direct; suggestive rather than exhaustive; thoughtful in treatment, wide in range, and well suited to study for public work or personal instruction.

As the title suggests, The Commandment with Promise is a tale with a moral. The authoress, Hon. Gertrude Boscawen, dedicates it to the former members of her Bible-class at Sea Chart; but it is of equal interest and usefulness to all young people. The beauty of obedience, as enjoined in the Fifth Commandment, is admirably illustrated. (E. Stock.)

The Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ is the title of a roll, in clear, bold print, presenting words of comfort and responsibility for every day in the month. It has been compiled by Mrs. M. Washington; the selections from Scripture are eminently appropriate, and the words of exhortation, in prose and verse, include some by well-known teachers and workers. (2s. Partridge.)

Wapping Old Stairs. By the author of "Joseph's Little Coat," etc. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Here we have one of those simple, homelike sketches of "how the poor live," which always charm old or young. But its recital should do more than serve to wile away a pleasant hour; it should stir the reader to active sympathy for the little bare feet and tired hearts of those of whom "Phil's little maid" is a type. There is real pathos in the story, which is well planned and prettily told.

Mind and Voice. A practical study of development. By J. Barnard Baylis. (Novello, Ewer, and Co. 1s. 6d.) This twelve weeks' course of exercises has been prepared with the view of assisting, not only vocalists, but preachers, public speakers, and others whose voice is subjected to strain. The importance of the development of clearness, power, and maintenance of the voice must be admitted by all who are engaged in work of a public character; and these simple exercises are calculated both to improve the quality and precision of the voice, and to minimise fatigue in public speaking.

The Sunny Side of the Street is always a good place to be in, and the little volume by Evelyn Everett-Green (2s. Religious Tract Society.) bearing this title well repays a rest for an hour or two among its pages. Not that the story is inert; on the contrary, it is vigorous; and in these days when the foundations of moral principles are rudely assailed by specious arguments and attractive theories, there is much in it to strengthen the mind and character of any young girl who may read it. Right is right; wrong is wrong; and these can never unite. Such sound maxims the author strives to enforce.

The Gold of that Land. By Margaret S. Comrie. (5s. Religious Tract Society.) The contents of this book are better described by the subtitle, "Marguerita Brandini's Deliverance," and very interesting is the story of the breaking in of the light upon the heart of a young girl brought up under Romish teaching. The incidents recorded are full of life and (not unhealthy) excitement. The teaching of Bible truth comes so naturally in the conversations of the young people that instinctively one learns without knowing it. As a story its interest is well sustained, for it is well and carefully written. Young readers will read it with enthusiasm; older ones with enjoyment.

Arnold Inglehurst, the Preacher. By E. Everett-Green. (Shaw & Co.) We have here depicted a character strong alike in its conception and its portrayal. That "The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord" is eminently illustrated by the advent of this stalwart and Christ-like man into the "fen" village of Marshthorpe. Of fervent piety, sound common-sense, and large heart, his influence was long to be remembered; nor will the reader easily lose the impress of such a character upon the mind. The chapter of "The Haunted Chamber" will arouse in some minds doubt, in all, wonder. The author, however, "offers no explanation," but "simply states the facts as they occurred."

Autobiography of Rev. G. W. Philips. The subject of this memoir was the father of Colonel Philips, the secretary of the "Army Scripture Readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society"; and by the kindness of the gallant colonel, the work is issued in the interests of that institution. George Washington Philips was for over forty years parish minister at Wendy-cum-Shingey, Cambridgeshire. The story of his conversion from a life of dissipation, as described in this volume, is sufficient to inspire with hope in God's mercy the most abandoned of sinners. The record of his spiritual struggles will encourage those whose experiences at times lead them to the border of despair. Mr. Philips' numerous journeys by sea and by land, and the description of the various American churches and pastors of the day, all go to make up a volume of peculiar interest. (Tinted covers, 3s. 6d., bound 5s. 6d., post free. W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.)

CHRISTMAS CARDS AND BOOKLETS.—Mr. W. G. Wheeler, 51 and 52, Paternoster-row, has brought out some seasonable cards and booklets. Among the latter are "Only to Trust the Master" (6d.), a poem by Mary Gorges; "Coming," "Resting," and "Our Daily Path" (4d. each). All are of neat design, embossed and coloured. Then there are "Glory yet Unheard of" and "Our Master" (3d. each), not to mention other small productions, all of them bright and attractive. "The Upward Path" Calendar (6d.) is in six sheets, with coloured views, texts, and verses. In all cases choice messages and counsels are presented in a chaste form.

From THE CHRISTIAN:—

"A book to be pondered and prayed over in private: a book which every pastor, teacher, church officer, and worker should con with candid care. The longing of every earnest soul is 'more power'; may not the cure for present-day powerlessness be found in yielding to the Spirit of God allowing Him to occupy his rightful place? To this end we wish this book a wide circulation and prayerful consideration."

London: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C., and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. Stott and Miss Bardsley, of the China Inland Mission, left for England on October 5, travelling vid the Canadian Pacific route.

Mr. F. Marcus Wood has now definitely accepted the position of deputation secretary of the China Inland Mission, with a seat upon the Council.

General Anderson.—We hear with sorrow of the serious illness, from an attack of pneumonia, of this servant of God, residing at Plumstead. Earnest prayer for his recovery is desired.

Rev. Dr. Barnes, Basingstoke, has accepted an invitation to take charge of Emmanuel (Free) Church, Folkestone. Dr. Barnes will be leaving Basingstoke at the commencement of the New Year.

Rev. Thomas Evans, of Mussoorie, has reached this country, and will be publicly welcomed at a meeting in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, to-morrow, Friday, at 6.30 p.m. Mr. W. S. Caine will preside.

Mrs. Martha D. Walton, mother of Mr. W. Spencer Walton (South Africa General Mission), and Mr. H. Eliot Walton (The Railway Mission), is very seriously ill. Prayer is earnestly asked that the Lord may spare her, and give back to her needed strength.

Dr. Barnardo.—The jubilee presentation to Dr. Barnardo will be made in the council chamber at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday next, at four p.m., when the Marquis of Lorne will preside and make the presentation. Lord Kinniard and Archdeacon Sinclair are also expected to speak.

Mr. William Noble was unable to keep his engagements at York on Saturday and Sunday, owing to a relapse from an attack of influenza. He was to have spoken at Ryde and Street this week, but has had to postpone. He fully hopes in a short time to resume his work at Hoxton and outside.

Dr. and Mrs. Brenner, of Toronto, the pioneer missionaries of the society recently formed in Toronto, Canada, for the prosecution of earnest evangelistic work in South America, are now in England, and will be glad of any opportunities to speak of the claims of South America. Address, care of Mr. A. Gilmour, 3, Orchard-hill, Hamilton, N.B.

Mr. J. R. Hall, of Newport, Mon., having attained his seventy-second birthday, a number of friends connected with the Y.M.C.A. presented him on Friday last with an illuminated address and a purse of money. For the past ten years, Mr. Hall has conducted the "Daniel's Band" Bible-class at the Association, greatly to the profit of the members, many of whom are now in other parts of the country.

Dr. Eleanor Montgomery, second daughter of Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, left England on Monday for India. She will probably be stationed as a medical missionary at Ahmedabad, in the Bombay Presidency. She is accompanied by Miss Carruthers, who has been trained in the Free Church of Scotland Training Home, Edinburgh, and who will engage in Zenana work. Both ladies go forth in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church.

Rev. H. M. Williamson, M.A., D.D., has just completed twenty-five years as the pastor of Fisherwick-place Presbyterian Church, Belfast. The members of the congregation commemorated the occasion by presenting their minister and his estimable wife with a congratulatory address and some substantial marks of their affection and esteem. The fact that strikes us most in the account is contained in Mr. Williamson's reply:—"During all these years I rejoice to say I have never had even a misunderstanding with any member of the Church, nor any difference of opinion in session or committee, as you all know." That is a remarkable testimony, speaking volumes in praise of pastor and people; and the pastor's wife must, we think, have contributed not a little to so desirable a result.

OVER A MILLION OF MEN are employed on the railways in the United States, and of late years there has been a growing feeling on the part of railway directors and managers to promote the sobriety of the men by official measures. The most thoroughgoing action is that of the Chicago and Alton Company, one of whose rules is that any conductor, trainsman, engineer, fireman, switchman, or other employé who is known to use intoxicating liquors will be promptly and permanently discharged. Several other companies have a similar rule. Nearly all the leading American railroads forbid the sale of intoxicants at restaurants on the line, and forbid their employés to enter a drinking saloon.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Montreal.—A good work is in progress in this city in connection with Rev. W. H. Aitken's mission.

Caterham Valley.—Mr. B. H. Angel has been at Bethany Hall for the last fortnight, and his testimony has proved a blessing to many.

Castleford.—A two weeks' mission here by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, has been a time of blessing to many. The evangelist is now at Sheffield.

Putney.—Mr. F. H. Dawe has concluded an eight days' mission at Sefton Hall. Good numbers came each night to hear the Gospel, and some very decided cases of blessing have been the result.

Ireland.—Evangelistic meetings have been held in Cookstown, by Mr. S. C. Montgomery, of Bangor. Similar services have been held in Carlisle Memorial Church, Belfast, by Rev. George Jackson, of Edinburgh.

Manchester.—Mr. William Forbes began on Sunday an eight days' mission at Manchester, in Melbourne-street Hall, in connection with Dr. Goodrich's Church, He addressed the workers on Saturday evening.

Liverpool: New Brighton.—Rev. C. B. Sawday, of Leeds, conducted a series of mission services in this place from November 4 to 11. The meetings were well attended, and the addresses of a thoughtful and impressive character.

Hull Bridge.—At the Mission Hall in this village, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander, of Dalston, have conducted a ten days' mission. The power of God has been manifested, many have professed decision, and Christians have been led to a fuller spiritual experience.

Mr. Moody has closed his mission in New Bedford, Conn., which he visited for the first time. As the result of his labours, and of those who aided him, great spiritual blessing has come to the place. Mr. Moody is now at work in Atalanta, Georgia.

Miss M. H. Haddon, of Clipstone, has held a ten days' mission in the Abbey-road Baptist Church, Far Cotton, Northampton, and it has been a time of great blessing. God has answered the prayers of his people, in deepening the spiritual life of many believers, and in moving some to yield themselves to our Lord Jesus Christ.

Dublin.—On Sunday evening, Mr. W. R. Lane closed his Men's Mission in the Y.M.C.A. During the week, the audiences of men were held by the rousing words of the preacher. Believers were stirred up, and numbers of backsliders restored. A large number of names were handed in to the secretary, as professing to trust the Saviour. The Bible talks were most interesting. On Saturday evening Mr. Lane gave his lecture of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, illustrated by slides.

Cardiff.—Blessing continues to attend the services in connection with the Barry Rock Gospel Tent Mission. Mr. Thomas Poyne commenced a three weeks' mission on November 9. The Lord is owning the ministry of his servant in blessing to saints and sinners. The iron hall has not yet been erected, but we hope soon to see this accomplished. Meanwhile we have engaged a large shop in the same street, where the tent stood during the summer.

GERALD COULTAS.

Hildenborough.—Mr. Monro Collings has been holding a week of special meetings here, which has been a time of definite blessing to saved and unsaved. In spite of the unfortunate weather meetings have been well attended, people coming from miles around, and on the last night a great number testified to the blessing received during the mission. Mr. Collings' addresses were most pointed and convincing, and he now goes from here to a mission at Tonbridge, followed by our earnest prayers.

E. H. WELLS, Pastor.

Rev. F. C. Spurr will hold a mission in Manchester from December 1-16; at Wellington-street Chapel, Gorton, December 1-8; and Grosvenor-street Chapel, December 9-16. Conferences on the Christian life, on the week days, at 3.15.

BIBLE LANDS MISSIONS.—Rev. W. A. Essery, hon. sec. to the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, has carried through a series of drawing-room and other meetings on behalf of the Mission in several parts of Scotland. He was accompanied throughout by Rev. Haig Y. Yardumian, Armenian pastor of the Evangelical church in Soongoorlow, Asia Minor. Everywhere the story of Armenia's sorrows touched the heart, much eager attention was evinced, and a fresh interest was created in many minds on behalf of evangelistic work in the Bible lands. Encouraging contributions were given in all places for the support of the Society's operations. Mr. Yardumian continues in Scotland prosecuting his labour in aid of Gospel work amongst the present-day Galatians.

OBITUARY.

MR. WILLIAM HOYLE.

THIS well known temperance leader, the writer and composer of many hymns and songs which have a wide popularity with Bands of Hope, has died at Blackpool, where he latterly resided. Born at Manchester in 1834 of humble parentage he received his first training in the Bennett-street Schools, and it was its Literary and Educational Society which stimulated and developed his poetic and musical talent. He founded the Lancashire and Cheshire Band of Hope Union, the largest local union in the Kingdom.

MR. JOHN MILTON SMITH.

This devoted servant of Christ in connection with the Belle Isle Mission, N., has been called home. As Rev. G. Hay Morgan says: The chief part of our friend's service was performed for and among children. For twenty-three years he had been one of the principal workers at the Belle Isle Mission, and during the last sixteen years had been superintendent of the mission school in Blundell-street, which has some 700 scholars. A large portion of his spare time in the week was spent in visiting the poorer children in his school. In connection with that school he conducted one of the largest Bands of Hope in London. He was a member of the council of the Sunday School Union, and took deep interest in all the institutions for helping children. The little match-box makers at the East End of London had many a happy evening provided for them by his thoughtful care. And every Christmas, for many years past, the waifs and strays of George Holland's Ragged School were entertained by money provided or collected by him[illegible] in the neighbourhood, too, of his own school at [illegible]dell-street, there was no little one in trouble or [illegible]tress to whom [illegible] not hold out a helping hand.

ARCHDEACON CLARKE, LIVERPOOL.

One of the foremost leaders amongst the Evangelicals of Liverpool has been called home after long and faithful service. A Liverpool correspondent announces the death of Archdeacon Clarke on Monday afternoon, at the age of seventy-two. He had been confined to his house during the last few weeks, and his demise was not unexpected. He was a native of Dublin, and was educated at Trinity College, where he obtained the degree of Doctor of Divinity. His life as a minister of the Gospel was spent in Liverpool and Southport, and as vicar of Christ Church in the latter town he distinguished himself by his eloquence and usefulness to such an extent that Christ Church had to be enlarged to accommodate its worshippers. The late Archdeacon was the author of several poems, one being a version of the National Anthem suited to the marriage of the Prince of Wales, for which it was composed. He was also editor of the "Liverpool Diocesan Calendar," and was president for many years of the Southport Evangelical Conference. On Archdeacon Bardsley being consecrated Bishop of Sodor and Man, Archdeacon Clarke was appointed his successor as Archdeacon of Liverpool, a position he held till his death

CIVIL SERVICE SUPPLY ASSOCIATION.

THE annual tea and meeting of the Stores Prayer Union took place at the British Tea Table Company, Old Bailey, on the 12th instant, presided over by Mr. J. E. Bignall, secretary of the Association.

The report of the last year's work read, by Mr. J. W. Edis, of the Bedford-street branch, referred to the steady progress made. During the year the average attendance had grown from seventeen to twenty-one.

During the evening earnest addresses were given by two gentlemen outside the association, Messrs. Thorn and Kydd. Mr. Thorn said that in every large firm there ought to be a society such as theirs, as the spirituality of a church depended in a large measure upon its prayer meetings, and gave an illustration of a young girl who was the means of bringing twenty-five to the Lord. If we cannot all sing or speak, we can all live for Christ.

Mr. Kydd spoke of two young men who went over to the North of Ireland, and were the means of bringing about a great revival. He next referred to the young men of Scripture, David and Jonathan, who loved each other as their own souls.

Solos were sung by Miss Jones, "The Promise of Life" and "The Holy City," also by Miss Bruce, "At the Master's Gates." Mr. J. E. Bignall (the president) expressed thankfulness at the progress of the Union, and called attention to several good points in the report.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

All-night Shelter Rescue Work
(Flower & Dean Street, Spitalfields).

Since this work began, 50,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with the most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual pressure, and from present appearances a very severe season is apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

JAS. ATKINSON, Secretary,

THE CHILDREN'S HOMES

(REV. DR. STEPHENSON'S)

Maintain 930 children, of both sexes, from all parts of the country—belonging to all churches and to no church—of all ages, and on the sole ground of want, exposure, and moral peril. The Dean of Canterbury, Dr. J. H. Rigg, Sir Henry H. Fowler, Dr. Clifford, Mr. J. J. Colman, and many others support its claims. The support depends on voluntary contributions. Additional houses could readily be built if income were forthcoming to maintain them. Applications come in daily for necessitous cases. Contributions will be thankfully received by the Publishers of "THE CHRISTIAN," or by Rev. Dr. STEPHENSON, Bonner-road, London, N.E. Cheques crossed "City Bank."

PREVENTIVE FOR INDIGESTION.

Highest Award at Food and Cookery Exhibition, London, May, 1895

"Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery."

The public are cautioned against accepting from Bakers spurious imitations of "HOVIS," which, having met with such unprecedented success, is being copied in many instances as closely as can be done without risk.

The "British Medical Journal," 11th Jan., 1890:—

"HOVIS FLOUR AND BREAD.—We have examined samples of Hovis Flour and of Hovis Bread and Biscuits. Hovis Flour is the invention of Mr. Richard Smith, who has patented his process of preparation. We have made baking tests with the Hovis Flour, and have obtained very satisfactory results with it. The flour, bread, and biscuits are free from irritating particles and from adulterants; they are of very pleasant flavour and taste, and the bread is of good texture."

If any difficulty be experienced in obtaining "HOVIS," or if what is supplied as "HOVIS" is not satisfactory, please write, sending sample (the cost of which will be defrayed) to

S. FITTON & SON, Millers, MACCLESFIELD.

Bakers recommending another bread in place of "Hovis" do so for their own profit. BEWARE

A NORTH METROPOLITAN UNION, embracing twenty branches of the B.W.T.A. has been formed. At the inaugural meeting on Friday, in Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel, the speakers included Lady Henry Somerset and Mrs. Eva McLaren.

ABERDEEN.—The temperance organisations have united in a manifesto stating that, while the residents declared in favour of a reduction in the number of drinking facilities, the justices had actually increased these temptations to evil, some of them voting for fifteen new licences at one sitting.

THE TRANSVAAL.—To a representative of The Echo, who interviewed him, Rev. D. B. Hooke, of the Colonial Missionary Society, said :—"The great curse of the natives in the Transvaal is drink, and that does more mischief among them than all other things together." Mr. Hooke read a letter just received from a European missionary on the spot, painting in vivid pictures the evil of the liquor traffic among the blacks.

CONSUMPTION.

THE GRAND OLD MEDICINE OF NEARLY 70 YEARS
has maintained its position as the first medicine in all Chest Complaints.

As a preventative of mischief, it should be taken at the first appearance of Cough or Cold. As a safeguard against Influenza, and in subsequent weakness of the lungs, it has been used with wonderful results.

Ministers and Public Speakers have declared it to be invaluable for hoarseness, and "Splendid for the Voice."

So, also, in Asthma, it has been the means of wonderful relief.

But the renown of this celebrated medicine in all these cases has been eclipsed by its success in cases of

PHTHISIS PULMONALIS, or CONSUMPTION, Aptly called the "Scourge of England."

Interviews with patients, new and old, by Mr. Congreve's Commissioner, are published every alternate week in most of the weekly journals.

Mr. Congreve's book on Consumption and Chest Diseases may be had post free for one shilling, from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir may be had of all Medicine Vendors, or direct from the Proprietor (see the book).

NO DECEPTION HERE. 100,000 Testimonials.

Important and Gratifying Testimony just received from Rev. ROBERT WILLIAM DOBBIE, Glasgow, Minister of Blochairn Church, author of the startling book entitled, "The Drink Traffic the curse of our Great Cities," says: "Dear Mr. Campbell,—Your Melodeons have been known to me for many years. In the happy days of boyhood it was our delight at home to possess an instrument from Campbell in Trongate. Even in these our busy restless days, we glory now and again, 'To sing and play the auld Scotch sangs,' in Campbell's Melodeon. I am glad to see, frequently, your Melodeons in the homes of our working men. 'Can the minister play?' is sometimes asked. Those that utter that question soon discover that he has had a Campbell Melodeon under control before now. Men as a rule who love music in the home are sober and industrious. May our working men hate the drink, and love the music of such instruments as yours."

N.B.—Campbell's are the only Genuine Melodeons in the Market. Beware of worthless imitations.

All lovers of music should at once send for our New Illustrated Privilege Price List for Musical Season 1895-6, now ready. 150,000 of these valuable lists sent out yearly. Send penny stamp to CAMPBELL & CO., Musical Instrument Makers, 116, Trongate, Glasgow.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY

(The CHURCH of ENGLAND MISSION to SOUTH AMERICA).

All who desire to see the Gospel preached to the millions of Indians in South America, and are interested in the spiritual well-being of our fellow-countrymen scattered throughout that vast continent, and who also desire to see its Spanish and Portuguese speaking people brought to a knowledge of the truth, are invited to GIVE THEIR SUPPORT TO THIS SOCIETY, which sends out its Bishop and Clergy and Lay Missionaries to effect these blessed and important objects. Its work at the great ports AMONGST THE SAILORS is deeply valued.

THE MISSION BAND TO THE INDIANS OF ARAUCANIA

Now consists of a Clergyman and Three Laymen.

All who desire that this finest of all the Aboriginal races of South America should be brought to a knowledge of the Gospel of Christ, are asked to further the rapid extension of the work by their believing prayers and willing offerings. The door is open. The Leader is a tried Missionary, and the band includes a medically-trained Assistant. Much blessing is anticipated through the power of God the Holy Spirit. There are other open doors the Society is waiting to enter. MEN AND MEANS ARE NEEDED.

Cheques and Money Orders should be crossed "MESSRS. BARCLAY AND CO.," and made payable to Captain E. POULDEN, R.N., Lay Sec., at the Society's Offices, 1, Clifford's Inn, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

☞ WILL those of our readers who receive THE CHRISTIAN direct from ourselves or our Postal Agents by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries?

Through pressure on our space we are obliged to hold over for a week the concluding section of Mr. Pember's paper on "The Parable of the Tares."

As the time draws near for our friends to disburse their Christmas gifts, we would put in a plea for the numerous older societies and mission agencies whose long and faithful service have made possible and easy the foundation of those of later date which are doing excellent work by their side. Workers of the present generation owe much to those who have sown that they may reap; and we trust that in the practical sympathy of our readers "he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together."

This is quite in the worst American style of newspaper :—"The United Kingdom Alliance will be mistaken if it imagines that all Bechuanas are up to sample, and that the nigger on his native dungheap is quite the same as a nigger on a missionary platform." Yet it is not taken from a Charleston paper or a Texas one either, but from a "high-class" London evening. How like a bit of the slave days it sounds, and yet it comes from Pall Mall in the year 1895. We trust that that leader writer will learn to adopt another style in a country where we speak civilly of negroes.

When Khama first came to our country he said, "In our country we have things that trouble us very much, and we do not know whether we shall live nicely in that country, but we look to God, for He knows all the circumstances." He has not looked in vain. Many, even some of his warmest friends, had small hope of his succeeding, but God has wonderfully opened the way of him and his fellow-chiefs. They have enormously aided the Centenary Celebrations of the London Missionary Society throughout the whole of the kingdom, and these celebrations were like so many arrangements made specially for them. The absence of Mr. Chamberlain from the country gave time and opportunity for the tide of popular feeling to rise before they appeared before him to settle their claims. He was wise in observing the signs of the times. And the Queen gave to everything a fitting completeness when she so honoured the chiefs, and so sympathetically listened to their appeals. There are also hidden "providences" in this movement on which some look with reverent wonder. Khama knows the value of prayer, and we trust he may ever lean upon the strong hand which has aided him and his people.

The Queen, moved by her womanly heart, and discarding all considerations of policy, used language to the African chiefs which will never be forgotten. She called strong drink a curse, and expressed her sympathy with them in their desire to keep it from their people. If it is a curse in Africa, it is not a blessing in England. If the Bechuanas will be better without it, Englishmen are not better with it. The grandest and happiest event of Her Majesty's long and memorable reign would be the passing of a measure that should curb the drink traffic and save the people from temptation. Is it to be done? The political party now in power could do it easily; for the party out of power would aid them.

Mr. Chamberlain has not only given great satisfaction by his settlement of the Bechuana question, but also by his determination to avoid a war with Ashanti if possible. We trust that his praiseworthy attempts to avoid bloodshed may be successful. It would almost seem as if we were on the eve of a new and better way of dealing with "native races," as if we were beginning to realise that they are men.

The Queen's astonishing knowledge of human character has always been shown to advantage in her prudent choice and faithful use of permanent Court officials. One of her wisest selections was that of the late Sir Henry Ponsonby, her private secretary, who died last week. He possessed almost to an ideal extent the many delicate and tactful qualities necessary for this post. High-minded courtesy, insight, kindliness, and an unfailing power to smooth over irritations were among his characteristics. He seems to have been a born peacemaker, being always at work skilfully removing difficulties, and never creating any. To have such men near the throne, acting in the name of the Sovereign as an intermediary between her and her frequently-changing Cabinets, is to be in possession of an unique chance for doing good. All of us, in our own spheres, may do good in the same way. Whether in the Court or the cottage it is possible to earn the great commendation, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

So far the reports from Madagascar are of a reassuring character. The French have been humane in the hour of victory, though truly they have been more in need of aid for their thousands of suffering soldiers than the natives. It has been at a great cost of life—3500 men—that they have won the island. They have also promised fidelity to the agreement with this country, that there should be religious liberty, both for the missionaries and for the people. There is talk of many defections from the Protestant to the Roman Catholic Church, but we must wait a good while before we can know what are likely to be the results to religion of the change of government. That there will be failures we may be sure; the chaff will be sifted out from the wheat; but that the truth of the Gospel will lose its hold, we do not believe.

Two things are noticeable about the fall of Madagascar. The reproaches of the newspaper correspondents upon the missionaries for not sending their wives and daughters out of the country have been proved to be causeless. Surely the correspondents, who were obliged to speak so highly of the work done by the missionaries, might have given them credit for knowing what they and their wives were doing. The Press at home and in France has confessed that nothing could have been better up to the present than the absence of alarm or recrimination from the utterances of the London Missionary Society. The Westminster Gazette commends their words to the foreign Press at this juncture as tending to tranquillise feeling—which is as it should be.

From the testimony of Rev. H. Baron, who was an eye-witness of the fall of Antananarivo on September 30, it would appear that the French mean to carry out an impartial policy as regards missionary enterprise in Madagascar. During the bombardment, they did their best to avoid shelling the missionary quarters, though inadvertently they seem to have sent a few missiles near, without, however, doing any bodily harm. The French troops were under the strictest discipline, and behaved well towards the natives after the taking of the capital. As soon as the battle was over, the Malagasy began mixing freely and intimately with the French, selling products of various kinds, and manifesting no anti-foreign feeling towards their invaders.

When on October 5 a deputation of missionaries waited on General Duchesne, he received them very kindly, and assured them they need fear no interference from him or his; and to a deputation of native pastors, he declared that they would all be allowed full liberty of conscience and worship. After the melancholy forebodings that have been lately circulated regarding missionary work in the island, it is very reassuring to hear all this. How far the French will act up to their promises, however, remains to be seen. It is good news to find that they seem actuated by liberal motives, and that their conquest has been unaccompanied by useless slaughter or needless tyranny.

The drift of things in the East seems to be towards dissolution of the Ottoman Empire. The outrages proceed, breaking out in fresh quarters almost every few days, as if the central authority had no hold upon other parts of the kingdom. The Sultan himself is said to be in a pitiable state of alarm and helplessness, moody, despondent, and unequal to the strain of the times. The sins of generations are operating with sure and terrible effect; no outside blow is needed to knock the tottering edifice in pieces; it is going down of itself.

At length, the most needy of our poor children are to have a share of the educational plums, the London School Board having decided to spend as much as £40,000 on the education of deaf mutes. Far better do this and give them a chance of helping themselves, than allow them to remain a misery to themselves in their helplessness, and a burden upon the public. So much can be done for the deaf and dumb that simple humanity calls on us to do it for them. Under able teachers they may even obtain learning enough to graduate in our universities.

It must be strangely interesting to watch the growth of their minds once they have made a beginning in knowledge. One of our ablest teachers was asked by such a pupil how old God was. The pupil was asked to write on a slate what age he thought, when he put down a few thousand in figures. The teacher shook his head, and said, "No; more." Lines of ciphers were added; still the teacher shook his head and said, "No; more." The side of a slate was filled; still the teacher said, "No; more." The slate was filled, and as the same answer was given, it dawned on the pupil that age has no place with God; He is eternal.

"The Christian League" of Philadelphia has set itself the task of proving by "vigorous and persistent efforts that there is no necessity for the slums." It approaches owners, agents, and tenants of disorderly houses, quietly, but firmly, requesting them to keep the law. Its great point is, that it merely insists upon obedience to law. But it neither persecutes nor prosecutes. If its warnings are not heeded, it reports to the Department of Public Safety, and warrants are issued, and offenders made to know that the law is not a dead letter. And a good deal of success has followed. "The old 'coast' in the south-eastern section of Philadelphia, formerly a resort of sailors, but in later years a pitfall for many young men and boys, is completely broken up." It seems an absurd thing to pay for policemen to carry the law out, and then for citizens to have to do the work themselves. But pay never acts so efficiently as principle.

There are hopeful signs of a powerful international women's peace movement being set on foot. An association in Paris, thinking that a union of English and French women was too narrow, has proposed that the women of all Europe, and even of America, should be united. Small centres have been formed in many countries. The approach of French women to German women, and the cordiality with which they have been received, is one of the happiest signs of the times. The French ladies say in their manifesto to the German ones, "Our planet is too small for men to slaughter one another in any corner of it." With the appointment of a new and active Commander-in-chief in our own country, who has always shown himself bent on making England a military country, we may look for a great quickening of the military spirit, and therefore our own countrywomen have additional reason for active peace labours.

A new topic in society is the new man. A readjustment of moral compromises is taking place. The fiction of two standards of purity, and two standards of honesty, is giving way. The new man, a real man, "as fine in his life as he is in his speech," is coming forth. It was said by a member of the Maryland Club, the most fashionable and most popular, that the Congress had cleared the atmosphere of Baltimore. The fact is that towns and even nations are now highly sensitive organisms, which immediately feel through every part, any moral or religious movement at any point.

In Rome the poor priests are popularly known as scagnozzi—quacks or curs. Many of them have no stipends at all, and so they say masses for a franc each. Although they have often appealed to the Pope for relief he has paid no attention to them, but now they have gone to King Humbert with better success. This will not help the Pope or hurt the king. It is also said to be the purpose of Crispi to make all the lower clergy independent of the bishops, thus separating them from the higher clergy, who are always writing against the Government. He also proposes to bring the penal code to bear against those who show themselves to be overt enemies of the State. He may go a step further, and either modify or cancel the Papal guarantees. The meanness of the Pope towards his poorer clergy, his stinginess, or the stinginess of the cardinals, who live in luxury, will pave the way for these reforms.

In seasons of spiritual declension and decadence, the great objects of hope are the Christian youth of the country who combine zeal with mental force and large conceptions of duty. Nothing is more full of happy augury in this connection than the progress of the student volunteer movement for foreign missions. In a little book recently written by Mr. L. D. Wishard, of the American College Y.M.C.A. (Allenson), he sets forth the "New Programme of Missions" that is likely to emerge from the Student movement, and that will materially help forward the evangelisation of the world. Culture and wealth are mighty forces in the making of history; when to these we can add Christian faith and consecration, may we not expect that the coming century will carry the greatest of problems far on to its full solution?

According to a writer in The Calcutta Review, the Brahmo Somaj seems to be on the decline, and among the reasons assigned for this result is the tendency to divisions. Like some other "broad" and inclusive bodies, it has a fine programme and manifesto which is quite repudiated in practice. Any and every body may come into this Catholic Hindo-Christian church, but the smallest difference of opinion will create "war to the knife." There is an old aristocratic section, and a new democratic section, now seventeen years old, which appears to have some signs of prosperity. The writer thinks that there is hope in this younger section. If such a conglomerate of Hinduism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity, holds together, and grows, it will be the first time that the world has ever seen such a phenomenon. Early Gnostic attempts are not reassuring. Jesus alone can be King.

According to Alderman Stephens, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, there are several persons interested in the liquor trade in that city who would be willing to enter into a voluntary agreement to shorten the hours of their trading both on week-days and Sundays, provided clubs were placed under police surveillance. We can believe it. Clubs are offensive to the religious man because they are so demoralising, and to the drink-seller because they unfairly compete with him in his business. Between the two they ought to be checked and regulated.

The determination of the Master Shipbuilders' Association—if determination there be—to "smash" the men's union, will be found to be unwise and useless. If it were accomplished to-morrow, new combinations would come into existence which would be much more difficult to control. Neither men nor masters can be or ought to be supreme. We live by sympathy and co-operation, not by an autocracy or oligarchy. We must repeat with renewed emphasis what we said last week—that the Christian men in both parties should unweariedly strive for peace. Meanwhile the Government might very efficiently intervene.

Dr. D. S. Gregory thinks that there are "a few special principles of direct effectiveness, that may be denominated 'Bible qualities,' that enter more or less into the style of the powerful preachers of all times, but that are peculiarly a necessity for the pulpit of the present time." They are (1) the presentation of the specific truths of God's Word. The Bible is specific in everything. General truths are few: specific truths are infinite in number. In other words, the preacher should give just the meaning of the passage he is expounding. (2) He should present the truth in a concrete form, as Scripture does. The Bible makes its lessons simple and appreciable, by placing them before us in the lives of men; they are incarnated. (3) "The truth must be presented, as is the Bible manner, with apt and ample illustration." At this part it should, however, be remembered, that illustration is for the truth, not the truth for the illustration. Sometimes the adornment hides from sight the very meaning of God.

In the parable of Lazarus and the rich man, the name of the poor man is given, while the rich man is left nameless. On this point Dr. Arnot makes the suggestive remark, that "generally, Christ's kingdom is not of this world, and, in particular, it does not imitate this world's kingdom in throwing the common people into anonymous heaps, and recording the names of only the great." The writers of the sacred story proceed with perfect indifference to anything except their great business of telling how the Kingdom of God came on earth, and by whom it came. Sometimes, indeed, the worker is nameless—he is "a prophet of the Lord" or "a man of God." In other cases we have the name but no account of the life and labours, as with most of the apostles. Who were "the seventy"? All this should teach us a quiet impartiality.

GATHERED GOLD.

REDEEMING THE TIME.

Waste not the precious hours in idle dreams,
Vain disputations, and perplexing themes;
This life's the seed-time of eternity,
And as thy sowing shall thy reaping be.
Be earnest, then, O man, while time is given,
To sow for righteousness, for God, and heaven.

G. Morison.

TO THE PERPLEXED.

Being in straits I cry,
"Lord, make a way!
Open a door for me;
Help me, I pray!
Gold Thou hast endless store;
Strength, all I want and more.
All hearts are in thy hand—
Nothing can Thee withstand;
Lord, look and give command."

Christians and Missions.

By Rev. THOMAS EVANS.

Returning home after an absence in India of twenty-one years, I can see and like to see many changes, for they are improvements. It is evident that Christian England, and "gallant little Wales" as well, are making material progress, but I much fear that this progress is not conducive to spiritual advancement.

All around, men seem to be so ardently intent upon secular affairs that they can have hardly a moment to spare for higher and nobler objects. This is a serious drawback to all the material and scientific progress. No doubt the competition in England is now so keen that little time is left for spiritual thought and meditation. But surely this is a sad mistake and a serious loss. Is it not better to have less material success and more spiritual advancement? Should the followers of the lowly Jesus give the best of their time and attention to the things of this world? "Occupy till I come" includes much more than money-making assiduity and secular success.

There is in a money-making passion much to blunt the keen hunger of the soul after God, and to tie down the heart to the things of this earth. While I would hope that good is being done by all the conferences and conventions of the present day, I much fear that too often talk is more prominent than work. What we want above all is a Christly life. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ" rather than talk so much about the Saviour. Our words touch not the ungodly world, but deeds of self-denial for the good of the poor and suffering will tell.

In all love I ask the question, While money is so sadly wanted to send the Gospel to millions of souls perishing in the dark places of the earth, how is it possible that so many Christian people can keep a conscience void of offence while they squander more money on tobacco and alcohol in a week than they contribute in a year to send the Gospel to the heathen? I boldly maintain that it is the bounden duty of everyone revering the name of Christ for ever to banish all necessary luxuries and injurious habits from their homes and persons. Never will the world be converted to Christ until his own people manifest the self-denying spirit and the self-sacrificing life of the Saviour. To pray the Lord to send forth his truth, and never to know the luxury of a sacrifice on behalf of the truth, is mockery, and an ounce of self-sacrifice for the good of others is worth a ton of such pious hypocrisy.

If our various missionary societies were to receive but one-half of the money spent by so-called Christians on tobacco alone the incomes of the societies would be doubled, if, indeed, not quadrupled, at once. Is not this one fact a burning shame and a humiliating disgrace to this so-called Christian nation?

Money—yes in abundance for self-indulgence—but how little for the Lord who bought us with his own precious blood!

Mr. Giffen, who seems to be an authority, tells us that the wealth of our little island is ten thousand million pounds; that it is going on increasing at the rate of £150,000,000 annually, and that the daily income of Britain is about a million sterling. Yet what do we find? While £140,000,000 are annually squandered for strong drinks not £3,000,000 have been given to all the institutions in the land to send the Word of God and the messengers of peace to the many millions who know not God.

What a dark and dismal picture of Christian Britain, and what a striking contrast in heathen liberality. I know a rich Hindu in India who laid out as much as £100,000 in the erection of a temple to a god who cannot see nor hear, and who contributes £300 monthly to keep up gorgeous sevices of his temple at Bindrabun, near Muttra. God helping me, I hope to show up the absurdity of supposing that we do our duty by contributing the mere crumbs of our tables to the Lord of life which rich heathen give so unstintedly to dumb gods. Wealth and luxury proved the ruin of ancient Rome, and there is reason to fear unless we soon see radical reform that this will be the doom of our highly blessed nation. The Lord graciously open our eyes to see our faults and to mend our ways before it is too late.

WELCOME TO MR. EVANS.

On Friday evening, on the invitation of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, a meeting was held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, to welcome Rev. Thomas Evans on his return to this country after an absence of twenty-one years.

Mr. W. S. Caine, who presided, stated that Mr. Evans, a retired Baptist missionary, had for some years visited and helped the Indian societies attached to the Association, 230 in number, and comprising 150,000 members, had organised many of these societies, and had thrown into the work many natives of India, who were rendering most valuable service. Mr. J. G. Alexander (Anti-Opium Society) moved, and Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., seconded, a resolution welcoming, congratulating, and thanking Mr. Evans. This was cordially passed, after being supported by Mr. J. H. Raper (U.K. Alliance), Mr. B. Broomhall (China Inland Mission), Mr. F. Smith (U.K. Band of Hope Union), Mr. R. T. Rae (National Temperance League), Rev. J. Grant Mills (Native Races and Liquor Traffic Committee), Mrs. Caine (Women's Total Abstinence Union), Mr. J. Hilton (Friends' Temperance Union), and Trimbuklai Desai, Tahl Ram, and H. Haridos (as representing India).

Rev. T. Evans, in response, expressed great pleasure at meeting so many warm friends of temperance. He said that of the missionaries in India 80 per cent. are total abstainers; and expressed warm attachment to temperance work in India, as well as appreciation of Mr. Caine's work. The chief difficulties which confronted temperance work in India were Government revenue necessities due to enormous military establishments, and the example of drinking set by Englishmen which he felt bound, as a European, to try and counteract. Something had been done by the abolition of the outstill system, which, however, was being again introduced for the sake of gain. He hoped to return to India, and to do yet more for the temperance cause there.

A MAMMOTH BIBLE CLASS.

Rev. Levi Palmer's Men's Bible Class at Taunton has opened the winter session with a membership of five hundred. The class was started two years ago, and has grown beyond all expectation. The large attendance is not attracted by anything sensational in the proceedings; Scripture truth is reverently considered, and kindness and goodwill heartily cultivated. The subject for the first Sunday of the present session was "Total Depravity," which was honestly and forcefully expounded by Mr. Palmer, who carefully and frankly answered the questions of members, curious, perplexed, and anxious.

In closing the meeting Mr. Palmer said he felt much encouraged to find that such a large number retained their interest in the class. He had made a visitation of 450 members, all of whom had expressed a wish to remain members, and he had 100 more to visit, amongst whom he felt sure there would be at least fifty who would be desirous of retaining their membership. There is a savings' bank in connection with the class, and thrift and providence is steadily enforced.

Indwelling Sin.

Sir,—May I recommend to all who are seeking after holiness, the work of a great divine of former days, Dr. John Owen, on "The nature, power, deceit, and prevalence of indwelling sin in believers." There is an edition, now out of print, with an introductory essay by the late Dr. Chalmers, the eminent Scotch divine. With your permission I will quote a few sentences from this introductory essay.

"It is a certain indication of spiritual death when there are no strugglings of the renewed heart with sin which reigns in their mortal bodies. A sure symptom that there is no principle of grace in the soul, when they feel not the warring of the Spirit against the flesh, and the flesh against the Spirit. Such a deadly repose of the inner man ought to force across their minds the troubling conviction that they have not passed from death unto life. This is a transition which must be made ere they can see the Kingdom of God. . . .

"It is this state of composition in every one who has been born of the Spirit, between the old man and the new creature, which explains the mystery of a Christian being more humble, just as he becomes more holy of his growing at one and the same time in dissatisfaction with himself, and in those deeds of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ—of his being both more feelingly alive to the corruption that is in him from one part of his nature, and more fruitfully abundant in all those virtues which have their soil and their nutriment from the other part of his nature; so as to hold out the palpable exhibition of one evidently rising in positive excellence, and yet as evidently sinking into a profounder self-abasement than before; as if it required a so much deeper foundation to uphold the ascending superstructure.

"The truth is that wherever there is any real growth of morality, there must be a growth of moral sensibility along with it; and in proportion to this sensibility will there be the annoyance that is felt, and the touching grief and humility wherewith the heart is visited on every fresh evolution of that depraved nature, which is only subordinated, but not yet extinguished and done away."

What some aspirants after holiness seem to me to need is: (1) A more spiritual perception of the holiness of God, and consequently (2) A deeper knowledge of the deceitfulness of their own hearts. The advance which Job made in true holiness was evidenced by these two marks. (1) "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee." Wherefore (2) "I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes."

It was the same with Isaiah when he saw Jehovah of Hosts, and heard the Seraphim, who veiled their faces in his presence, crying "Holy, Holy, Holy is Jehovah of Hosts, the whole earth is full of his glory." "Then said I, woe is me for I am undone; for I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell among a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King Jehovah of Hosts." The live coal from the altar of burnt offering removes the guilt from the conscience; but the grateful sense of forgiveness is ever accompanied with a deeper view of the holiness of God, and a more sensitive consciousness of indwelling sin.

THE CULTURE OF THE DEVOUT LIFE.

A thirty-two page booklet for the New Year has been written by our esteemed contributor, Rev. F. B. Meyer, under the title "Fact, Faith, Feeling."* It is a truly admirable setting forth of God's order as to human experience of his justifying and sanctifying grace. It will be most helpful to any whose minds are perplexed, and who are desiring to know experimentally the happy and overcoming life. We give the closing paragraphs :—

There are Five concluding cautions for the culture of the devout life, our attention to which will generally result in holy joy and peace.

1. We must be still before God. The life around us, in this age, is pre-eminently one of rush and effort. It is the age of the express train and electric telegraph. Years are crowded into months, and weeks into days. This feverish haste threatens the religious life. The stream has already entered our churches, and stirred their quiet pools. Meetings crowd on meetings. The same energetic souls are found at them all, and engaged in many good works beside. But we must beware that we do not substitute the active for the contemplative, the valley for the mountain-top. Neither can with safety be divorced from the other. The sheep must go in and out. The blood must come back to the heart to be re-charged, and fitted to be impelled again to the extremities.

We must make time to be alone with God. The closet and the shut door are indispensable. We must lose the glare of the sunny piazza that we may see the calm angel-figures bending above the altar. We must escape the din of the world, to become accustomed to the accents of the still, small voice. Like David, we must sit before the Lord. Happy are they who have an observatory in their heart-house to which they can often retire beneath the great heart of eternity, turning their telescopes to the mighty constellations that burn beyond life's fever, and reaching regions where the breath of human applause or censure cannot follow.

It is only in such moments that the best spiritual gifts will loom on our vision or we shall have grace to receive them. It is impossible to rush into God's presence, catch up anything we fancy, and run off with it. To attempt this will end in mere delusion and disappointment. Nature will not unveil her rarest beauty to the chance tourist. Pictures which are the result of a life of work do not disclose their secret loveliness to the saunterer down a gallery. No character can be read at a glance. And God's best cannot be ours apart from patient waiting in his Holy Presence. The superficial may be put off with a parable, a pretty story, but it is not given to such to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven.

2. We must be possessed by an eager desire. There is a difference between wishing for a thing and willing it. In a single hour we may wish for a hundred differing objects, and forget them. But how different from this is the fixed determination, the settled purpose of the will! The lad catches sight of some equipment for his sport, the student of a precious book, the lover of a rare and jewelled ornament which he covets for the one he loves—in each case the will is wrought upon till it resolves to acquire at any cost. Then privation and self-sacrifice and delay are cheerfully encountered. Nothing can extinguish or slacken the determination that follows hard after its quest. So with us. We must hunger and thirst; we must be possessed by strong and passionate desire; we must be resolved even to use violence to take the Kingdom of Heaven. The expressions of Scripture are all so intense—the hart pants for the waterbrooks; Jacob will not let the angel go; the widow troubles the unjust judge day and night. We, too, may have this strong desire if we will let the Spirit of God produce it within our hearts. But the merchantman must be bent on seeking and finding the goodly pearl. We must strive to enter the strait gate. We must agonise, to use the Apostle's word, as the athlete for the crown.

3. We must have a promise in our hand. This s the true method of dealing with God. Search the Bible for some holy word which exactly fits your case. It will not be hard to find one, since it abounds with personal incidents culled from every conceivable variety of life. Then, when it has been discovered, and perhaps borne in on you by the Divine Spirit, take it with you into the presence of God, or place your finger upon it as you pass into the presence-chamber with hushed and reverent step. The promises are our inventory of possession, and our need should make us look up for and claim the blessing intended to meet it.

4. Reckon on God. If you desire spiritual gifts, not for your own gratification, but for the glory of Christ; if, so far as you know, your heart is rid of evil, and your life of sinful habit; if you perceive that the promise is for you, because you are not only a son, but an heir of God, and a joint-heir with Christ; if you feel an eager desire that God has instilled to lead you to this very point—then open your mouth wide, and believe that God fills it; unshutter every window, and believe that the light enters; throw wide every aperture, and believe that you have received what you needed and sought. According to your faith, it shall be unto you. You may not have the emotion you expected, or the sense of blessing you looked for, but you will have God, God's gift, God's answer to your faith. And you may go your way and reckon that you have what you sought. Then, in some moment of need, or when you least expect it, or when engaged in wonted trials, some glad consciousness of joy, or peace, or nearness to Christ, or power over others, will be the evidence that you did receive.

5. We must care for others. No life can be blessed which is self-centred, and shut in, as the Dead Sea, by giant walls. The secret of having is giving; of learning is teaching; of climbing to the throne is by stooping to wash the feet of the disciples. Think more of others than yourself, and your own life shall be never so rich and prosperous. "I want—I want—I want Christians to go all over the world, and spread the Gospel." These words, spoken with laboured breath, were almost the last uttered by the beloved Reginald Radcliffe.

AUTUMN.

Grand, noble autumn! Are there those
Who love thee less than spring?
Who glean from thee no deep repose,
No high imagining?

The scorching heat, the piercing wind,
Hopes flighted, anguish rare;
Recount who may, what lies behind,
Rest, calm, and peace, before.

Her store from heaven, the harvest field
On hungry man bestows;
Tree, bush, plant, herb, rich fruit doth yield,
The world with beauty glows.

The woods, of every gorgeous hue,
The splendour of the sky,
The insect bright, the pearly dew,
Enrich the heart and eye.

With patient care the months have toiled;
Their purpose now is won!
Brown leaf, mown field, and bough despoiled,
Hear all: "Ye have well done."

THE POLYTECHNIC LANTERN SERVICES at the Princess's Theatre continue to attract enormous crowds, and last Sunday evening it is estimated at least four or five thousand persons were turned from the doors. Mr. Josiah Nix has received many requests to give a service entitled "The Wages of Sin," and he intends doing so next Sunday evening.

VILLAGE MISSIONS IN INDIA.

The Poona and Indian Village Mission was formed in 1893 by Mr. C. F. Reeve, who had for some time been doing the work of an evangelist and teacher in Australasia. Several workers have joined the Mission; they labour among the civilians of Poona, the British garrison of about 3000 English troops, and among the native population, especially at present in the Bhor State. India is a vast network of villages, and it is probable that those in which the Gospel has never been proclaimed number hundreds of thousands.

A booklet issued by the Mission gives extracts from a diary kept during some months of itineration. We read :—

"In the native State of Bhor there is not a witness for Christ! Although even the smallest of its villages has its two or three temples with numerous idols, a standing witness not only to their degradation, but of their own felt need, and of a seeking after God. Our domicile in Poona is the Evangelistic Hall, where meetings are held during the week; here also we have a Soldiers' Rest, with a supply of Christian literature, where all soldiers are made welcome. A self-supporting coffee-room is also attached, to counteract, in some measure, the evil influence of the many native houses of doubtful repute in the bazaars. Latterly, some Australian Christian friends have formed a council of advice, with Dr. Deck, of Ashfield, Sydney, New South Wales, as honorary secretary. The constitution admits as members Christians from all evangelical denominations, and based upon the principle of trust in God for all supplies."

The journal states that at Sirkoli, the cruel ceremony of the swinging-hook is practised once a year in a modified form. In front of one of the temples is a pole 25 feet high, erected on a stone platform; a cross pole is balanced on the top and from one end of this cross pole the man is suspended, the other end being held down by a rope. At the performance in 1893 the Patel, or head of the village, an old and apparently feeble man was the victim; with some persuasion we got him to show us the healed wounds in his back. His son, now seven, when twelve years old will be fitted to take his father's place, the honour (?) being conserved in the family. The preceding two or three days are kept as a fast, and on the day of the ceremony the victim takes opiates, and his back is rubbed with a mixture of ashes and other material to numb the flesh. In this case the hook was put into the flesh of his back, and with a cloth around him he was suspended and swung round five times, throwing down pieces of coloured dried cocoanut to the assemblage, who attach much virtue to them. When asked why he went through this painful ordeal, his reply was—"Because Shirksaie (the goddess) requires it." At other places visited the same cruel ceremony is practised.

"At Chikli, where a lot of people assembled, curious to know our mission, they too listened for the first time to the Gospel. We prescribed a remedy to one of their number evidently affected with rheumatism, whereupon we were besieged with poor sick ones, women even bringing other women, and as we were leaving the village they sought to press upon us gifts of rice and other grain. Early this morning we were aroused by a child's screams, and looking out saw a little girl of ten or twelve years struggling in the arms of a man bringing her down the hill from the village above, accompanied by a woman. This was a child wife, who had run away from her husband across the valley to her mother's home, being forcibly taken back to him; the poor child pleaded not to be taken back. Shortly afterwards we witnessed a similar scene."
